to appear at said hearing and to be represented by counsel, within such reasonable time as shall be limited by the court, and shall be allowed to submit testimony and to be heard as one of the parties to the inquiry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4840) to carry into effect the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the contractors for building the U. S. battleship Indiana was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. That and the next three bills are adverse reports. I ask that they may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be passed over.

DIVISION OF MARKETS.

The bill (S. 5294) to establish in the Bureau of Statistics, in the Department of Agriculture, a division of markets was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All I desire to do now is to substitute for the text of the bill reported by the committee the exact text that was embodied in the appropriation bill which the Senate approved with one change, and that change increased the salary of the chief of this division to $4,000. I should like to have that amendment adopted to-day, and then let the bill pass over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator the amendment that he proposes to submit?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, sir. I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be considered as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the Senator from Georgia to say it is in the exact language of the provision heretofore adopted, with a possible addition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. With only one change.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator tell us what that change is?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The change is, as I stated, an increase in the salary from $3,000 to $4,000 for the chief of the division. The Secretary of Agriculture stated to the committee that he could not procure a suitable chief of division for less than $4,000, and he objected to the provision as we had it in the agricultural appropriation bill because he could not get the man he wanted for a salary of $3,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator just offers the amendment to perfect the bill, not to have consideration to-day?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is all. After the amendment is adopted I shall ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment to the bill, which will be read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That hereafter there shall be in the Bureau of Statistics, in the Department of Agriculture, a division to be known as the division of markets. The chief of said division shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum, and the assistant chief a salary of $2,500 per annum. There shall also be in said division such special agents, clerks, and other employees as may be necessary to fulfill the duties thereof in or out of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall have power and authority to make, through the division of markets, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, investigation as to the systems of marketing farm products, cooperative and otherwise, in practice in various sections of the United States and in foreign countries, and shall collect data in reference thereto. The information and data thus collected shall be distributed to farmers, farmers' organizations, and societies of consumers throughout the various agricultural sections of the country and made available for the use of any individuals or organization, either by the circulation of printed bulletins and telegrams or by information given personally by special agents of said bureau. It shall also be the duty of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics to make, through the said division of markets, and under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, investigation of demands for farm products in various trade centers and the current movement of such products, giving specific data as to the supply, normal demand, and price thereof, with the view of furnishing information as to the best available markets, which information shall be distributed under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics to collect, through the said division of markets, by any expeditious method, as by telegraph, telephone, mail, or otherwise, compile, and report to farmers, farmers' organizations, and societies of consumers daily bulletins or telegraphic reports of such information and statistics as will enable them to adopt plans of marketing that may facilitate the handling of farm products at a minimum cost: Provided, That when such reports or statistics are requested to be furnished by telegraph or telephone, or methods other than the United States mail, the person or association making such request must advance the fee for the cost of transmission, which shall be deposited to the appropriation for the maintenance of the said division of markets. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to make an annual report to Congress regarding the work of the said division of markets, with any recommendations that may enable Congress to enact any additional necessary legislation.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall make all necessary arrangements for offices and supplies for the use of said division of markets, including office equipment, rent in or out of the District of Columbia, stationery, telegraphing, and all other necessary expenses. The compensation of clerks and employees not otherwise specifically provided for in this act shall be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture subject to the restrictions of existing law.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the expenses of such division, to be available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now I should like to have a reprint of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be reprinted as amended and go over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 5186) to incorporate the Brotherhood of North American Indians was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 461) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Ponca Tribe of Indians against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5917) relating to procedure in United States courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. In the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 118) granting an increase of pension to Harriet Pierson Porter was announced as next is order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 5719) to increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the United States Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the report on that bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The report referred to is as follows:

Mr. POINDEXTER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 5719:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5719) to increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the United States Navy, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Navy Department, as will appear by the following communication:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 23, 1912.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the fact that in time of war or in any of the many emergencies that may occur in time of peace the department is unable to call together a number of surgeons (beyond those now in the service) whose fitness is established and is a matter of record. This deficiency in those necessary medical resources was remedied for the Army by an act approved April 23, 1908 (35 Stat., 68), thus placing the seal of congressional approval and recognition upon the corresponding need of that branch of the military service. The results obtained from the provisions of that act are so satisfactory that this department feels it imperative to request similar legislation for the Navy.

As stated in the report of the Surgeon General of the Navy for 1910, the creation of a medical reserve corps would add enormously to the resources of the Medical Department in the matter of assured efficiency at all times. It would also offer the possibility of affiliating prominent physicians, surgeons, hygienists, and laboratory workers with the Navy and bring the benefit of this advice in medical problems within convenient official reach.

It would also be a means of interesting the medical profession throughout the country in the Navy and thus immeasurably widen the circle from which to recruit the Medical Corps with young men of promising ability. Any one of the larger medical centers of the country could furnish a sufficient number of well-qualified young physicians to fill the existing vacancies in the regular service, but the inducements which the Navy is now able to offer are not sufficient to attract them.

The creation of a reserve corps would rectify this difficulty under which the service is now laboring by making it possible to offer to candidates a position with adequate pay and allowances during the period of about a year before they become eligible for commissions.

The institution of such a corps would mean:

1. That the Medical Department of the Navy will be placed in close contact with eminent members of the profession throughout the country—a fact already accomplished in the Army—enabling it to call them into consultation and to profit by their advice when occasion requires.

2. It would give elasticity to a corps that, while adequate in peace, is of necessity inadequate for war.

3. It would render it possible to educate a large number of the civilian branch of the profession along the special lines required in the service, so that when called upon they would be able to respond and take up their duties without additional instruction.

4. It would make service in the Navy as attractive as that in the Army—the enactment of this legislation making the candidates, if previously found qualified for the reserve corps, available for detail to duty at the Naval Medical School, which would graduate them into the regular service.

5. No increase in expenditure of money would be required, except when the emergencies contemplated, and for which provision would thus be made, do arise, and when the members of the reserve may be temporarily ordered to active duty.

The Surgeon General of the Navy, under date of January 17, 1912, states as follows:

"The necessity for a medical reserve corps for the Navy is urgent. If authorized, it will put the Naval Medical Corps in close touch with the medical profession of the country at large, and in time of peace enable the Navy to always have a large eligible list of candidates for the regular corps. The importance of this will be obvious in view of the fact that, while the authorized strength of the Naval Medical Corps is 345, there are now 47 vacancies, and the crippling effect of this shortage is felt throughout the entire service in time of peace. In war our present personnel would prove totally inadequate, and if we are to avoid a stupendous breakdown in the care of the sick and wounded the legislation herein recommended, which would provide an adequate, trained reserve, and in all probability fill the vacancies in the regular corps, is considered an absolute necessity.

"In conclusion, particular attention is invited to the fact that the great benefits to be secured by this bill are practically without expense to the Government in time of peace. While a great number of the most prominent physicians and surgeons in the country would become commissioned officers in the Naval Medical Reserve Corps, they would draw absolutely no pay from the Government except when actually employed on active duty, and such assignments are not ordinarily contemplated, except in war or when hostilities are imminent."

The department believes that every effort should be made to increase the resources and efficiency of the Medical Department, especially in this legitimate and economical manner.

The matter is recommended to the committee's favorable consideration.

Faithfully, yours,

G. v. L. MEYER.

THE CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

The following is an extract from the report of the Surgeon General of the Navy for 1910 (see p. 655, Rept. Sec. Navy, 1910):

"This subject has been so fully discussed in recent annual reports and the need for a medical reserve corps for the Navy was so ably argued by the department in communications to the last Congress that space need not be taken for reiterating the advantages which should follow the organization of such an auxiliary to the Medical Department. A subsidiary, but for the time being important, result of the establishment of a reserve corps for the Army may be quoted from the annual report of the Surgeon General of the Army for 1909:

"'The distinguished physicians who head the Medical Reserve Corps have been a potent factor in this result (the increase in number of candidates commissioned in the Medical Corps from 10 to 29 in one year), many of them through the interest created by their being members of the Army medical service, interesting themselves in obtaining desirable candidates, principally from the medical schools and hospitals with which they are personally associated. In fact, if no other benefit resulted to the Army from commissioning the leaders of the medical profession of the country in the Medical Reserve Corps, it is safe to say that the desirable candidates obtained by and through them demonstrate the wisdom of such action.'"

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1) to establish a department of health, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5169) authorizing the Ponca Tribe of Indians to intervene in the suit of the Omaha Indians in the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 6497) to protect migratory game and insectivorous birds in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PROCEDURE IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I raised objection to the consideration of the bill (S. 5917) relating to procedure in United States courts. In view of an amendment, which I understand is to be offered to that bill, I withdraw my objection to its consideration.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I think we should go on with the calendar. I object.

Mr. LODGE. It is usual, if objection is withdrawn, to take up a bill which has been passed over.

Mr. BACON. I would inquire, in order that the time of the Senate may not be needlessly consumed, whether the bill has been amended so far as to exclude from it the criminal features?

Mr. ROOT. I propose to offer an amendment which will exclude the criminal features from it.

Mr. BACON. I was going to say that the objection I had to the bill was the incorporation into it of the feature as to decisions in criminal cases. I have no objection to it as to civil cases.

Mr. ROOT. That was also the objection of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], and an amendment to meet that objection will be offered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the Senator from New York, for information, how the bill will operate and what he means by the criminal features having been withdrawn?

Mr. ROOT. This is a bill to establish the rule in civil cases which is applied now by the best judges so far as they have authority to apply it; that is to say, that no case shall be sent back for a new trial upon a technical error not affecting the merits. It is a reform which ought to have been made years ago. It has been made in most of our States, and is working satisfactorily. The want of it is one of the principal causes of complaint about the delays in the administration of justice.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is already the practice in my State, both in civil and criminal cases, and I should be very glad to see the change made.

Mr. BACON. If I remember the bill correctly, it goes a little further than that, and it was for that reason I was not willing to have it applied to criminal cases. It applies also to the admission or the exclusion of evidence which in the opinion of the court would not, if admitted, or if a contrary ruling had been made, have affected the result. While I was willing that it should apply in civil cases, I was not willing that it should apply to criminal cases, because it would be impossible for anyone to tell what would be the effect of the exclusion or admission of evidence upon the jury, which is to be the judge of the effect of such evidence.

Mr. REED. I would not be willing to have a bill of that importance taken up under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3463) to establish a bureau of national parks, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 2371) to amend section 3224 of the United States Compiled Statutes so as to prevent the restraining of the assessment or collection of any tax—State, county, municipal, district, or Federal—was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5455) to establish a system of wireless telegraphy in the Philippine Islands was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 1231) for the relief of the heirs of John W. West, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Has an amendment to the bill striking out interest been reported?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands not.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5955) for the relief of certain retired officers of the Navy and Marine Corps was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

PHARMACISTS IN THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 2795) to promote pharmacists to the grade of chief pharmacists in the Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. The provisions of that bill have been embodied in an appropriation bill, and I ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

The bill (H. R. 1332) regulating Indian allotments disposed of by will was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES. I should like, before the bill goes over, to offer an amendment to it and have it adopted, and then let the bill be passed over, because I do not want to feel obliged to be here when the bill is further considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 10, after the word "allotment," it is proposed to insert "held under trust or other patent containing restrictions on alienation," so as to read:

That section 2 of an act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That any persons of the age of 21 years having any right, title, or interest in any allotment held under trust or other patent containing restrictions on alienation, or individual Indian moneys or other property held in trust by the United States shall have the right prior to the expiration of the trust or restrictive period, and before the issuance of a fee simple patent or the removal of restrictions, to dispose of such property by will, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been objected to, will now go over.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

The bill (S. 5863) for the retirement of employees in the civil service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

BILLS OF LADING.

The bill (S. 957) relating to bills of lading was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that the Senator from Ohio was interested in that bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this bill was originally introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. It was reported out of committee, but I expect to offer a substitute for the bill (S. 6810), which I have not before me, though I would be very glad to have the bill taken up. I understand that a majority of the committee are willing to accept the substitute for the bill originally reported.

Mr. SMOOT. As the bill may lead to debate, I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks that the bill go over.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, so that it may not embarrass the bill if it is reached in my absence, I desire to say that, as chairman of the committee, I am heartily in favor of the substitute being adopted when the bill is reached.

Mr. SMOOT. If the bill is not going to lead to any discussion, I have no objection to its being considered at the present time.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, I can not answer as to whether or not it will lead to discussion.

Mr. OLIVER. I suggest that the substitute bill be offered and adopted, so that we may have it before us when the bill again comes up for consideration.

Mr. POMERENE. I now offer the substitute for the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. POMERENE. The amendment was reprinted under date of July 24, 1912, there having been some modifications made to it as originally offered some time before that, principally affecting the criminal provisions of the statute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to say that the amendment has been reprinted as modified?

Mr. POMERENE. It has been so printed. My substitute bill was reprinted with the amendments which were agreed upon by the friends of the measure. It is that reprint that I have sent to the desk.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am in favor of the substitute rather than of the original bill; but I feel that it is due to an absent Member of the Senate to say that there is one member of the Interstate Commerce Committee who is not in favor of the substitute as against the original bill. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], as it will be remembered, is very anxious to be heard upon the original bill. I hardly know what to say about it, but I submit that fact to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. As I understand the position of the Senator from Arkansas, it is this: The bill introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], which was reported from the committee, seeks to correct the rule of law as contained in the Friedlander case. For the information of Senators, I will say that it will be remembered that the Supreme Court held in that case that the railroad company would not be liable on its bill of lading which was issued by a freight agent without the receipt of the goods by the freight agent. In that respect the substitute bill contains in substance the provisions of the Clapp bill, which was reported by the committee; but, in addition to that, we seek to codify the rules of law relating to the rights and liabilities of the shipper and the common carrier, as well as the indorsees and assignees.

In that respect the bill was originally prepared by the committee on uniform legislation of the American Bar Association, and it has been adopted by 10 of the sovereign States of the Union, they being among the principal commercial States of the Union. As I understand, the objection of the Senator from Arkansas was that he feared that if the larger and more comprehensive bill were introduced and should pass the Senate, it would be less likely to pass through the House than the shorter bill. I do not understand that the Senator from Arkansas has any material objection to the bill itself. If he has, I am not advised of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is evident that this bill will lead to a great deal of debate, and I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before the bill goes over, I desire to say a further word. The substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is a very good bill and ought to become the law; but, as he has stated, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr CLARKE] feared that, if it were substituted, it would not pass the House on account of its length and the number of subjects which it embraces. I think the Senate ought to take up the bill now or fix some time for taking it up for consideration. I do not want to be understood as being in the way of its consideration, but I thought it was only fair to the Senator from Arkansas to state what I have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

Mr. POMERENE. I move that the bill be taken up, notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement that can not be done.

COTTON FUTURES.

The bill (S. 4654) to regulate contracts for the future delivery of cotton was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to make a statement with reference to that bill. A bill of similar nature has passed the House and has come to the Senate, where it has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I am not going to ask that this bill be taken up now, because I would prefer the House bill to be reported by the committee; but I want to make this statement, because I believe the provisions of this bill are of such vast importance to the producers of cotton that unless in the next few days that bill is reported in some form I shall ask for the consideration of the bill now on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 6109) for the protection and increase of State game resources was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, do I understand that House bill 19115 has been objected to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that it was objected to by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I give notice that I shall object to all the claims bills upon the calendar.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, if I may have permission to say a word, I desire to say to the Senator from Mississippi that before adjournment I expect to give notice with reference to calling up that bill. I do not think it will be possible for us to dispose of the bill in the closing days of the session, but I expect to give notice of a motion to consider that bill in the early days of the next session. I hope the Senator will not press his objection to other claims bills on the calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why can not we get unanimous consent now for its consideration on the first day of the next session.

Mr. President, this is the situation: Numberless bills have been sent to the Court of Claims. They are southern war claims of one kind and another, many of them deserving of consideration and many of them absolutely rotten. So far as they are not sound, I do not want any of them granted. I have by heredity and by environment no particular sympathy with a man of the South who was loyal to the Federal Government during the war. I am not prejudiced on that side.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. These claims come here, go to the committee, and the committee, I understand, strikes out half or more of them upon the ground of laches, on the ground that these people did not earlier urge their claims, when in many cases they were unable to do so. The committee does that after the Court of Claims——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A Federal tribunal provided by the Federal Government sits upon the claims and makes favorable findings.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to say a word to save time. We are anxious to dispose of claims that will not provoke discussion, and I want to assure the Senator from Mississippi that there is absolutely no disposition on the part of the chairman of the Committee on Claims to delay the consideration of the omnibus claims bill. I will join with the Senator at any time when it will not obstruct the consideration of cases which will not create discussion in endeavoring to secure an agreement upon some day when that bill shall be called up early in the next session. I do not believe that we ought to go into it now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Can we not agree upon a date right now?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It will take too much time, I fear, but I assure the Senator I will agree to have it called up at the earliest possible moment in the next session.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, then; I believe in the Senator's good faith and will let the bill go over.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I understand the objection of the Senator from Mississippi relates to war claims only. There are some bills——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I have come to this point——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Allow me to say merely a word. There are some bills providing for claims which have no connection whatever with the particular matter which the Senator referred to as the general ground of his objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, for the present I have withdrawn my objection upon the assurance of the Senator from South Dakota, but I give notice that if we can not get a fair consideration of these claims at the next session—let it go over until then—then no claims shall go through by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order has been demanded. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 6744) to provide for the purchase of an extension to the site and the erection of a Federal building in Las Vegas, N. Mex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. CATRON. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4584) to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5069) to promote the efficiency of the enlisted personnel of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 14925) to amend an act to parole United States prisoners, and for other purposes, approved June 25, 1910, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill go over.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will pardon me for asking that that bill may be considered. It seems to me a matter of some urgency at the present time.

Mr. LODGE. That bill will require a good deal of discussion before it becomes a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 93) to establish a botanical laboratory at Denver, Colo., was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4958) to accept the cession by the State of Washington of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Mount Ranier National Park, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. That is quite a lengthy bill, and I will not ask to take the time of the Senate to-day to consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1485) for the relief of William Mullally was announced as next in order.

Mr. POMERENE. I suggest that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

DESTITUTE, INFIRM, AND AGED PARENTS.

The bill (S. 2451) providing against the abandonment of destitute, infirm, or aged parents was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That whoever, being an adult resident of the District of Columbia and possessed of or able to earn means sufficient to provide maintenance, shelter, food, care, and clothing for his or her parent or parents within said District who is or are destitute of means of subsistence and unable, either by reason of old age, infirmity, or illness, or otherwise, to support himself or herself, neglects or refuses to maintain and supply such parent or parents with necessary maintenance, shelter, food, care, and clothing, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or be imprisoned in the workhouse of said District at labor for not less than three months nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and should a fine be imposed, it may be directed by the court to be paid in whole or in part to such parent or parents or to the custodian of such parent or parents: Provided, That before the trial, with the consent of the defendant, or after conviction, instead of imposing the punishment hereinbefore provided, or in addition thereto, the court, in its discretion, having regard to the circumstances and to the financial ability or earning capacity of the defendant, shall have the power to make an order, which shall be subject to change by it from time to time as circumstances may require, directing the defendant to pay a certain sum weekly for the space of one year to the parent or parents, or to the custodian of such parent or parents, or to an organization or individual approved by the court as trustee, and to release the defendant from custody on probation for the space of one year upon his or her entering into a recognizance to the District of Columbia, with or without sureties, in such sum as the court may direct. The condition of the recognizance shall be such that if the defendant shall make his or her personal appearance in court whenever ordered to do so within the year, and shall further comply with the terms of the order and of any subsequent modification thereof, then the recognizance shall be void, otherwise of full force and effect. If the court be satisfied by information and due proof, under oath, that at any time during the year the defendant has violated the terms of such order, it may forthwith proceed with the trial of the defendant under the original charge, or sentence him or her under the original conviction, or enforce the original sentence, as the case may be. In case of forfeiture of a recognizance and enforcement thereof by execution, the sum recovered may, in the discretion of the court, be paid in whole or in part to the parent or parents, or to the custodian of such parent or parents.

SEC. 2. That proof of the circumstances or of neglect to furnish such parent or parents in destitute or necessitous circumstances necessary and proper food, clothing, or shelter shall be regarded as prima facie evidence that such neglect is willful.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the superintendent in charge of the workhouse of the District of Columbia, in which any person is confined on account of a sentence under this law, to certify at the end of each week the number of days' labor performed by said person so confined, and upon said certification the proper authorities of the District of Columbia shall pay over to the parent or parents, or to the custodian of such parent or parents, for the support of such parent or parents, a sum equal to 50 cents for each day's labor performed by said person so confined; and all expenditures under the provision of this act shall be made and accounted for in the same manner as are other expenditures of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That in any case where a parent has been or shall be committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane, and such parent is indigent or is in destitute or necessitous circumstances, the foregoing provisions of this act shall apply: Provided, however, That in such cases the money collected as hereinbefore set forth shall be paid over and disbursed to the proper authorities of the District of Columbia toward the care and maintenance of the said insane person at the Government Hospital for the Insane.

SEC. 5. That the juvenile court of the District of Columbia is hereby given jurisdiction in all cases arising under this act, and shall have the powers necessary to carry this act into effect. Prosecutions under this act shall be had in the name of the District of Columbia upon information by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia or any of his assistants.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4355) to incorporate the National Institute of Arts and Letters was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4356) incorporating the National Academy of Arts and Letters was announced as next in order.

Mr. STONE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2344) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made them by the Senate on February 16, 1903, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2845) to acquire certain land in Washington Heights for a public park, to be known as McClellan Park, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Let that bill go over.

Calendar No. 762, being a motion by Mr. POINDEXTER that the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of S. 3297 to abolish the Commerce Court, etc., and that said bill be placed upon the calendar, under Rule VIII, for consideration by the Senate, was announced as next in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask to have that go over until the next session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have it transferred to Rule IX?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to have it remain on the calendar under Rule VIII until the next session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be passed over.

MEMORIAL TO A. W. BUTT AND F. D. MILLET.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 108) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington of a joint memorial to Maj. Archibald W. Butt and Francis Davis Millet was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STONE. I understand that this monument, or whatever it may be, does not entail any expense on the United States.

Mr. ROOT. On the contrary, it is a simple drinking fountain, which the Government gets for nothing upon merely the condition that a tablet or some similar inscription be put upon it to these two Government officers.

Mr. STONE. I do not like to stand in the way, and I would not, of any memorial of this kind in honor of men who have died in discharge of duties that any gentlemen would have performed, only I wanted to be sure that the expense of it was not imposed upon the Government.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUITS BY ATTORNEY GENERAL.

The bill (S. 5885) supplementing the joint resolution of Congress approved April 30, 1908, entitled "Joint resolution instructing the Attorney General to institute certain suits," etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

SCHOOL LANDS IN WYOMING.

The bill (H. R. 21221) making a grant of lands for school purposes in block 31, town site of Powell, Shoshoni reclamation project, Wyoming, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE P. CHANDLER.

The bill (S. 2953) to grant an honorable discharge to George P. Chandler was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws George P. Chandler, who was a private of Company F, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 27th day of September, 1864: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of George P. Chandler."

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (S. 7160) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. REED. How many names are on the bill, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there are 26 separate names.

Mr. REED. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Senator object to the consideration of the pension bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has objected to the bill, and it goes over under the objection.

JOINT COMMISSION ON PUBLIC HIGHWAYS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 106) creating a Joint Commission on Public Highways, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Inasmuch as the Post Office appropriation bill contains a provision of this kind, I ask that the joint resolution be placed on the calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

DEBORAH B. ROMAN.

The bill (S. 3132) granting a pension to Deborah B. Roman was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, before the words "assistant surgeon," to insert the word "acting," and, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twelve," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Deborah B. Roman, widow of Horace H. Roman, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 7030) to provide for a permanent supply of coal for use of the United States Navy and other governmental purposes to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (H. R. 24016) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was announced as next in order.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to line 20, on page 5.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment of the committee proposing $30, in line 19, page 5, and to make it $36. It is the pension to Richard J. Burges.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why give some $36 and others $30?

Mr. SMOOT. I will give the reasons for so doing.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah will suspend until the bill is read through.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; let it be read through and then we will take up the amendments of the committee.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Before the bill is read any further, let me ask why are we pensioning soldiers now at $30 a month, when we have a general pension law?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair again appeals to Senators to permit the bill to be read through.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the bill until I understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina objects. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 6896) to reopen and extend certain letters patent granted to Richard B. Painton; to insert certain claims in said letters patent dated May 9, 1899, was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 24224) to amend sections 5, 11, and 25 of an act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights," approved March 4, 1909, was announced as next in order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That bill has been read. I hope that we may have unanimous consent to put it on its passage.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

MEMORIAL RED CROSS HEADQUARTERS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 95) providing for a monument to commemorate the services and sacrifices of the women of the country to the cause of the Union during the Civil War, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] if he would not be willing to strike out the word "loyal," and to strike out the provision requiring the commandery of the State of New York to subscribe an additional sum of $300,000?

I will state my reason for putting the question. I think we have about reached the stage in our national history when we might erect a monument to commemorate the services and sacrifices of the women of the United States during the Civil War upon both sides and do it as a Government without requiring any commandery on either side to contribute one-half of the money.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, the joint resolution has been reported in this form both in the Senate and in the House. It was favorably reported by the House committee some time ago. It is based upon an actual offer by the military order of the Loyal Legion of $300,000 which they have provided for this purpose. I should not feel justified in agreeing to a change which might deprive them of the subscription which has already been made. That is the very basis of the measure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, still reserving the right to object, I want to say that it seems to me that the time must come some day when on both sides of Mason and Dixon's line we are willing to forget that we were divided, willing to begin to remember that this is a reunited country, willing to begin to remember that the soldiers who fought under the stars and bars were just as much American soldiers as those who fought on the other side; that during the war there existed two congeries, formerly united, but the time being disunited, States, and afterwards coming together and re-forming the old United States.

I remember in the beginning of this session in mapping out the military park in the State of Mississippi there had been appropriated a half million dollars to commemorate the valor and constancy of the Federal Navy; and when it was suggested that one-half of that amount—mapping out a military park, now, which ought to be a history of actual events—should be appropriated to commemorate the valor and constancy of Confederate sailors, objection was made, and there could not be gotten even a yea-and-nay vote upon the question.

If seems to me, if we are going to talk about a reunited country, it is about time we were becoming a reunited country. During the war there was no United States. There were disunited States. It was a war between the States. Except in Missouri and Kentucky and east Tennessee and north Alabama, it was not even a civil war. A part of the United States were upon one side and a part of the United States were upon the other side, formerly and afterwards constituting the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. When it comes to contributing money out of the Federal Treasury it seems to me that it is about time we were beginning to remember that the bloody chasm about which so much oratory has been spread abroad and about which so many affected tears have been shed has been——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall not object to the consideration of the joint resolution, but I reserved the right to object merely to inject these remarks. I think the joint resolution ought to pass.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution which had been reported from the Committee on the Library with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Library was, on page 1, line 5, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "four," so as to read:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000 as a part contribution to the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a memorial in the District of Columbia to commemorate the services and sacrifices of the loyal women of the United States during the Civil War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 3, line 6, after the words "taken by," to insert "and the building erected thereon shall be the property of the United States"; and in line 11, after the words "United States," to insert "subject to such further direction and control as may be provided by law," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the title to the site procured shall be taken by and the building erected thereon shall be the property of the United States, but the American National Red Cross shall at all times be charged with and be responsible for the care, keeping, and maintenance of the said memorial and grounds without expense to the United States, subject to such further direction and control as may be provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 13, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. That should the commission created in section 4 of this act be unable to acquire a suitable site at a price deemed by the commission to be fair, it is authorized to institute condemnation proceedings, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, providing a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 26, ch. 837).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I simply want to say one word with the permission of the Senate. I think the joint resolution is open to criticism in one feature, and I hope it may be corrected at some time. It is really intended to furnish a home for the Red Cross Society. That is the purpose of it. I do not think anything which has that for the purpose and which will be perpetuated in that shape should have a sectional feature connected with it. I think everybody ought to join in that. If we wish to erect a monument to the loyal women of the United States, I have no objection in the world, and I will vote for it; but I do not think the Red Cross Society, which is intended for something altogether different from the commemoration of anything that occurred in war, which is intended to alleviate the horrors of war, to bind up wounds and to soothe suffering of all kinds, should be chosen as the subject to connect with it something which shall relate to the Civil War. That is my objection to the joint resolution.

I have no objection to a monument being raised to the loyal women of all the United States. I am ready to accord them all honor, all praise, and all homage; but I do think there is a gross inconsistency in this. The Red Cross Society is something which is not only not sectional of the United States but it is world-wide, and I think it is grossly inconsistent to connect the two purposes.

I am not going to object, but I do wish that Senators who are interested in this matter would take that view of it. I am perfectly willing that the two should be separated. I am willing to give $400,000 for one and $400,000 for the other, but they ought not to be connected. They have no legitimate connection, Mr. President. On the contrary, they have a very strong disassociation and incongruity. The Red Cross belongs as much to the South as it belongs to the North. It belongs as much to those who wore the gray as to those who wore the blue, and there is no possible propriety in connecting the two.

I repeat, I am not going to object, but Senators could get the measure through in the other shape just as well, and they could get it through by to-morrow. I wish very much that they would take that suggestion.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY J. MANNING.

The bill (H. R. 7672) for the relief of Mary J. Manning was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Mary J. Manning $334.49, being the amount of money paid by J. H. Mitchell as surety on the bail bond of one Thad Manning, which money was paid under a mistake of fact, the said Thad Manning being dead at the date for which judgment was rendered against his said surety, the said money having been collected by said J. H. Mitchell from said Mary J. Manning, the widow of said Thad Manning, by the sale of certain of her property, which had been conveyed by mortgage for the purpose of indemnifying the surety, J. H. Mitchell.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VOLUNTEER FORCES.

The bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BACON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

ROBERT E. BURKE.

The bill (H. R. 4113) for the relief of Robert E. Burke was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Robert E. Burke, of Brooklyn, N. Y., $4,340.70, as reimbursement for expenses actually incurred by him in connection with his duties as United States customs inspector at the port of New York.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES.

The bill (H. R. 17595) to amend sections 1 and 118 of act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," was announced as next in order and was read.

Mr. REED. Let me ask for information. Is that merely to codify or does it involve changes in the law?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The bill simply gives an additional judge in the northern district of the State of Illinois and deprives the seventh circuit court of a circuit judge. It is a House bill, unanimously reported by the House Judiciary Committee, and passed by the House. The testimony is that they do not any longer need four circuit judges in that circuit, but are very much in need of an additional district judge.

Mr. REED. The title was misleading. In view of the explanation of the Senator, I have no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. If I caught the bill aright, it creates an additional judge in the State of Mississippi, does it not?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; in the State of Illinois.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought an additional judge in Mississippi also.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; the bill in order to create the additional district judge in the State of Illinois rehearsed the entire existing section as it now is in the judicial code, making that one amendment.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in section 2, page 3, line 14, after the word "circuit," to insert:

The circuit judges in each circuit shall be judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit, and it shall be the duty of each circuit judge in each circuit to sit as one of the judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit from time to time according to law: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent any circuit judge holding district court or serving in the Commerce Court, or otherwise, as provided for and authorized in other sections of this act.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That section 118 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," be amended so as to read:

"SEC. 118. There shall be in the second and eighth circuits, respectively, four circuit judges, in the fourth circuit two circuit judges, and in each of the other circuits three circuit judges, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. They shall be entitled to receive a salary at the rate of $7,000 a year each, payable monthly. Each circuit judge shall reside within his circuit. The circuit judges in each circuit shall be judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit, and it shall be the duty of each circuit judge in each circuit to sit as one of the judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit from time to time according to law: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent any circuit judge holding district court or serving in the Commerce Court, or otherwise, as provided for and authorized in other sections of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, in the following words:

SEC. 3. That hereafter, before the President shall appoint any district, circuit, or supreme judge, he shall make public all indorsements made in behalf of any applicant.

Mr. REED. I should like to hear the clause about the Commerce Court again.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will explain to the Senator about that. That is the exact language in the existing law, or the Judicial Code.

Mr. REED. I understand. Now we are trying to abolish the Commerce Court and have passed a bill to that effect. If we reenact this bill after we have acted upon the other bill, this becomes the latest law. I want to know what the language of the bill is in order that I may know whether it would conflict with the action already taken.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This will not in any manner affect that question. If we continue the Commerce Court, of course nothing should be put in motion to prevent a judge from serving on it; if we get rid of the Commerce Court, this will not authorize the judge to sit in a court that does not exist.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator give me the language? That is what I wanted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The language is:

That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent any circuit judge holding district court,

And so on.

Mr. REED. That is satisfactory.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is existing law.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon, but I do not understand the proposition, and I should like to have some Senator explain it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will explain, then, as briefly as I may, Mr. President. In amending this section of the law I think the House inadvertently did not amend the section as amended. There had been an amendment as to this section approved January 13, 1912, this year; the House bill was passed a few days after that, and the Senate amendment simply adds what the House had omitted, namely, the amendment to the law.

Mr. BACON. Does it relate especially to the Commerce Court?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No. The proviso in the existing law, which was the amendment approved January 13, 1912, is as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent any circuit judge holding district court or serving in the Commerce Court, or otherwise, as provided for and authorized in other sections of this act.

If we repeal the Commerce Court act, there will be no Commerce Court for a district judge to sit in; and if, after that, it is desired to amend this to meet that situation, of course it can then be done; but the object of this bill is, without changing a single word of the existing law, simply to amend those sections of the existing statute so as to make one more district judge for the northern district of Illinois and to cut down the number of circuit judges from four to three. That is the sole operation of the bill. I have been through it very carefully and compared it, word for word, with the existing statute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to amend sections 1 and 118 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' as amended January 13, 1912."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate numbered 2, providing for the printing of 3,500 copies of Bulletin No. 30, in two parts, of the Bureau of American Ethnology, entitled "Handbook of the American Indian," with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate numbered 5, authorizing the printing of 500 copies of the reports of the Immigration Commission, etc., with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 67. An act for the relief of Capt. Joseph Herring, United States Army, retired;

S. 183. An act for the relief of G. A. Embry;

H. R. 18017. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States"; and

S. J. Res. 126. Joint resolution authorizing Federal bureaus doing hygienic and demographic work to participate in the exhibition to be held in connection with the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography.

PRESERVATION OF FORT M'HENRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6354) to perpetuate and preserve Fort McHenry and the grounds connected therewith as a Government reservation under the control of the Secretary of War, and to authorize its partial use as a museum of historic relics, which were: On page 1, line 6, after the word "Department," to strike out all down to and including the word "prescribe" on page 2, line 2, and insert: Provided, That nothing in this act shall interfere with the present use of the piers now erected upon said fort grounds nor the erection by the Government of another pier thereupon for Government purposes with necessary ingress and egress thereto," and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to perpetuate and preserve Fort McHenry and the grounds connected therewith as a Government reservation under the control of the Secretary of War."

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HANDBOOK OF THE AMERICAN INDIAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 2) providing for the printing of 3,500 copies of Bulletin No. 30, in two parts, of the Bureau of American Ethnology entitled "Handbook of the American Indian," which were, in line 2, to strike out "three" and insert "six"; in line 5, to strike out "one" and insert "two"; and in line 5 to strike out "two" and insert "four."

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF IMMIGRATION COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5) authorizing the printing of 500 copies of the reports of the Immigration Commission, which were, in line 3, to strike out "five" and insert "twenty-one"; in lines 4, 5, and 6, to strike out "250 for the use of the Senate Committee on Immigration and 250 for the use of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization" and insert "500 for the use of the Senate and 1,600 for the use of the House of Representatives"; in line 8, after "commission," to strike out the remainder of line 8 and all of lines 9, 10, 11, and 12 and insert "5,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,500 for the use of the Senate, 200 for the use of the Committee on Immigration of the House of Representatives, and 200 for the use of the Committee on Immigration of the Senate, and that four sets be supplied to all members of the Immigration Commission who are not now Members of Congress."

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

FUTURE CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to ask that when we resume the consideration of the calendar we resume it at the point at which we now leave off.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that probably an agreement to that effect would be necessary.

Mr. LODGE. In that case an agreement to that effect will be necessary to govern our action when we take up the calendar again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa ask unanimous consent to that effect?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that when the calendar is again under consideration——

Mr. LODGE. For unobjected bills——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For unobjected bills, that the bill next after the one just acted upon shall be considered first, and that the calendar shall be considered from there on to the end.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What bill is that?

Mr. OVERMAN and Mr. LODGE. It is Calendar No. 816.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

DISTRICT COURT IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. SANDERS. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withhold his motion for a minute in order that I may ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 7252. It simply provides for changing the time of holding court for the eastern district of Tennessee, beginning with September. The bill should be acted upon at once, and I feel confident it will only take a minute to pass it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall make no objection to the consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Tennessee, but I shall object to others. It is very late. I think we ought to have an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 7252) to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that I have any objection to the consideration of this bill, but I do have an objection to stopping the consideration of the calendar and then taking up some one bill out of its order. I shall therefore object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, August 13, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate August 12, 1912.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

James M. Morton, jr., to be United States district judge, district of Massachusetts.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Cyrus G. Engle to be collector of customs for the district of Natchez, in the State of Mississippi.

Ensign Hugh C. Frazer to be an ensign.

Midshipman Ernest W. Broadbent to be an ensign.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Joe Ray McCleskey, Boaz.

MISSOURI.

C. A. Cox, Chaffee.

OKLAHOMA.

W. H. Staggers, Wakita.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Chesley S. Harper, Webster Springs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 12, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven be merciful unto us, bear with our infirmities, forsake us not, but punish us when we do wrong and make our hearts rejoice with gladness when we do right, that the trend of our life may be ever upward and onward toward the goal of the perfected manhood, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, August 10, 1912, was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BURNETT was granted leave of absence for the day on account of sickness.

HANDBOOK OF AMERICAN INDIANS.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote whereby Senate concurrent resolution No. 2 was passed. There is an error in the amendment, which I wish to correct.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to reconsider the vote whereby Senate resolution No. 2 was passed.

Mr. MANN. Without having the title of the resolution reported, to what does it relate?

Mr. FINLEY. It relates to the handbook of American Indians.

The question was taken, and the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, on line 2 of the printed resolution I move to strike out the word "three" and insert the word "six," so it will read "6,500 copies." That is necessary in order to make the number of copies authorized printed correspond with the number of copies authorized to be distributed.

Mr. MANN. It is to make the total correspond with the amendment for printing for the House on Saturday.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 2 of the resolution, by striking out the word "three" and inserting the word "six," so it will read "six thousand five hundred."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

IMMIGRATION COMMISSION.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote whereby Senate concurrent resolution No. 5 was agreed to on Saturday for the same reason.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to reconsider the vote whereby Senate resolution No. 5 was agreed to.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, in line 3, after the word "illustrations," I move to strike out the word "five" where it reads "five hundred" and insert the words two thousand one," so it will read "two thousand one hundred." That is necessary in order to conform with the amendments adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 3, the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two thousand one."

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

"THE ROAD HORSE."

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

House resolution 682 (H. Rept. 1179).

Resolved, That there be printed as a House document 93,000 copies of a pamphlet entitled "The Road Horse," as edited and prepared by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, with special application to the selection and management of the road horse used in the Rural Delivery Service, of which 50,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 43,000 copies for the use of the House document room.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report to accompany House resolution 682.

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the House resolution (H. Res. 682) providing for the printing of 93,000 copies of the special report on "The Road Horse," as used in the Rural Delivery Service, reports the same back to the House with the recommendation that the resolution be agreed to.

The estimated cost will be $500.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if this provides for a distribution through the folding room or through the document room?

Mr. FINLEY. It provides both; 50,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 43,000 copies shall be for the use of the House document room.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest to the gentleman, does not the gentleman think these ought to be distributed through the folding room? This is a matter, I take it, of considerable importance, and we will have possibly a great many calls for a document of this kind.

Mr. FINLEY. I will answer the gentleman. I think if he will think for a moment he will conclude that it is not necessary to place them all in the folding room. The city Members have no use for them.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman is probably mistaken. I think Members are interested in the horse, probably not to as great an extent as people in the country, but still——

Mr. FINLEY. Well, they are more interested in automobiles.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. A similar resolution on Saturday, if I remember correctly, provided for a certain number for the House and a certain number for the Post Office Department.

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, is it the intention in this case that these 43,000 printed for the House document room shall include part of them to be used by the Post Office Department?

Mr. FINLEY. Well, I can not answer that question definitely.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FINLEY. Well, substantially I imagine that will be done.

Mr. MANN. And the 50,000 will go to the folding room to be distributed among the Members.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say this: Every rural carrier in my district will want to get one of them, and——

Mr. FOSTER. Would not the gentleman be willing to make it 75,000 to go into the folding room?

Mr. FINLEY. There are 42,000 rural carriers, and I think if the gentleman——

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that; but I think the Members will be called on for this document.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman that that matter has been carefully gone over by people who are interested in it. In fact I was requested earnestly by Government officials to secure this publication. The gentleman will be able to secure all the copies he wishes.

Mr. MANN. You can not increase the number of copies. They have reached the limit.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me we ought to have more of these through the folding room than the number that are going to the document room. There are pretty nearly as many going to the document room as will go to the folding room to the credit of Members. I know, so far as I am concerned, that I could use a good many more copies than my quota would be of this fifty thousand.

Mr. MANN. I will give the gentleman a portion of mine.

Mr. FOSTER. I thank the gentleman; that satisfies me.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the House resolution.

The question was taken, and the House resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 21969) to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. BRISTOW, and Mr. SIMMONS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 6412. An act to regulate radio communication;

S. 67. An act for the relief of Capt. Joseph Herring, United States Army, retired; and

S. 998. An act for the relief of Henry C. Roetzel and Paul Chipman.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 18017. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States."

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 6412. An act to regulate radio communication;

S. 4189. An act for the relief of the estate of Johanna S. Stoeckle;

S. 998. An act for the relief of Henry C. Roetzel and Paul Chipman;

S. 67. An act for the relief of Capt. Joseph Herring, United States Army, retired;

S. 6926. An act to convey to the Big Rock Stone & Construction Co. a portion of the military reservation of Fort Logan H. Roots, in the State of Arkansas;

S. 4568. An act granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley;

S. 4520. An act for the relief of Catherine Grimm;

S. 4007. An act for the relief of the J. Kennard & Sons Carpet Co.;

S. 1508. An act for the relief of the estate of Eliza B. Hause;

S. 4050. An act for the relief of Catherine Ratchford;

S. 4032. An act for the relief of C. Person's Sons;

S. 183. An act for the relief of G. A. Embry; and

S. J. Res. 126. Joint resolution authorizing Federal bureaus doing hygienic and demographic work to participate in the exhibition to be held in connection with the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 25073. An act to authorize the Moline-Bettendorf Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between Moline, Ill., and Bettendorf, Iowa; and

H. R. 18017. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States."

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—GILL AGAINST CATLIN.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Elections No. 2, and send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] calls up a privileged resolution from the Committee on Elections No. 2, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 666.

Resolved, That Theron E. Catlin was not elected a Representative from the eleventh district of Missouri in the Sixty-second Congress.

Resolved, That Patrick F. Gill was duly elected a Representative from the eleventh district of Missouri to the Sixty-second Congress, and is entitled to the seat therein.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] raises a question of consideration. Those in favor of considering this resolution will say "aye"; those opposed, "no."

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-two gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. MANN. That is not necessary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. It is an automatic call. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. When the roll is called those in favor of considering this resolution at this time will answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay." It is the case of Gill against Catlin.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 42, answered "present" 23, not voting 188, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he voted "aye."

So the House determined to consider the case.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. STEVENS, voted?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. ADAMSON. As I am paired with that gentleman, and as he was inadvertently, urgently, and unexpectedly called out of the House, I withdraw my affirmative vote and answer "present."

Mr. McCALL. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. PETERS, and I vote "present."

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 137, the nays 42, and 23 have answered "present," which makes a quorum. The Chair orders the Clerk to enroll the names of Messrs. CATLIN, CAMPBELL, ANTHONY, and LAFFERTY, who were in the Hall and did not vote, which makes a total of 202 Members present. The motion to consider this case is carried.

Mr. MANN. With reference to noting the presence of the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CATLIN, I suggested to him that he should not vote, not even "present," as it was a matter involving himself personally, and I doubt whether a quorum which would require his presence to make it would be sufficient.

The SPEAKER. The Chair orders the Clerk to strike off the name of Mr. CATLIN, because he being the contestee, of course it puts him in a very awkward predicament, and the Chair does not wish to do him an injustice. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. Further proceedings under the call are dispensed with.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For the session:

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. TILSON.
Mr. FOSTER with Mr. KOPP.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. BROWNING.
Mr. GUDGER with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia.
Mr. PUJO with Mr. MCMORRAN.

For this day:

Mr. BURNETT with Mr. DRAPER.

On this vote:

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi with Mr. LAWRENCE.

Until August 28:

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. MADDEN.

From August 10 until August 13 noon:

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey.

From August 9 until August 13 noon:

Mr. GOLDFOGLE with Mr. CALDER.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] is recognized.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I want to know if I can secure an agreement with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] about the time to be consumed in this discussion?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. How much time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. HAMILL. How much time does the gentleman on the other side suggest?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I think we shall need at least four hours on this side.

Mr. HAMILL. That, of course, is absolutely unreasonable. The whole case could be very well discussed in three hours, giving an hour and a half on each side. However, we do not want to be rigorous in our insistence, and we are perfectly willing to allow more time than that if the gentlemen want it.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I suggest that this is an important matter, not only from the viewpoint of those who are particularly interested, but from the viewpoint of the country, and I do not think debate ought to be cut off, particularly in view of the fact that the majority report contains absolutely nothing with reference to the facts in the case.

Mr. HAMILL. Of course the gentleman will bear in mind that it might reasonably be taken as a reflection on the desire of gentlemen on the other side to prolong this case, because they were instrumental or seemed to be instrumental in breaking a quorum, and thus consuming about an hour's time that could well have been given to discussion.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's party has sixty-odd majority in the House, and it is up to his side to have a quorum.

Mr. HAMILL. That is all very well; but if gentlemen take the high and patriotic stand that the gentleman has suggested, of service and importance to the country, I think the gentlemen on that side ought to vindicate their assertions.

Mr. MANN. We think we are serving the country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that we wish to vote to-day, and if we can agree on five hours of general debate, three hours on that side and two on this, I think that would be a reasonable time.

Mr. MANN. I think that the gentleman from Minnesota had better agree to that proposition—three hours on this side and two hours on the other side.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I shall not object to that.

Mr. HAMILL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate shall continue for five hours, three hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] and two hours by myself; that at the expiration of that time all discussion shall cease, the previous question shall be considered as ordered, and the vote taken on the resolution.

Mr. MANN. We may want to offer a substitute.

Mr. HAMILL. And we will agree to that.

Mr. MANN. With the understanding that the minority has the right to offer a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that debate on this resolution shall close at the end of five hours, three hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] and two hours by himself, at the end of which time the minority shall have the right to offer a substitute, and that the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution and substitute, and the vote immediately taken.

Mr. MANN. As I understand the request, Mr. Speaker, it is that there shall be three hours of debate on this side, controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota, and two hours on that side, so that interruptions will not come out of the time.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from New Jersey whether or not the two resolutions are not to be voted on separately. In other words, the resolution declaring the election of Mr. Catlin illegal, and the one declaring that Mr. Gill was legally elected?

Mr. MANN. There will be a separate vote demanded.

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House is that where there are two substantive propositions and they can be separated without the mutilation of one, a separate vote will be granted. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution refers to the contested-election case now pending of Patrick F. Gill against Theron E. Catlin. The resolution embodies two distinct propositions. The first is that Mr. Catlin, the contestee, be declared not entitled to a seat in the Sixty-second Congress as a Member from the eleventh congressional district of Missouri. The second proposition is that Mr. Gill, the contestant, be declared entitled to a seat in this Congress from the district I have mentioned for the reason of his having been legally elected thereto. In presenting this case to the attention of the House the committee need hardly mention the fact that they are not actuated by reasons which are in any way personal. It is not of the slightest interest to the committee, as such, whether Theron E. Catlin or Patrick F. Gill shall occupy the seat in this Congress from the eleventh congressional district of Missouri. Moreover, the members of the committee feel that the House will readily appreciate the highly disagreeable duty the making of this report has imposed upon them.

But the character of this House must be kept free from corruption and Members must come here as the honest choice of their constituencies rather than as the beneficiaries of crooked election methods if this, the popular branch of Congress, is to retain the confidence of the people and preserve its usefulness to the country. In the opinion of the committee the present case reveals a situation where evident justice demands the adoption of the resolution offered. We propose to-day to lay before you the facts on which our opinion is based, and having thus discharged our duty in the premises submit the entire matter to the judgment of this House.

Mr. Speaker, on the 8th day of November, 1910, an election was held in the city of St. Louis, at which, among other officers, were elected Members of the House of Representatives. The eleventh congressional district comprises a part of the city of St. Louis, and in this district Mr. Catlin was the Republican nominee for Member of Congress, for which office he was opposed on the Democratic ticket by Mr. Gill. On the face of the returns Mr. Catlin appeared to be elected by a total vote of 20,089. This result was subsequently corrected by a recount, making his total vote 19,937. The total vote returned for Gill was 18,612, thus giving Catlin an ostensible majority of 1,325.

Now, the action of the committee in reporting to the House that contestee should be deprived of his seat is based upon two main grounds. The first ground is that the contestee Catlin expended more money than is allowed by the statutes of Missouri; in other words, that he violated the corrupt-practices act of the State of Missouri. He did this not personally, but through the agency of another, for whose acts he is responsible, because the agent acted with the knowledge and with the connivance and by the direction of the contestee.

The second ground is that, admitting for the sake of argument what we do not consider to be true—that there was no connivance on the part of Catlin in the violation of the corrupt-practices act—nevertheless a proper recount of the ballots cast in the eleventh congressional district of Missouri, eliminating in accordance with a precedent laid down in this House those parts of the territory comprised within the eleventh district, where the vote was so permeated with fraud as to make it impossible to say for which candidate the ballots had been cast—I say, eliminating those parts of the district affected in the manner I have mentioned under the authority of the precedent referred to which was laid down by the party of which the contestee is a member, the committee find a clear majority in favor of the contestant. So that, therefore, on the second ground the contestant is entitled to his seat and the contestee loses his seat, simply because the contestant received the majority of votes; that is to say, the contestant receives the majority of votes legally cast and properly counted.

We propose to consider these two grounds for action in the order in which I have stated them.

In the first place, let us consider the violation of the corrupt-practices act of Missouri, to which violation the committee has determined the contestee was a party, and for the consequences of which he should be held responsible.

Section 6046 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri, 1909, contains the following:

> No candidate for Congress or for any public office in this State, or in any county, district, or municipality thereof, which office is to be filled by proper election, shall, by himself or by or through any agent or agents, committee, or organization, or any person or persons whatsoever, in the aggregate pay out or expend, or promise or agree or offer to pay, contribute, or expend, any money or other valuable thing in order to secure or aid in securing his nomination or election or the nomination or election of any other person or persons, or both such nomination and election, to any office to be voted for at the same election, or in aid of any party or measure, in excess of a sum to be determined upon the following basis, namely: For 5,000 voters or less, $100; for each 100 voters over 5,000 and under 25,000, $2; for each 100 voters over 25,000 and under 50,000, $1; and for each 100 voters over 50,000, 50 cents, the number of voters to be ascertained by the total number of votes cast for all the candidates for such office at the last preceding regular election held to fill the same; and any payment, contribution, or expenditure, or promise or agreement or offer to pay, contribute, or expend any money or valuable thing in excess of said sum, for such objects or purposes, is hereby declared unlawful.

The amount which a candidate can expend in Missouri in a contest for Congress is proportioned upon the number of votes cast at the preceding general election for the same office, and in this case it is practically agreed upon by both sides that the amount which legally could be expended by the contestant or the contestee, respectively, was $662. There is a further section of the statute of Missouri which provides that whenever the party who runs second in the contest considers he was unjustly deprived of the office for which he contended he may apply to the attorney general, and on his relation the attorney general begins a proceeding to oust the person who obtains the seat—that is to say, the person to whom the certificate of election has been issued upon the face of the returns. After that is done another section declares that the seat which is thus vacated goes to the candidate having the second highest number of votes, provided no charge is made against him that he has been guilty of an infringement of any statutes which would make him ineligible to take the office. In other words, if the person holding the seat has been elected unfairly and the next highest person has been without question fair in the conduct of his election, then that person receiving the next highest number of votes is given the seat by virtue of the proper proceeding. Those are the statutes of the State of Missouri governing the situation.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to yield to the gentleman, but I would like to say that at this time my purpose is to make a very full opening of the case to the House. However, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman contend the statutes of Missouri automatically give the seat to the contestant?

Mr. HAMILL. I say that under the statutes of Missouri he is entitled to the seat in the circumstances I relate by means of a legal proceeding.

Mr. SWITZER. Is not the gentleman aware that that part of the statute has been held to be unconstitutional by the highest court of Missouri?

Mr. HAMILL. If it were declared to be unconstitutional that fact need not necessarily have any bearing upon the right of this House to follow it in the seating of a Member. The principle involved is that the statute marked out a way which was acceptable to the people of Missouri; that the contestant accepted the provisions and the obligations of the statute, whereas the contestee violated them, and that we, in justice, ought to follow the principle laid down in the statutes. Besides, I wish to say that except in the case of appointments by the governor I am not aware that this statute has been declared to be unconstitutional.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman to call attention to the decision of the supreme court? The language of the court is:

> The provision for awarding office to unsuccessful candidates is unconstitutional as to offices in which the governor alone has power to fill vacancies.

That is the reason, because it takes away from the governor the right to fill the vacancy; but that would not apply to a Congressman, where the governor can not fill the vacancy.

Mr. HAMILL. I am familiar with the case which the gentleman cites, and if it is to that case the gentleman from Ohio refers, which applies only where the governor is deprived of his right under the Constitution, then I deny his statements that the Supreme Court of Missouri has declared this section to be unconstitutional.

These sections of the Missouri statutes form, as I have said, the first basis on which the committee believes the House should declare vacant the seat of the contestee. We do not say that the contestee openly violated the provisions of the corrupt-practices act. In the statement which he filed showing his expenses in the election he keeps within the $662 limit; but the money was expended by another, for whose conduct the contestee is responsible, of whose acts the contestee had undeniable knowledge, and of which he was fully cognizant. Daniel Kirby is a lawyer of high repute for ability in the city of St. Louis. He is, so I understand, the friend of the father of Theron Catlin. This Daniel Kirby received from the father and the brother of contestee a sum in excess of $10,000, amounting to about $10,200, all of which came from the father and the brother of the contestee, with the exception of $250 contributed by one Chester Kern, who is described as a friend of Theron Catlin. Now, if Daniel Kirby and the elder Catlin, together with the brother of the contestee, Daniel K. Catlin, with or without this man Kern, had formed themselves into a committee under the laws of the State of Missouri and expended this money openly, and if after doing so they had filed a statement showing exactly what they had done with the money, we do not concede that there would be any right for the contestant to attack the seat of the contestee merely upon the ground of the violation of the corrupt-practices act. But the evidence shows to us that they did not expend it openly; they did not make reports as required by the statutes of Missouri.

They refused to do so because they wanted to expend this money for purposes such as would not bear the light of day, to put it into channels the decency and the legality of which they could not acknowledge. They knew that if the contestee had knowledge of what they were doing he then would be responsible for the violation of the corrupt-practice act, and so they devised a most ingenious scheme. They expended this money, and then when brought to book for the violation of the statute came in brazen-facedly and said they, indeed, had expended it, but that the contestee had not the slightest notice, had not the scintilla of knowledge that they were expending any money in his behalf; and besides that, Mr. Kirby did not believe this act applied to congressional candidates. Gentlemen of the House, remember that in running through this record we have taken our conclusions from the circumstances as proved. I do not want you to believe for a moment that either Daniel Kirby, astute counselor at law, adept in finding ways and means to violate the statute that preserves the purity of elections in Missouri; I do not want you to believe that the contestee, Theron Catlin, Harvard graduate, attorney at law, experienced in politics by reason of service on political committees and membership in the State legislature—that either of these men openly admit the contestee had knowledge of the vast expenditures that were being made. Oh, no; but crime will out. It will inevitably reveal itself, and the very shifts and devices to which the contestee and his agents resorted to raise the appearance of innocence on his part merely entrap him and show more clearly that he was undoubtedly cognizant of what was going on.

Theron Catlin, they tell us, was in complete ignorance of these expenditures. And this claim is adhered to in spite of the fact that there was common gossip around St. Louis that Catlin money was being expended; that Catlin money was easy, and that it could be procured by anyone who would represent himself as being able to do anything in the interest of the candidate. The candidate's father knew it, his brother knew it, his sister knew it, and everybody in St. Louis knew it—everybody knew of it except this piece of angelic mold, this helpless innocent, who could not perceive the obvious, and who was unable to see the money expended when it was being poured out lavishly before his open eyes.

Now, do not let me be understood as reflecting upon the mental caliber of the gentleman from Missouri whose seat it is my painful duty to appeal to the House to vacate. I am not making these charges of my own accord. I am merely endeavoring to show to this House the attitude in which his friends try to place him to enable him to evade this statute. Instead of placing him on the plane upon which I believe he belongs, that of an intelligent, capable, discerning man, they, in vainly attempting to show his innocence, reduce him to the level of a sickening simpleton who could not understand what was plainly apparent to anybody of ordinary perception and observation. It is because I do not believe he possesses the kind of mentality his friends ascribe to him, or that he is such a man, that I am convinced he did know that these funds were being expended in his behalf. Now, let us, in the first place, raise a very natural query regarding this matter of the expenditure of the money. Gentlemen, what honest reason could the father and the brother of Theron Catlin and this man Kirby have for concealing from the candidate the fact that they were going to expend $10,000 in his behalf? If they had formed themselves into a political committee, they could have done it openly and above board. They could have expended the money, filed their statement, and no man could take issue with them for doing so. No man, in fact, could inquire why they valued a congressional seat so highly that they were willing to expend so great an amount of money in order to capture it. But it is because they wanted to make a secret fund, that could be spent in ways that would not bear the light, that they refused to associate themselves into a committee, and it was because they knew what the consequences would be of knowledge and connivance on the part of the contestee that they pretended the contestee was ignorant of the whole proceeding. Their plea practically is: "Well, we admit we may have done wrong and may have violated the statute, but as to this candidate, do not touch him, because he knew nothing about our actions in violating the corrupt-practices act of the State of Missouri." Now, gentlemen, that plea on their part will not hold water, as the facts of the record will show plainly and convincingly.

Consider some facts in this case. Around the headquarters of the candidate in St. Louis there was maintained, at great expense, an electrically illuminated sign, bearing a portrait of the candidate, surrounded by incandescent lights, and kept up during the whole time of the campaign. It must have occurred to the contestee to ask where the money came from that paid for it. Then the contestee went carefully through the different wards of the city. He visited saloons and places where refreshments are sold—among other resorts places called "lid clubs," and other places of entertainment. He invited those present to partake of refreshments, and introduced himself to them and looked for their support as a candidate for Congress. In the first place, he went to these resorts with men whose known means were small and who were well recognized as men who could not bear the expense of treating; in fact——

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. HAMILL. I will not yield at this point. Then significantly enough whenever a time came to pay for the drinks or refreshments suddenly the contestee vanished and got out into the automobile and there waited until his guardian and guide came out afterwards, took his place beside him, when they whirled away to another place to go through the same performance. At another time the contestee was present when the very judges and clerks of election of the third ward of St. Louis were bribed. I say bribed in this case, and in my judgment it does amount to bribery. A man by the name of Reichman, the treasurer of the contestee's election committee, in the presence of the contestee offered prizes——

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Did the gentleman read the evidence on that?

Mr. HAMILL. I have read the evidence as the gentleman will find if he consults the RECORD. As I was saying, offered prizes of $15, of $10, and of $5, first, second, and third prizes, respectively, for the judges and clerks who would return the highest number of votes in favor of Catlin. In the evidence one witness had such a sense of humor that he said they must have been only "joshing," and that he considered it all as a joke, but considering the circumstances and the amount of money placed at the disposal of the contestee's backers, I ask you gentlemen, do you consider it was a joke or a serious offer?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. HAMILL. Not until I finish my presentation of these incidents. The contestee was present when an attempt was made to bribe a Democratic worker of the name of Tom Leonard, and seduce him from his allegiance to Gill in favor of Catlin. An offer was made to him in the presence of the contestee to give him $400 of Catlin money if he would work in favor of Catlin. Then on another occasion the contestee went through the district with a man of the name of Hank Weeke, if I recall the name correctly, and this man spent at certain places something like $40, treating people with refreshments, and the contestee reimbursed him for this expenditure on that day. It is true in the evidence the contestee said in one place he thought his congressional committee was expending the money, but if that is so, why did not he turn to the man who spent the $40 and direct him to the congressional committee for reimbursement rather than pay it personally. On another occasion he reimbursed, in the sum of $25, another man who had expended it for refreshments in his behalf.

And now, gentlemen, let me draw your attention to a singular and prominent instance which shows the studied purpose on the part of the contestee to put himself physically in such a position that it would be difficult to get the evidence on him, of the expenditure of money and of his connivance in the matter.

A dinner was held at the residence of the father of the contestee. The different workers of the party were invited to it. Mr. Kirby was present at the dinner. The contestee sat down to the dinner with the company, as was highly proper. They partook of the dinner. In the first place, let me impress upon you the fact that they came there in order to discuss the candidacy of Theron E. Catlin, to determine ways and means of carrying Catlin to success. They were his backers, and they were there for mutual consultation as to how best they could serve him.

After the dinner was over some one said, "Now, let us get down to business." Immediately on the remark being made the contestee rises as if shot, runs away from the table, and waits until the business is transacted. Think of it. Here is a man sitting at a conference, in the issue of which he is most vitally and particularly concerned, a conference called for his especial benefit, and when some one says, "Let us get down to business" he rises immediately and gets away until his own business is transacted, and then comes back to the company, meeting them in the hall after the discussion of his affairs was over.

The conference lasted 15 minutes or thereabouts; not more than 20 minutes; and Mr. Kirby naively said that they considered how much work and how many workers they needed in order to properly canvass the district in the interest of Catlin. In other words, you may reasonably presume that Mr. Kirby distributed at that time, when the contestee was designedly absent, the quid pro quo, the inspiration that would cause these workers to properly canvass the district in the interest of the contestee.

Then, was not this man Kirby the agent of the contestee? He said in his evidence that he had always stated he wanted to represent the father of the contestee and the brother of the contestee, and that under no circumstances would he be considered as representing Theron E. Catlin. But in the course of his conversation with some Catlin workers he made this remark, or some statement like this: "Gentlemen, I do not want you to do anything wrong in this campaign, because the contestee would rather be defeated than that anything wrong should be done to further his prospects of election."

Out of that little piece of evidence—and we can not get it any more explicitly from a man of such a high degree of astuteness—and taking into consideration the other facts that are proven, can we not reasonably come to the conclusion that this man, the contestee, knew that the money was being expended by Kirby in his behalf, that Kirby was his agent in making the expenditures, and that therefore Catlin is responsible for the acts of Kirby?

Let me read you this:

It is fundamental—

This is a quotation of law—

It is fundamental that one may, by affirmative acts and even by silence, ratify the acts of another who has assumed to act as his agent.

That is taken from Clark & Stiles on the Law of Agency, volume 1, page 264. It is further laid down that—

Although as a general rule a principal must have full knowledge of all the facts, * * * yet the principal can not purposely remain ignorant where the means of information is within his control, so as to escape the effect of his acts that would otherwise amount to a ratification. (Clark & Stiles on the Law of Agency, vol 1, p. 339.)

And this man did not actually remain ignorant, nor could he possibly be ignorant of what was going on, although he tried to put himself in situations which might lend color to his statement that he was ignorant of the fact that money was being expended by Kirby in his behalf. The idea, which seemed to agitate the minds of this precious coterie, who were employed in the interest of Catlin, was this: You can violate every statute set up by the people to keep their elections free from corruption; you can walk into Congress in defiance of every rule of decency; you can perpetrate the most flagrant fraud and bribery; and then you can delude the House of Representatives notwithstanding their right to be the judge of the qualifications and the election of their own Members, provided you only employ a lawyer who has the requisite ability, acuteness, and disposition for the work demanded.

Now, gentlemen, let us consider the second basis on which we believe the contestee is not entitled to his seat, and that is, as you will probably recall, because there was fraud and corruption to a great extent in certain portions of this district; that the fraud and corruption so honeycombed and permeated two of the wards of the district that the committee was compelled to eliminate these two wards in calculating what number of votes should be given for either of the two parties.

We took this action under authority of a rule laid down in this House in the case of Wagner v. Butler. Butler was a Democrat, who was elected from a district in Missouri adjoining, I understand, the very same district in which this contest arose. There was fraud alleged in the conduct of the election and on this ground his Republican opponent, Wagner, contested his seat.

The committee found fraud in certain precincts, and, as they said, being unable to determine just what votes were fraudulent and what were honest, they eliminated these certain precincts from the calculation and gave the seat to Mr. Wagner.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HAMILL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. The gentleman, of course, remembers that in the Wagner-Butler case there was proven a conspiracy between the election judges, the precinct committeemen, and the candidate himself?

Mr. HAMILL. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. And the gentleman doubtless remembers that ten or twelve thousand out of 25,000 voters did not reside at the addresses at which they registered; that there was fraud in every single one of those precincts, proven before the committee in the investigation that was made, and that in spite of that, the committee did not attempt, as your committee attempts, to throw out entire wards, but merely threw out the precincts in which fraud occurred?

Mr. HAMILL. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. If I had made the same remark I could not have said anything that would have so helped my side of the case, as gentlemen will see as I go on.

The gentleman talks about judges of elections being corrupted. The judges and clerks who officiated in the third ward of the city of St. Louis were the ones whom Reichman bribed by offering prizes of $15, $10, and $5, respectively, in order to have them return the highest vote for Catlin.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HAMILL. I will not yield any further. The gentleman must pardon me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HAMILL. It was in the third ward that Reichman, the treasurer of the contestee's campaign, was working in collusion with Brogan, the Democratic committeeman from that ward, in the interest of the contestee.

In the eighteenth ward we find that one Hank Weeke, who was acting in the interest of the contestee, confederated and combined with James J. Sheehan, the former Democratic committeeman, who presumably was acting for contestant and who selected the judges and clerks of the eighteenth ward, and working with him openly in the interest of the contestee. Weeke and Sheehan and the contestee were seen going around together to different places, introducing Catlin to the people and soliciting their support, although Sheehan was pledged to the contestant.

Furthermore there were 2,000 unnaturalized voters registered and voted in this district.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I should like to ask the gentleman to point out the evidence of any condition of that sort.

Mr. HAMILL. It is admitted in the pleadings of the contestee that there was 2,000 votes of unnaturalized persons cast, but it is contended by his counsel that these votes were cast in favor of the contestant. Three-fourths of this foreign, unnaturalized vote resided in the third and eighteenth wards of the city of St. Louis. It is said these 2,000 votes were cast for the contestant. Let us consider whether it is probable this was or was not the fact. It was manifestly improbable that they should have been cast for contestant. In the first place, all the control of the machinery of election was in the hands of the party of the contestee. In the second place, consider that it was, of course, impossible to run down every one of these different cases and determine for whom the ballots of all were cast. The contestant was, however, able to ferret out 311 of these cases, where persons who were not entitled to vote did actually cast their ballots, and every one of the 311 ballots were shown to have been cast in favor of the contestee.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILL. No. I will not yield until I finish, and then I will ask the gentleman to use up some of his time. Now, considering that every unnaturalized vote which was investigated was proved to have been cast in the interest of the contestee, we could, I think, with a good deal of justice have concluded that the 2,000 ballots were cast rather for contestee than for contestant, and recorded them that way. But we took a fairer course than that. Rather than have the slightest imputation of injustice rest upon us in this matter, and in order to avoid the slightest charge that we were dealing with the contestee otherwise than impartially, we had resort to this principle laid down in a case heard before a committee of this House, when the contestee's own party were in the majority of the committee. That principle is that instead of counting the ballots for either candidate the proper thing to do, considering the impossibility of separating the vote, was simply to eliminate this territory from the district altogether, and then count the ballots cast in the remaining parts of the district, and give the election to the man who was shown to have a majority on that basis of calculation. Pursuing this course, we arrived at the following results. Let me first, however, read the words in which that former committee stated the principle which we followed. They said:

> There was such manifest fraud and gross irregularity in each of these precincts that it is absolutely impossible to ascertain what votes, if any, were honestly cast and counted.

That was the language of the committee in the case of Wagner against Butler. Following the authority of that committee, the present committee adopts this language as its own and follows the principle therein enunciated.

On the computation of votes this course leads to the following result: The total vote cast for contestee was 20,089, from which we deduct 152 as corrected by a recount, thus making his full vote 19,937. The vote cast for Catlin in the third ward amounted to 2,621 and in the eighteenth ward to 2,704, making the aggregate vote of both wards 5,477. This latter amount deducted from the total of the district reduces his full vote to 14,612.

Pursuing the same course with Gill, we arrive at the following result: The vote returned for him in the whole district amounted to 18,612. Under the principle relied on, add together the vote of the third ward, 1,747, and the vote of the eighteenth ward, 1,905, making a result of 3,652. The latter amount, when deducted from Gill's total vote in the district, reduced his total to 15,043.

Comparing, therefore, the votes of both candidates, the committee finds that Gill possesses a majority of 431 votes.

The committee, therefore, after careful and patient study and investigation of this case, determines that the contestee is not entitled to the seat he holds and that the contestant, having been lawfully elected, is entitled to the seat.

The committee therefore recommends for adoption the resolution which I have sent to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Now, gentlemen, we have not hastily come to this conclusion, nor have we done so with any amount of willingness. We have reached this conclusion reluctantly, unwillingly, and only as the result of the most painstaking consideration, bearing in mind the enormous responsibilities that rested upon us. For we clearly realized that if we reported to this House an unjust proposition to deprive this man of his seat we would not only be inflicting a grievous injury upon him but we would be doing a great wrong to the people of the eleventh congressional district of Missouri. But, however unpleasant this duty has been, we know that it will be approved, not merely because it is correct but because it establishes a principle and a policy which this House ought faithfully to follow. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We should relentlessly rout from the floor of this House any man who comes into it as a Member whose election has been trafficked for and who carries a certificate of election that is tainted with financial corruption. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The great trouble to-day with the legislatures of this country is that, unfortunately, the people too often have had good reason to suspect their integrity. Men have come into legislative place who were not elected by the untrammeled votes of their constituents, but who were put there by illegal methods as the representatives of some coterie who had a larger amount of money to spend than the contending candidates.

It is for that reason that we see to-day such legislative propositions as the referendum, the initiative, and the recall, and other innovations which the people in their disgust at the corruption of legislators have devised in order to obtain legislation that would be in the popular interest. We believe that this contest and the action which we anticipate this House will take on it will do more than anything else to uphold the reputation and the dignity of this Chamber before the people of the country. It is, I say, not merely a question whether Theron Catlin shall be declared not entitled to a seat and Patrick F. Gill chosen to take his place; it is a question whether the membership of this House shall be a membership sent here by the free voice of the people, or whether we are to have men who can be elected by the unlimited and illegal use of money. I want a legislature where men, not money; where brains, not bullion; where character, and not cash, shall be the test of fitness for public office. [Applause.]

And so, believing in the full confidence of the justice of the position which this committee takes, I present to you in the name of the committee this resolution, knowing well that having regard to the integrity of this House and to your own oath of office and to the interests of right and justice you will unhesitatingly sustain it. [Applause.]

Will the gentleman from Minnesota now use some of his time?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Before the gentleman yields the floor, will he yield to me?

Mr. HAMILL. No; we have only two hours for debate on this side, and I have now used an hour. Your side has three hours, and you have as yet used none of your time.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman did not yield during the discussion, and I want to ask him a question.

Mr. HAMILL. No; I can not yield. I ask the gentleman from Minnesota to use an hour and a half of his time.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman decline to answer a question which he referred to in his own argument?

Mr. HAMILL. I absolutely decline for the reason I have stated.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, if I may persuade the Members of the House to come down out of the clouds of innuendo and suspicion into which they have been led by the eloquence of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL], I want to discuss for a few moments the naked facts of this case. I may say in passing while we are talking about suspicions, I always suspect the man who is long on oratory to be short on facts. Eloquence has ever been a poor substitute for logic.

I do not intend to make a speech on this case. I am only going to tell you the story of the events which led up to this contest. Before I go into that let me say that the majority report contains absolutely nothing of the facts of the case. The minority report was available for the first time about 11 o'clock this morning. It comports with the police court and other unfair methods which have characterized this case all the way through, that the case should have been called up before the ink was dry on the minority views.

In order to understand the events which led up to this contest it is necessary to appreciate the relationship and character of those who had to do with these events. At the time of the campaign in 1910 Theron Catlin was 32 years old. He was a graduate of Harvard University and Law School, and had had practically no business or legal experience. His political experience had been confined to one term in the State Legislature of Missouri, occasional contributions to the campaign committee of his ward, and a membership in the ward committee of his ward. He was in no sense a ward politician. He was unknown in the district. I mention these facts because they gave rise to the necessity of the advertising campaign which was subsequently conducted in his behalf.

In addition to this he was saddled with that presumption which always arises in the case of a millionaire's son, that he was a snob and a "silk stocking." This gave rise to the necessity of his going around among the social clubs in his district extending his acquaintance therein.

Theron Catlin was the son of Daniel Catlin, a man 73 years old, a retired millionaire tobacco manufacturer of St. Louis. Daniel Catlin was not a politician. He had never held a political office in his life. He was and is a business man. Theron Catlin was the brother of Daniel K. Catlin, whose business consisted in the main of assisting his father in his numerous interests. He was also in no sense a politician, never having held a political office.

There is one other person whom it is necessary to introduce in order to understand the facts in this case, and that man is Daniel Kirby. Kirby was a well-known, highly-respected lawyer, standing at the top of the St. Louis bar. He has been, and I think is yet, a law partner of Charles Nagel, the present Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Against him, so far as the record shows and as admitted by all in the case, there is absolutely not the slightest suggestion that he was other than a man of high character and of unimpeachable reputation for truth and veracity.

In addition to these persons there were nine members of the congressional committee. This congressional committee was not the personal committee of the candidate. It was not selected by him, but its members were elected by the voters in their respective wards at the primaries.

Daniel Catlin, Theron's father, and Daniel K. Catlin, his brother, both maintain summer homes at Dublin, N. H. They occupied the homes during the entire summer of 1910 from early in July up to the last week in October. That fact is important because it absolutely disproves the allegation of intimate association during the campaign between Theron Catlin and his father and brother.

During the early part of September, 1910, Daniel Kirby was in the East on a vacation trip. He took occasion during that trip to visit with Daniel K. Catlin, at Dublin, N. H. I may say, in passing, that Kirby had been for many years on intimate terms with the Catlin family, although he had never at any time represented any member of the Catlin family as counsel. While this visit was going on Daniel K. Catlin and Kirby paid a visit to Daniel Catlin, the father, at his home. There, after some preliminary conversation, and along toward the time when Daniel Kirby and Daniel K. Catlin were about to go home the question of Theron Catlin's candidacy came up. Kirby volunteered, by reason of his long friendship for the Catlin family, recognizing that Daniel and Daniel K. Catlin knew absolutely nothing about political campaigns, to see that any money which they might want to contribute to Theron's campaign was properly and legally expended.

Daniel Catlin, recognizing his own position, recognizing that he had no political experience, accepted the offer. There was some conversation as to the amount that would be necessary to be expended for advertising and getting out registration, and so on. My recollection of the testimony is that the amount suggested as the minimum amount was about $7,000.

I had desired to go into the testimony in this case, especially the testimony with reference to this particular visit, and in my judgment it is important and should convince any fair-minded man that there was absolutely nothing in this visit of the Lorimer slush fund or the bathroom performance. But the short time allowed me will not permit of extended reading of the evidence. Therefore I will only state the facts. Kirby came there of his own motion. The conversation which took place with reference to Theron's campaign was an incident of the visit and nothing more. This visit is doubly important, for if there was any conspiracy to bribe and debauch the electorate of the eleventh congressional district its inception was at that meeting. So far as my reading goes there has never been a case of wholesale bribery and corruption in an election without a conspiracy between candidates and election officials.

I say that no one can read the evidence and believe that Daniel Kirby, of the St. Louis bar, Daniel Catlin, and Daniel Catlin's son, in the father's own home, in the presence of his daughter, the sister of the candidate, conspire to debauch the electorate of the eleventh congressional district. It does not comport with our understanding of human action. So right at the inception we start out with good motives—with good purposes.

Shortly after this visit, Kirby was about to return home, and telephoned to Daniel K. Catlin that he desired $1,000 with which to start the campaign and to get out the registration. In St. Louis they have three days of registration about the middle of September. It was for this purpose that Kirby desired the first installment of money. Subsequently six additional checks were given by Daniel Catlin either to Daniel K. Catlin, and through him to Mr. Kirby, or to Mr. Kirby direct. These checks aggregated the sum of $10,200. They were used by Mr. Kirby, as he testified, at various times during the campaign, and to me it seems an indication that Kirby's testimony with reference to how this money was expended was true, that the funds were required from Daniel Catlin by Daniel Kirby at such times and in such sums as he, Kirby, actually needed them for the purposes for which he intended to use them. In other words, there was no big bribery fund, no slush fund hung up, with which the voters might be bribed or other corrupt practices indulged in. Of this $10,200 Kirby testified, and his testimony is accepted by the contestant in this particular, that $400 was expended for a press agent, whose duty it was to write reports and news items for the newspapers. Three hundred and fifty dollars was expended for cards, posters, and dodgers, to be used at ward meetings and through the district during the campaign. Fifty dollars was expended for stereopticon slides, $50 for ward meeting advertising, hall rent, and so forth; $1,300 in employing canvassers, whose duty it was to use their efforts in securing a full registration. I want to say in this connection that at the time of this campaign the prohibition issue was up in Missouri. That had a very large effect upon the registration.

Daniel Catlin, as the testimony shows, was very much interested in this issue. He was a very large property holder in the city of St. Louis, and he felt that if prohibition was passed in the State it would depreciate the value of his property. He was very anxious, therefore, to have out a full registration of all nationalities in St. Louis, believing that especially the Germans, as he testified, would vote against prohibition. This money, therefore, was not altogether expended in the interest of Theron Catlin, and I may say in passing that in addition the testimony shows that every dollar of it was expended not alone in Theron Catlin's interest but was expended for the whole Republican ticket in the district.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. Did Mr. Kirby superintend the disbursing of all this money of which the gentleman speaks?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. HAMMOND. Thirteen hundred dollars of it, I understand, was expended to secure registration lists?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; to secure registration of voters.

Mr. HAMMOND. When those lists were obtained with whom were they deposited?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Lists?

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes; the registration lists.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Later on I expect to explain, if I have the time, the system of registration that obtains there.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will pardon me, were the registration lists when they were obtained, for which the $1,300 was expended, given to the congressional committee?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I think the gentleman misunderstands me. The $1,300 was expended in employing persons who would get out the voters—bringing in persons to register.

Mr. HAMMOND. I understand. I would like to ask the gentleman another question, though perhaps I may anticipate him. Were there any registration lists secured by Kirby—lists of voters?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. No. The registration was an official act performed by a Democratic judge and a Democratic clerk and by a Republican clerk and by a Republican judge at the registration period. These men were employed to get out and bring persons in to secure a full registration, because the law provided that no person could vote who was not registered. They desired a large registration, a large vote, because prohibition was an issue, and they believed by getting out all the voters they would gain both against the prohibition issue and in behalf of Theron E. Catlin.

Mr. HAMMOND. Just one more question. What connection was there between the candidate's congressional committee and Mr. Kirby?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. None whatever, except that Mr. Kirby expended the funds which he received from Daniel Catlin, the father of the contestee in this case, through the members of the city and congressional committees. The city committees, as I have already intimated, were elected by the voters of the wards, and they were ex officio members of the congressional committee. Mr. Kirby used these members of the congressional committee to disburse the money through the different precincts for the purposes of which he testified, and the testimony shows that in every instance he specified when he paid over any money to any member of the city or congressional committee the purpose for which it was to be expended and how it should be expended in every instance. He kept a string on it, as it were, in order to make doubly sure that it was used for legitimate purposes.

Mr. HAMMOND. Who was the treasurer of the congressional committee?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. George Reichman.

Mr. HAMMOND. And it was through him that the money that Kirby received was disbursed?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Not all of it. Kirby made a contribution to the congressional committee of $1,400, which all went through George Reichman, but the balance of the money, except that paid for advertising, and so forth, was distributed among the members of the congressional and city committees by Kirby as an individual, acting for Daniel Catlin, the father of the contestee.

Mr. HAMMOND. The treasurer, Mr. Reichman, reported $1,400 as received from Kirby, or $1,000.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. He reported $1,000.

Mr. HAMMOND. But he did receive $1,400?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I understand the evidence so shows. I am frank to say that I can not explain it, except that I am so informed. It is not a matter of record. I want to be perfectly fair about it. Let me conclude. Mr. Reichman says that it was merely an oversight upon his part. He was a member of a number of political committees, and he had charge of the funds of the city and the congressional committee, and had a great many affairs. He says that among all these affairs which he had to attend to during the campaign this $400 was overlooked. Now, the record shows $1,400 was contributed by Kirby——

Mr. HAMMOND. And that is all the money Kirby received?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. No.

Mr. HAMMOND. Which was disposed of through the congressional committee received from the Catlins.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. The entire amount, as near as I understand, was in the neighborhood of $7,000. There were other expenses for advertising, and so forth.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does the evidence show that the candidate, Catlin, thought this was spent in accordance with the congressional work being done?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Well, the evidence shows there were only one or two meetings of the congressional committee. The testimony shows that Catlin went out with members of the committee; that they took him around and introduced him at various places in their particular precincts and wards, but there is absolutely no evidence in the record that any man at any time during the campaign ever said to Theron Catlin that his father was spending money or that Kirby was spending money or that anybody else was spending money in his behalf. Nothing of that kind was intimated by anybody. There is not a scintilla of direct evidence that anybody brought to Theron Catlin the knowledge that money was being expended by any one, except the congressional committee.

Mr. HAMMOND. Was there a fair inference that the candidate Catlin knew that the congressional committee was expending in that contest a sum amounting to from $5,000 to $7,000?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I do not think so. There is no inference of that kind. I want to point out in that connection that if it was true the congressional committee was spending $5,000 to $7,000, they had a perfect right to do it. It was not unlawful for any person or political committee to spend money legitimately, nor was there any limitation upon the amount any committee or any person, other than the candidate himself, might lawfully spend.

Mr. HAMMOND. As I understand the gentleman, he deducts from the evidence that there is no fair inference that the candidate Catlin knew that between $5,000 and $7,000 was being expended in his behalf?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I will say there is not only no such inference, but there is direct testimony of four persons—Daniel Catlin, D. K. Catlin, Irene Catlin, and Kirby—who did know of Daniel Catlin's expenditures and who testified directly that they never spoke to Catlin about it; that they believed he did not know about it; that he never knew that his father was spending money or that money was being spent by anybody except by the congressional committee. Now, I desire to say to the gentleman that although the chairman of the committee declined to yield to me I want to be very fair about the matter, because I am not in the position in the case of the juryman who said, "I believe the cuss is guilty, but they have not proved it." I believe absolutely that Mr. Catlin is innocent of both corrupt dealing in his election and of knowledge of unlawful expenditures.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is there any evidence in the case that the candidate Catlin, or, rather, did the candidate Catlin give evidence in the case?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. HAMMOND. Did he state at any time that he did or did not know that a large amount of money was being expended, whether lawfully or unlawfully?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. The testimony shows that he stated that he looked to his committee to handle the financial part of the campaign; that he paid no attention to it whatever; that he knew nothing about it. It has been the custom there, as he says and as is admitted, for the congressional committee to solicit funds and dispose of them, and he paid no attention whatever to that part of the campaign.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Now, if I may proceed with the argument which I had in mind in regard to the objects for which money was spent. Twenty-four hundred dollars was spent for the employment of canvassers and electioneers on election day. There were 123 precincts in this district, so that would amount to about $20 a precinct. Then, there was $2,300 spent for the purchase of 35,000 American flags and for the distribution of these flags through the district. These flags bore a streamer with the legend "Vote for Catlin for Congress." There was $1,000 spent for advertising in the Jewish, Bohemian, and Russian newspapers. There were $350 spent for pictures, signs, banners, and so forth, at the Catlin headquarters and elsewhere. Twenty-five dollars was paid to each of nine congressional committeemen for the hire of automobiles on election day. Fourteen hundred dollars was contributed by Kirby to the congressional committee. There were $315 paid Con Maloney for going over the district and electioneering and determining the status of the campaign in the various precincts, making a total of $10,140 spent by Kirby in the campaign. I want to point out at this point that this testimony is corroborated by the testimony of F. W. Beckman, a member of the congressional committee. The contestant put Beckman on the stand with a view of following out these expenditures, and in every instance the testimony of Beckman corroborates the testimony of Kirby as to how this money was distributed and as to the purposes for which it was used. Now, Beckman was the only member of the congressional committee who was called by the contestant. If the contestant in this case does not admit, if he did not accept the testimony of Kirby as being true as to the purposes for which this money was expended, the duty—the burden—was upon him to produce the rest of the congressional committee who might be expected to testify to the contrary. It is the "reductio ad absurdum" for contestant to accept the testimony of Kirby as to the amount of money spent, deny it as to the purposes for which it was spent, and then make no effort to contradict it by witnesses, who it is admitted knew the facts and could be produced to testify.

Now, the gist of the case, the nub of the case, is in this question, Shall the expenditure of Theron E. Catlin's father, Daniel Catlin, be charged to Theron E. Catlin, so as to make his expenditure exceed the amount he could legally spend? That is the nub of this case. That is the only theory upon which the majority can oust Catlin. If it can not be shown as a matter of law that $10,200 contributed by Catlin's father should be charged to Theron E. Catlin and taken into consideration in determining the question whether he, Theron E. Catlin, exceeded the amount of expenditure allowed by law, then this case absolutely falls to the ground. I refer now to the statute quoted by the majority. Without reading it in full, it provides that—

> No candidate for Congress or for any public office in this State, or in any county, district, or municipality thereof, which office is to be filled by proper election, shall, by himself or by or through any agent or agents, committee or organization, or any person or persons whatsoever, in the aggregate pay out or expend, or promise or agree or offer to pay, contribute, or expend, any money or other valuable thing in order to secure or aid in securing his nomination or election or the nomination or election of any other person or persons, or both such nomination and election, to any office to be voted for at the same election, or in aid of any party or measure, in excess of a sum to be determined upon the following basis, namely—

In this case the limit prescribed was $662.

Now, the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri has held that statute to be penal in its nature, and therefore to be strictly construed. I defy anybody to read that statute and come to any conclusion other than that it amounts to nothing more than a limitation upon the personal expenditures of the candidate. I defy anybody to show anything in that statute that makes it apply to anyone except the candidate himself.

But we are not obliged to rest upon the statute alone. We may have recourse to the law as a whole. In addition to this section, the Missouri law provides, as I have already stated in answer to inquiries, for the election of a congressional committee. It provides that this congressional committee shall have a treasurer, who shall keep an account and make a statement. Now, in this case both Gill and Catlin had a congressional committee. Both of these committees expended a sum which, if added to the personal expenditures of the candidates themselves, would have taken them over the prescribed limit of $662. But, obviously, the committee does not consider that this expenditure by the congressional committees should be added to the expenditure of the candidates, because if that is done, it will damn the case of the contestant as well as that of the contestee. In other words, if the expenditure of Gill's congressional committee is added to his own expenditures, he will have exceeded the limit fixed by law.

But, with a peculiar and, it seems to me, a vicious inconsistency, the majority of the committee contends that while the expenditures of the congressional committee shall not be added to the expenditures of the candidates, yet the expenditures of other political committees and of other persons with whom the candidate had no official connection, and concerning the expenditures of which he could know nothing, should be added to his expenditures. There is no difference in law between the congressional committees and other political committees. Both are required to have a treasurer to keep an account and file a statement; so that if the expenditures of the congressional committee shall not be added to those of the candidate, it is absolutely and absurdly inconsistent to contend that the expenses of other political committees and other persons with whom the candidate had no legal relation whatever shall be charged to him, thus taking him over the legal limit. Yet that is the position of the committee.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. This statute provides that the expenditures shall be declared unlawful if in excess of the amount mentioned. What is the penalty? Does the court find that the election is void?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. No. The law provides for a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto, by which the defeated candidate, or the candidate having the next highest number of votes, can go into court and show that the person receiving the highest number of votes has violated the corrupt-practices act. The act further provides that if that showing is made, the person receiving the highest number of votes shall be ousted, and that no certificate of election shall be issued to him, but that the certificate of election shall be issued to the person receiving the next highest number of votes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. It provides a penalty for the violation of the law, does it not?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; it provides for a penalty of fine and imprisonment.

I want to say, while I am on that question, that the committee, after making a long and careful investigation of this case, in all its phases, say that the section of the statute to which I have just referred, providing for the ousting of a candidate who has violated the corrupt-practices act and the issuing of the certificate to the person receiving the next highest number of votes is constitutional.

This statement is, to say the least, extremely unfortunate. It has the additional infirmity of being absolutely untrue. In the case of the State ex inf. v. Towns (153 Mo., 91) the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri holds that section which provides for the issuance of a certificate of election to the person receiving the next highest number of votes, after the ouster of the person receiving the highest number, is unconstitutional, and no action can be predicated upon that statute here, if we are to follow the very rule which the majority of the committee contend we shall follow.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Was not that decision of the court in reference to the appointment to offices which the executive filled in case of vacancies, and the ground of it was that you could not take away from the executive the power of appointment?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. No. The court declared that section of the statute to be unconstitutional, for the reason that it did take away from the governor the power of appointment, and for the additional reason that no man can be elected to an office who does not receive a plurality of the uncorrupted votes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; but I will ask the gentleman to make it short.

Mr. SIMS. Is it section 6046 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Missouri that the gentleman refers to as the law preventing expenditures other than personal expenditures in certain cases?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; I think so. I do not recollect the exact section of the statute.

Mr. SIMS. I saw that section mentioned in the report. I did not know.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, if it will not interrupt the gentleman, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Supreme Court of Missouri had declared that act unconstitutional?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. In part.

Mr. OLMSTED. As being in conflict with its own constitution or with the Federal Constitution?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. In conflict with its own constitution; but my recollection is that the Supreme Court of the United States has once held that no man can be elected to an office who has not received a plurality of the uncorrupted votes cast in that election.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is it not plain that under the Federal Constitution no State could require that any man should sit in this body who had received only a minority of the votes in his district?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman also to the fact that in the case of Smith v. Brown, reported in Second Bartlett, page 395, this House decided that a man was not entitled to his seat on a minority vote where the man receiving the majority vote was ineligible.

The same was decided in Commonwealth v. Cluley by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, reported in Fifty-sixth Pennsylvania State Reports, page 270, the opinion being written by Mr. Justice Strong, who afterwards sat in the Supreme Court of the United States.

The same thing was also decided by the Supreme Court of California in Saunders v. Haynes, reported in Thirteenth California, 145.

The Senate of the United States, in the case of Joseph C. Abbott, from North Carolina, decided that, the man receiving the majority vote being ineligible, the receiver of the minority vote could not be entitled to the benefit of the election.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I think that is undoubtedly the law. I do not think there is any doubt whatever about it.

Now, the majority of the committee propose to write into the law of Missouri a new provision to the effect that if the candidate had knowledge of expenditures by other persons than himself, those expenditures shall be added to his own; and if these expenditures, added to his own, exceed the limit fixed by law, that they shall invalidate his election.

There is absolutely nothing in the law of Missouri or any other law which warrants the committee in writing this provision into the law.

But it is perhaps worth while to direct attention to some of the things upon which the committee rely to show knowledge on the part of Theron Catlin of these expenditures.

In the first place, it is alleged that Theron Catlin had access to his father's books and accounts in the safe, and therefore had opportunity, at least, to find out that his father was expending money in his behalf. This argument, of course, overlooks the fact that if Theron Catlin had gone all through his father's books he would have found there absolutely nothing which would have indicated to him that his father was spending a dollar in his campaign.

Mr. KORBLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; I will be more courteous than the gentlemen of the majority were to me. I will yield.

Mr. KORBLY. He would have found the check for $1,000 drawn in favor of Mr. Kirby, would he not?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. KORBLY. Would not that have put him on notice of the object in inviting Mr. Kirby to that dinner?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Absolutely not at all; and there is not a particle of evidence to the effect that Catlin ever went near those books during the entire campaign. There is absolutely not a line of evidence. As a matter of fact, counsel for contestant spent several weeks going over these books and found nothing which he thought worthy of placing in this record. If counsel for contestant, who, I may say, was extremely partisan in this case, found nothing in the books which excited his suspicion, it would hardly be fair to assume that Theron Catlin would have found anything there to excite his suspicions.

Again, it is charged that on the Wednesday before election, I believe, a dinner was held at the Catlin home at which the nine members of the congressional committee were present, with Catlin's father, Kirby, and himself. It is charged that the expenses of the campaign were talked over. This was denied by every man who was present and who testified; denied by Kirby, denied by Catlin's father, denied by Catlin himself. If the members of the majority and of the minority of this House are to believe that the question of finances was discussed at this dinner, they must believe that these nine men, having been invited to dinner at the Catlin home, violated the hospitality of their host, and debauched his dinner table by engaging in a vile conspiracy to corrupt the election in the eleventh congressional district; they must believe they did this atrocious thing in the actual physical presence of Catlin's sister and Catlin's mother, with the connivance and consent of Catlin himself and of his father. It may be that gentlemen on the other side can believe that. For myself I can not, in the face of direct testimony to the effect that the finances of the campaign were never discussed at that dinner.

Again there is in connection with this dinner one incident which it seems to me shows very conclusively that Theron Catlin knew absolutely nothing about Kirby's connection with this campaign.

Catlin had asked his father if he could have this congressional committee out at the house, and his father suggested that he bring them out to dinner. Catlin did not invite Kirby. He invited the nine members of the congressional committee, but did not invite Kirby, for the very obvious reason that he did not know that Kirby had anything to do with this campaign. He did not know anything about that. If he had known that Kirby was representing his father and spending money to aid in his election, certainly he would have invited Kirby to the dinner on his own motion. He did not invite Kirby until the day previous to the dinner after everybody else had been invited. Then one of the members of the committee by the name of Goldstein met Catlin on the street and asked him if he had invited Kirby to the dinner. Catlin said "no, he had not invited him." Goldstein said, "I wish you would invite him. I would like to have him there," and Catlin invited him. It seems to me this incident shows beyond any question Catlin's innocence with reference to Kirby's connection with his campaign. That it shows Catlin's absolute lack of knowledge that Kirby was doing anything in the election.

Mr. SIMS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; I do not care to yield for argumentative interruptions, but I am glad to yield if I do not make the facts clear.

Mr. SIMS. I just want to ask the gentleman if it would make any difference whether or not the money was corruptly expended to debauch the election; that is to say, was the limitation to be on the use to which it was put or on the amount?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. There was no limitation which an individual other than the candidate could expend.

Mr. SIMS. The candidate himself could not expend over a certain amount?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Not over $662.

Mr. SIMS. But the gentleman's position is that anybody else might expend any amount.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. That is my position.

Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman means if the candidate had no personal knowledge of it.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I do not think that the personal knowledge of the candidate cuts any figure.

Mr. LLOYD. If he knows that the money was spent he is bound to account for it.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Even if he has knowledge and fails to account for it it has nothing to do with the legality of his election.

Mr. LLOYD. About that the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I am not mistaken; I am entirely correct. If the gentleman's proposition is correct there is not a Member of the House from the State of Missouri that holds his seat legally—not one.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. May I ask, if the gentleman's theory is the law and is correct, how does he explain that the candidate for Congress, in this instance Theron E. Catlin, was required to make this kind of an affidavit: "I, Theron E. Catlin, being duly sworn"——

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Oh, Mr. Catlin did make that affidavit and nobody in this case has questioned its accuracy or truth.

Mr. DICKINSON. But I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the latter part of it, where he says "to the best of my knowledge and belief by any other person or persons in my behalf, wholly or in part, in endeavoring to secure in any way"——

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; that is in accordance with the statute; the affidavit was filed by Mr. Catlin, as it was by every other candidate.

Mr. DICKINSON. Does the gentleman claim that if Mr. Catlin knew that large amounts of money had been expended in his behalf by others that he could make this affidavit which he did make and be entitled to his seat legally?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I say that if he had knowledge that money was to be spent by other persons, and knew who the persons were and the amount expended, it was his duty to put them in the affidavit, but whether he did or not does not affect his title to a seat in this body.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. In my judgment the construction of the Missouri law by the gentleman from Minnesota is correct. This is the language of the statute: "No candidate for Congress," and so forth, "shall by himself or by an agent, or any person or committee," and so forth. Notice that word "by." The Missouri law prohibits a "candidate" from doing certain things either "by himself" or "by any person, agent, or committee." A candidate does not do an act "by" another person, or "by" a committee unless he authorizes that person or committee to do it. If another person does the act of his own accord it is not the act of the candidate, nor is it done "by" him. The candidate does it by another person only when the candidate authorizes that person to act in his behalf. How do gentlemen evade that? A statute might prohibit any person or committee from doing certain things on behalf of a candidate. That would be one thing; but it is an entirely different thing when the statute prohibits, as it does, only the candidate from doing certain things "by" another person or "by" a committee.

I think the construction put upon the statute by the gentleman from Minnesota is correct.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. There are some general considerations to sustain the legality of this election. In the first place, fraud is never presumed; fraud must always be proved. Good faith is always presumed, and in the absence of proof fraud is taken to be nonexistent.

There were in the eleventh congressional district 9 State senatorial districts and 16 legislative districts. In every one of these districts contests were had before the State legislature and the State senate, both of which were Democratic by substantial majorities. These contests involved the same ballots, the same voters, the same judges of election, the same clerks of election, and, in a large measure, the same statement of facts as are in issue in this case. And yet in every one of these contests the legality of the election was sustained by the Democratic majority.

Again, in this election—and I want to explain right here about the ballots in the State of Missouri. There they have a party ballot. The Republican ballot comes at the top, the Democratic ballot next, the Socialist next, and they are attached at the top and perforated so that the voter can tear off any ballot he wishes. He takes the bunch of ballots, goes to the booth, tears off the one he wants to vote, marks it, and hands the judge of election the ballot he wants to vote and also the ballots which he has not marked.

The stub of the ballot is thrown into the sack at one side and the ballot he votes is placed in the box. Now, these ballots are numbered in such a way that it is possible to tell who cast the ballots. If you go through the record you will find a record of the vote, showing just who voted for Catlin and who voted for Gill and their addresses. So that in every instance, if there was anything about a ballot that suggested fraud, it was possible to go to the voter who cast it and get his testimony.

Now, the contestant in this case picked out the names of 4,000 men who had voted for Catlin and sent out canvassers over the district to determine whether these voters resided at the places from which they registered at the time of the election. The testimony of the canvassers was that out of the 4,000 names which they examined and into which they made investigation 96 could not be found living at the place from which they registered. Subsequently the contestee brought in 65 of the 96 and they testified in this case, so that as the case stands to-day there are 31 ballots cast by persons who did not reside at the places from which they registered—31 altogether. Can this be said to be evidence of wholesale fraud and illegal voting?

Again, there was a recount of every ballot in this election. I direct your attention at this point to the record. Here, for instance, is a memorandum of the ballots, with the number of the ballot at the top of the first column, the initials of the judges in the second column, the person for whom the ballot was cast in the third, the number on the face of the ballot showing whether it was a Democratic or Republican ballot in the fourth, and a fifth column headed "Remarks." If you go down the list, which contains 85 names, you will find no notations in the column of remarks, indicating that there was not an irregular ballot in the whole 85. Go across to the other page and there are indicated three irregular ballots in the column headed "Remarks." On the back of one ballot the notation shown is the name of Bernard O. Spreckels, and on the back of another are the initials of the man who cast the ballot, and in another case it is marked "duplicate." There are 3 irregularities—3 out of 85. The first two indicate that the voter wrote his name or initials on the back of the ballot. So you can go through the entire record and you will find that the number of irregularities in this election was less than in the average election held anywhere. This demonstrates that there was no fraudulent voting or fraudulent counting, for in every instance the contestant could produce the person casting the ballot. The recount showed a total difference of 142 votes from the returns. As many errors were made in favor of Gill as were made in favor of Catlin, showing that there was no conspiracy to fraudulently count the ballots. In addition to the contests before the State legislature there were contests for State superintendent of schools, for another State officer, and for justice of the State supreme court brought by Democrats against Republicans who had been declared elected. In all three of those instances the supreme court, having all of the testimony before it, having all of the ballots before it, having in mind that the election involved the same voters, the same ballots, the same judges, the same clerks, and the same statement of facts as in this case, found absolutely no fraud in the election. This was a Democratic supreme court. If the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri had done what the majority of the committee in this case did, if they had rejected the returns in the third and eighteenth wards of the eleventh congressional district, the Democratic candidate for judge of the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri would have received the highest number of votes. They found no fraud in the third or the eighteenth wards which would warrant them in taking that action.

Mr. KORBLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. KORBLY. The case that the gentleman talks about did not involve the expenditure of this excessive amount of money at all?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. No; it did not involve the expenditure of this money, except in this way: If this money was used to corrupt voters, to bribe voters—if it was used to corrupt judges of elections or clerks of election—it corrupted them just as much, so far as the justices of the supreme court were concerned, as it did with reference to Theron Catlin. The same question of fraud was involved in both cases.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. In these other cases, however, the judgeship, when there was no connection between the candidates and the expending of money, the evidence as to the expending of money by the friends of the contestee here would not have been admitted, would it?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. So far as the expenditure of money by Catlin in excess of the legal limit is concerned, I am frank to say, and I have been entirely frank all through this case, that it had absolutely nothing to do with the case to which I have referred.

Mr. HARDY. And could not have been before the court.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. No. It was not before the court, so far as I know, but there is a charge in this case of absolute and wholesale fraud permeating from one end to the other of this district. That fraud could not have existed so as to invalidate the election of Mr. Catlin, so as to have given the election to Mr. Gill, and not have tainted the election of these other three persons against whom contests were brought.

Mr. HARDY. But the point is that it could not have been proven in that case. The evidence of money spent in this case was not admissible in that case.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Of course it could be proven, because the question of fraud was a question in that case, as in this.

Mr. HARDY. As to the illegal voters, but not as to the spending of money.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; the same question of fraud was involved. The question of expenditures in excess of the legal limit was not involved.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. McCALL. That decision would effectually dispose of one branch of the case, where the committee, on account of these so-called unnaturalized voters, threw out some thousands of votes.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Absolutely.

Mr. McCALL. It would dispose of that feature of the case absolutely.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Absolutely. The court did have that question up and disposed of it adversely to the contentions of the contestants.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the case involved the question of the regularity of the voters of the eighteenth ward?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Absolutely so. It was contended in the case before the Missouri Supreme Court, for instance, that there were irregularities in this respect, that the clerks of election had failed to write "Yes" in the column headed "Qualified voters," and the court held that that was a mere irregularity, not going to the legality of the elections. Insomuch as the question of the 2,000 votes of unnaturalized persons has been brought up at this point, I desire to briefly refer to it. I have here a copy of the register of voters in the city of St. Louis. This is the form used for registering voters in the St. Louis election. Beginning at the left-hand side, the legends at the top of the perpendicular columns are as follows:

"Residence, name, line number, nativity, color, age in years, occupation, term of residence (precinct, city, and State), native, naturalized, declaration of intention, by act of Congress, qualified voter, date of application to be registered, erased line number, voted," and underneath "voted" is "one, two, three, four, five, six," for whatever election the voter had voted at.

Then comes a column entitled "Remarks," and under that "Date of papers, court issuing same, why disqualified and erased, date of transfer," and so forth, and at the extreme right a place for the signature of the voter. When the voter goes to the precinct to register he is asked the necessary questions and these various columns are filled in. Occasionally a clerk makes an error.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I shall proceed for 15 minutes additional. The voter having come to the precinct to register, he is asked the necessary questions and these columns are filled out. Then he signs on the right-hand side opposite the line in which the information is contained. The contestant, in rebuttal, mind you, when the contestee had no opportunity to meet the testimony, produced the secretary of the board of election commissioners of the city of St. Louis, who testified as follows:

Q. Turn to ward 27, precinct 4, line 127, under the letter H.—A. I find on line 127 of the original registration of ward 27, precinct 4, the name of Adolph Holkmier (Nolkenler); residence, 5023 Terry Avenue; nativity, German; date of registration, September 22, 1910; but I fail to find any record showing in and to what court he became naturalized or naturalization papers were issued to him.

In other words, the clerk failed to put in this column under "Remarks" the name of the court in which the voter was naturalized, and upon this evidence it is claimed 311 persons who were not naturalized citizens voted in the election. In this way 311 names were written into the record. There is not a line of testimony that these voters were not actually naturalized. None of them were called to the stand by the contestant, and the contestee had no opportunity to call them to the stand. He was even denied the right of cross-examination, so that when contestant got these 311 names in the record they stood there as unnaturalized, although there had been no direct evidence that they were not in fact naturalized.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is it not true that the contestee admits in his pleadings that there were 2,000 unnaturalized voters permitted to register and vote?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Absolutely not.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman permit me just to read a line from the answer of the contestee?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I will not. I will explain that if the gentleman insists upon getting me out of the thread of my argument.

Mr. HAMLIN. But the gentleman was discussing that point.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. The notice of contest contains an allegation on the part of the contestant that 2,000 unnaturalized persons voted in the election and voted for Mr. Catlin. The notice of contest asked that the ballots be opened in the wards in which Mr. Catlin had a majority. It did not ask that all of the ballot boxes be opened. Mr. Catlin in his answer asks that all of the ballot boxes be opened, courting the fullest investigation of the ballots, and as a counter allegation to that of the contestant alleged that 2,000 unnaturalized persons voted in the election and that these unnaturalized persons voted for Mr. Gill. The gentleman from Missouri, taking the allegation of the notice of contest, or the petition, and the allegation in the answer, attempts to make of the allegation in the answer an admission on the part of the contestee that 2,000 unnaturalized persons did in fact vote in the election. Those are the facts in the case.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to read just two lines——

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. If the gentleman is going to tell the whole story he can tell it in his own time.

Mr. HAMLIN. But the record simply states that the contestee avers that 2,000 unnaturalized voters voted.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. It does aver—it is a direct allegation, not an admission, and must be proven.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is an attempt on his part——

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. No; I say it is a direct allegation. I am surprised that any man who claims to be a lawyer should try to construe it as an admission. It is both absurd and unfair. Now, let us just for a moment consider where these 311 persons voted who it is claimed were unnaturalized. I made an investigation of the record for the purpose of determining in what wards these votes of unnaturalized persons were cast. I find 378 names written in the record in the manner in which I have just stated. Some of these showed irregularities other than the failure to state in the proper column the court in which the person was naturalized. Of these 378 I have mentioned 34 were cast in ward 2, 49 in ward 19, 78 in ward 20, 96 in ward 4, 23 in ward 2, 66 in ward 27, 13 in ward 18—the smallest number—and 19 in ward 3—the next lowest number. In the eighteenth and third wards, having the lowest and next lowest number of irregularities, it is proposed to throw out the returns for illegality. It appears that 96 of these irregularities occurred in ward 4, which Gill carried with a majority of 341; 66 in ward 27, which Gill carried with a majority of 148; 78 in ward 20, which Gill carried by a majority of 724. So you will see that if any wards are to be thrown out for these irregularities wards 4, 27, and 20, which were carried by Gill, should first be thrown out.

Now, I want to take up as briefly as I can some of the specific allegations of fraud in this case. There are two specific allegations of fraud in the third ward. The allegation is made that prizes were offered to judges and clerks of election in the third ward. Francis H. Evers was the principal witness produced by contestant in support of this charge. Evers, however, reversed himself on cross-examination. Here is the cross-examination:

Q. Mr. Evers, as I remember your testimony before, you testified that an offer was made by Mr. Reichman of $15, $10, and $5 to the clerks in the precincts returning the highest votes for Mr. Catlin—$15 each on the Republican ticket?—A. No; I don't believe I testified that way.

Q. That is the way you testified, and it is so reported.—A. No; I did not say those prizes were for clerks.

Q. Who were the prizes for, then?—A. I don't know.

Q. And you saw what the newspapers said quoting you?—A. The papers said that I said they offered prizes for election judges and clerks for the highest votes for Catlin.

Q. And you did not say it?—A. No; I did not.

Q. Do you know of any prizes having been given to anybody in that district?—A. No.

August Borcherding, who also testified in support of the charge, stated on cross-examination that the suggestion made was that prizes be given to precinct committeemen getting out the highest vote for Catlin and not to judges and clerks. These two witnesses gave all the testimony that was given in support of the charge. I may say the testimony shows that the present committeemen met with the judges and clerks of election on the Saturday before election at the courtroom of Justice of the Peace George Reichman. Judge Reichman, committeeman of the third ward, first gave instructions to the judges and clerks and afterwards to the present committeemen. While these instructions to present committeemen were being given, Henry Pins, a committeeman, in a "joshing" way suggested that prizes should be given to the precinct committeemen securing the highest number of votes for Catlin. Now, there is considerable distinction between prizes for precinct committeemen and prizes to judges and clerks of election. One would be lawful; the other unlawful. As a matter of fact, no prizes were offered to anybody. Pins says the suggestion was made in a "joshing" way, and his testimony is corroborated by others present at the meeting. A man by the name of Olson, another by the name of Linnemeyer, and two others, all of whom testified that this suggestion was made by Pins in a "joshing" way and referred to precinct committeemen and not to judges and clerks. So that this charge of bribery of judges and clerks in the third ward absolutely fails. There is nothing to it. It is disproved by the great preponderance of evidence. Even the men who testified to it in the first place on cross-examination took back everything they had previously said.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Did not Mr. Evers and Borcherding testify to the offer of prizes to judges and clerks?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. On direct examination, but they took it back on cross-examination.

Mr. LINTHICUM. But they testified that on direct examination.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; they did.

Mr. LINTHICUM. And also testified Mr. Catlin was present at the time.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; but they took it back. I can not say they took back what they said about Catlin being present, but Catlin himself swears that he was not present. They did take back what they said with respect to prizes being offered to judges and clerks, and unquestionably the preponderance of evidence shows that the prizes, if offered at all, were offered to committeemen and not to judges and clerks.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is not a further fact that it was Mr. Reichman, who is called a judge, but he was a justice of the peace, who offered these prizes?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. He did not offer the prizes, and there is no testimony to that effect.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Did not some of these witnesses say he offered prizes?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. If they did so they took it back, as the cross-examination shows. Now, along the line of the charge of corruption occurring in the third ward——

Mr. AINEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I would like to get through.

Mr. AINEY. This is right along the inquiry made. Was there any evidence in the record that any prizes were actually paid?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Absolutely none. It is not claimed by anyone that prizes were paid. The only claim made is that prizes were offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I will proceed for 15 minutes more.

There was another charge of bribery which, it is alleged, effected the vote in the third ward.

This was the attempted bribery of Thomas J. Leonard. The testimony shows that one Carten, in company with a man by the name of Thomas J. Leonard, met one Doc Reynolds on a street in St. Louis some time during the campaign. Carten stopped to talk with Reynolds, but Leonard proceeded on out of hearing. Reynolds asked Carten if he was working for Gill, and he said "no." Then he asked Carten if Leonard was working for Gill, and Carten said he did not know. The rest of the conversation was to the effect that Carten asked Doc Reynolds what there was in it for Leonard if he would get out and work for Catlin, to which Carten alleges that Doc Reynolds replied, "Four or five hundred dollars."

Now Doc Reynolds sleeps on a bleak hillside, under 6 feet of sod, in the State of Missouri. He slept there when this testimony was taken, his lips sealed by the angel of death. I do not know who he was, and I do not care very much who he was; but the fact remains that he could not be produced to meet the slanders that Carten brought against him. Carten, so the evidence shows, within two years prior to giving this testimony, was an inmate of an insane asylum, located a short distance outside the city of St. Louis, as a result of hard drinking.

Leonard swears that he did not hear the conversation between Carten and Reynolds; that all he knew of it was what Carten subsequently told him. All agree that nothing was ever done in consummation of the conversation, if it actually occurred.

Personally, I believe that Carten deliberately lied. I do not believe that there is a word of truth in his testimony. I do not believe that any man who reads the record can come to the conclusion that he speaks the truth. I do not believe that he told the truth. On the contrary, I believe that he deliberately lied, and lied because he knew the man against whom he lied could not be produced to tell the truth.

But even if we should accept the testimony at its face value, it does not prove that any man was bribed in the election or that any vote was corruptly cast by reason of the offer that was made. So that the proposition of the majority of the committee to throw out this ward is absolutely absurd on its face. There is nothing to it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to a question there?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Yes; but make it very short.

Mr. RAKER. Yes. I have read this from the gentleman's report, and I would like to get correct information upon it: "It is nothing but a limitation upon the amount that the candidate may expend out of his own money."

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I have already gone over that.

Mr. RAKER. I know that. It is suggested also that there is no limitation upon the committee?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Absolutely none.

Mr. RAKER. The question I desire to ask is, Was Kirby a member of the congressional committee?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. He was not. As I said before, what was contemplated by the law was that the congressional committee or any other persons who associated themselves together in the interest of the candidate should be considered as a committee. All that was required of any of them was that, on the demand of five electors, they should make a statement of expenses. That was all that was required of Kirby. The demand was never made, and Kirby's failure to file a statement in any event could not affect in any way the election of Catlin.

Now, in the eighteenth ward, they charged the corruption of William J. Sheehan and others. William J. Sheehan was a former Democratic committeeman of the eighteenth ward. He was succeeded by a man by the name of Byrne, I think, after a very bitter fight. There is evidence in the record of a great deal of feeling between Byrne and Sheehan, which largely accounts for the action of Sheehan in this particular instance.

Now, it is claimed that Hank Weeke, who was the Republican member of the congressional committee for the eighteenth ward, was seen to drive up to a polling place, take out of his pocket a wallet, and hand to William J. Sheehan a bunch of bills; that afterwards Sheehan gave $5 to a fellow named Murphy, and $2 to John C. Russell, with instructions to go and work for Catlin and Miller, Miller being, as I remember, a Democratic candidate for judge of the court of criminal correction. There is absolutely nothing in the record which shows the character of the transaction between Sheehan and Weeke. For all that the record shows, Weeke may have been paying Sheehan a debt. Nothing is shown to the contrary. There is absolutely nothing to connect the money that Weeke gave to Sheehan with Catlin.

Again there is no effort to follow the money which Weeke gave to Sheehan in order to show what Sheehan did with it. The only evidence is that Sheehan did give to those men—Thomas Murphy and John C. Russell—$5 and $2, respectively. I want briefly to refer to the evidence of these two men. Murphy testified on cross-examination as follows:

Q. You were not induced by the $5 to vote for Mr. Catlin and Mr. Miller, were you?—A. No; he told me when he gave me the $5 to go and work for Mr. Catlin and Mr. Miller and get all my friends.
Q. You did that, did you?—A. No, sir.
Q. Then you were not corrupted by it, were you?—A. No.
Q. It did not influence you to vote for anybody, did it?—A. No.
Q. And you took his money and never told him you would not do it?—A. I never told him anything. I accepted his money and bid him good-by.
Q. And used the money yourself?—A. Yes.
Q. You did not let him know you thought he was doing anything wrong in giving you the money?—A. I never told him anything at all. I just accepted it. I always do. I never refuse money.

[Laughter.]

From which I think is a fair inference that Mr. Murphy is not only a financier, but a philosopher, and that he was not corrupted. The testimony of Russell was to the same effect. He had already voted when he got the $2 from Sheehan. He testified that he had voted for Gill. In fact, both of these men voted for Gill. Neither one of them ever did vote in consideration of the payment that was made by Sheehan to each one of them. So it seems to me that that charge absolutely falls, especially in view of the consideration which is involved in the relationship between Byrne and Sheehan, which would make Sheehan have it in for Gill, because the Byrne faction, assisted by Gill, ousted Sheehan from the position of committeeman in that ward.

Now, there is a charge of intimidation. Singularly enough this incident took place in the twenty-sixth ward. It is the only instance of intimidation suggested in this case. It appears that Arthur Davis, who, it is claimed, was under indictment, though the record does not show it, came with five other men to the third precinct of the twenty-sixth ward and asked for ballots, which were given, and they went into the booths. Subsequently Arthur Davis was found in the booth with a fellow by the name of Redding. The judge of election immediately told him he must not do that; that he must get into his own booth, indicating the care with which the judges of election enforced the law in that precinct.

While they were marking their ballots, I. Joel Wilson, who was then assistant prosecuting attorney of the city of St. Louis, stood in the door, and Davis, having marked his ballot, brought it over and asked Wilson if he wanted to see it, to which Wilson replied "no." Then the five of them proceeded to cast their ballots, taking them over to the judges, who put them in the ballot box. That is the sum total of the evidence in that instance. The substance of the charge is that the presence of Wilson was intimidating to these men, although it is shown by the evidence that his presence there was accidental, or casual, at least. It is claimed that it especially intimidated Arthur Davis, who, it is said, was under indictment. It is not claimed that anyone of the men did not vote, because the record shows that they all did vote. It is not shown that a single other person was prevented from voting by Wilson's presence. There is absolutely nothing to the charge.

But if there were anything to this charge it would furnish a basis for throwing out the twenty-sixth ward and not the third and eighteenth. Of course, the majority of the committee do not suggest throwing out the twenty-sixth because of this alleged act of intimidation occurring there, for the very obvious reason, and I presume from their viewpoint it is a good one, that Gill had a majority in that ward. Of course, if Catlin had had the majority this would have furnished the same basis for throwing out that ward that it furnishes in the third and eighteenth wards.

I shall not go further into the action of the committee in throwing out these two wards, except to refer briefly to what is said in the minority views with reference to the case which the majority have cited in support of their action.

Everyone who was here durng the famous Horton-Butler contest and the famous Wagner-Butler contest knows that there were developed in those cases conditions of bribery, corruption, and conspiracy the like of which has perhaps never before been found in any election.

I want just briefly to refer to some of the frauds that were found in the Wagner-Butler case, relied upon by the majority of the committee in this case as the precedent for their action. In that case it was shown that a gigantic conspiracy existed between the candidates, the judges and clerks of election, and the precinct workers. In the first place, in the Wagner-Butler case the House and the committee only rejected the precincts in which specific fraud, tainting the entire election in the precinct, was definitely proved. They did not attempt the wholesale elimination of entire wards, as the majority here propose. In that case actual conspiracy to defraud, which included election judges, election clerks, precinct workers, and the candidate himself, was found by the committee. No such conspiracy is even charged in this case. There were organized gangs of repeaters; organized gangs intimidating voters; and in many instances actual violence.

Fraud was found in 63 out of 116 precincts, and as to 41 of these precincts the committee found, after an actual investigation and recount of the ballots themselves in each precinct, it was impossible to determine the true and lawful vote, and therefore the returns from these precincts should be rejected. In the Wagner-Butler case registered letters were mailed to the registration addresses of 25,179 voters. Of this number 12,608 were returned with the indorsement that the parties could not be found at the addresses given. Of the 25,179 names appearing on the officially published registry list, 16,045 did not appear in the city directory. The majority further said in that case that 4,669 of the registered letters bore the indorsement that the parties to whom they were addressed had "removed." Of this 4,669 names, 245 graced the pages of the St. Louis city directory; 425 persons voted in one ward where 205 were registered; 676 voted in another ward where 169 registered. In all, although the law of Missouri expressly provided that no person should vote who was not duly registered, in the 63 precincts referred to 3,017 ballots were cast for Butler and 636 for Wagner by persons whose names did not appear upon the official registry list.

In other words, there were over 4,000 ballots cast by persons whose names did not appear on the registry list. Think of that in comparison with the 31 names alleged and proved in this case to have been cast by persons who could not actually be found at the addresses from which they were registered.

A further comparison of the Wagner-Butler case shows that in one precinct 25 ballots were cast for which there was no corresponding registration, all of which were counted for Butler. In another 45 names were voted and counted twice for Butler and one was voted and counted three times for Butler. In other words, so open was the fraud in that case that the persons repeating did not even take the trouble to vote under other names. They voted twice and three times under the same name.

In another precinct 77 ballots were missing, although the registry lists showed them to have been cast. In this precinct Butler received 237 votes and Wagner 21. In another precinct 62 persons appear to have voted whose ballots were not found in the box. In yet another precinct, 488 persons appear to have voted. Of this number 472, including 45 repeaters, voted for Butler and 14 for Wagner. Three hundred and thirty-two persons voted in this precinct whose names were not on the official registry list.

These are but samples of the frauds that were found in every one of the 41 precints rejected in the Wagner-Butler case.

By comparison with the case which we have under consideration, it seems to me that the frauds proven in the Wagner-Butler case demonstrate absolutely that the facts alleged, proven, and unproven, in this, admitting them all, are not sufficient to warrant the action suggested and proposed by the majority.

Now, I anticipate before we get through this case that some one will suggest that we are authorized to disregard the law and vote on the basis of our own consciences and our own judgment. If we applied the same rule to the conduct of human action everywhere we would be a Nation without law and a people without fixed responsibilities. If every man's conscience was perfect, if every man had implicit faith in other men's consciences, liberty and government might be automatic, and we might expect justice to be automatically the result of government. But so long as men fear others, so long as they fear themselves, as long as they square their actions by the rule of supposed public sentiment, as long they clothe themselves in the cloak of assumed virtue, they will find it necessary to lay down definite and fixed rules by which human conduct shall be judged. We who are assuming the rôle of judges, laying aside our legislative capacity in this case, must judge it upon the law as we find it. We are not warranted here in making law. Theron Catlin was elected under the laws of the State of Missouri, and by those laws he is entitled to have the legality of that election decided.

As I have stated before, I am not defending him because I take the position of the juror who says "I believe the cuss is guilty, but they have not proved it." I do not believe they have in this case placed the stain of guilt upon the hands of Theron Catlin or traced guilty knowledge to his bosom. So far as I can find—and I have read the record with great care—there is absolutely nothing in the case which warrants the drastic, partisan, prejudiced action proposed by the majority. Beside the action which is proposed in this case the steam roller is a toy wagon. I do not believe that there was ever in this House an action proposed which had behind it as little of actual facts, of actual proof, as this case has behind it; not one. I feel that we who are assuming the rôle of judges ought to act as judges—impartially—laying aside partisan prejudices and partisan feelings, to do justice in the case as we find it upon the facts. [Applause.]

Under the leave to print extended in connection with the debate in this case I desire to place in the RECORD excerpts of the testimony as to the specific charges of fraud, bribery, and corruption charged by contestant. The evidence is as follows:

WHAT HAPPENED AT DUBLIN, N. H.

Daniel Catlin, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Early:

Q. You may state your full name, please?—A. Daniel Catlin.

Q. What is your age, Mr. Catlin, and place of residence?—A. I am past 73; my residence is No. 21 Vandeventer Place.

Q. How long have you lived in the city of St. Louis?—A. Over 60 years.

* * * * * * *

Q. Where were you in the summer of 1910?—A. At my summer home in Dublin, N. H.

Q. What time did you go to your summer home at Dublin, N. H.?—A. The fore part of June. I don't know the date. Perhaps the 8th or 10th; somewhere along there.

Q. And when did you return to St. Louis?—A. Well, I don't know the date, but somewhere along about the 18th or 20th of October.

Q. Were you in Dublin, N. H., during that entire period?—A. I was there all the time.

Q. Did you meet Mr. Dan Kirby during your stay at Dublin, N. H., in the summer of 1910?—A. He was up there; yes. He was up there visiting my son, who has a house near me.

Q. What is your son's name, on whom Mr. Kirby called at that time?—A. Daniel Kaiser Catlin.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Kirby with reference to the matter of the approaching campaign?—A. I did.

Q. State, if you please, what that conversation was.—A. I spoke to him about my son's campaign. I told him I regretted that he was going to run.

Q. That is, for what office?—A. For Congress.

Q. In the eleventh congressional district?—A. In the eleventh congressional district.

Q. Was there anything said with reference to the approaching of registration day by Mr. Kirby to you?—A. He said that he thought it was a good thing for him to run; that it would give him a chance to mix up and get acquainted with the people in that district, and it would be a benefit to him.

Q. Well, was there anything said about the prohibition issue, and the necessity of getting out a large vote—a large registration?

* * * * * * *

Q. State, as nearly as you can, the conversation that took place between yourself and Mr. Kirby at the time that you mention, at Dublin, N. H., relative to this subject concerning which you have been speaking?—A. Mr. Kirby said that it was an off year, and it was very essential to get out a large vote all over the State and city; that there was some question of prohibition, and that he thought it was a very dangerous thing; that out in the State they seemed to have gone wild on the subject. I asked him if he thought there was any danger of its carrying, and he said there was.

Q. State all that was said, as nearly as you can recall.—A. I told him that I was very much interested as I was a large property holder in the city of St. Louis, and if prohibition carried, it would be a detriment to the whole State, and there would be a depreciation in property and everything that I had here.

Q. Do you recall anything further in regard to the wisdom of getting out a full vote at this particular time?—A. He said that it was very essential to get out all the German vote; that wherever you find a German, whether he was a Democrat or Republican, that he was against prohibition.

Q. Do you recall anything further that was said?—A. He said that he thought by getting all the Germans registered it would be a help to defeat prohibition in the city of St. Louis.

Q. Was there anything said by Mr. Kirby with reference to rendering any assistance to your son Theron in his campaign at this particular conversation?—A. He said it would require money to hire men to bring out the vote; to get them to register. That is about the sum and substance of what he said in regard to that.

Q. Was there anything said by Mr. Kirby as to his doing anything himself in regard to this matter?—A. He said that he would look after it himself.

Q. Had you had any active experience in politics prior to that time in the way of being a candidate for office, or anything of that kind?—A. I never have been a candidate for office in my life.

Q. Had you taken any interest in political campaigns?—A. There is not a Republican campaign that has been held in the city of St. Louis for the last 40 years that I have not been a contributor to it. There has not been a congressional campaign in the city of St. Louis, either in the tenth or the eleventh district, that I have not contributed to and used all my influence to carry it for the Republican Party.

Q. Where was your son Theron, if you know, at this particular time, Mr. Catlin?—A. He was in St. Louis.

Q. Was he in Dublin, N. H., during the summer of 1910?—A. Only early in the month of July.

Q. About how long did he remain?—A. I think only about two weeks. I don't recollect exactly, but it was a very short time.

Q. In this conversation with Mr. Kirby, you mentioned the matter of employment of people to get out the registration and expenses in connection with the campaign. Was there anything said as between yourself and Mr. Kirby at that time in reference to the question of expenditures which might become necessary in getting out the registration and in the subsequent campaign in the event that your son was nominated for Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, just tell us, as nearly as you can, what was said on the subject.—A. He said that he would look after the campaign—that is, the money part of it. I told him that I would under no circumstances pay one dollar to any ward politician in St. Louis, but having known Mr. Kirby for a number of years as an honest man, I had implicit confidence in what he would do, and he volunteered to see that what money I put up was properly expended to bring out the vote, and see that it was properly registered, and to advertise my son in a proper manner as a candidate for Congress, in case he would run.

Q. Was anything said as to the amount that it might become necessary to expend, during any part of your interview with Mr. Kirby?—A. Well, he told me—as near as I can recollect—he said that to run a campaign for Congress the minimum was about $7,000, and he asked me if he should ask my friends to contribute toward that amount. I told him no, that I could afford to pay for it, and I didn't want him to receive a dollar from the general congressional committee or any individual or friend of mine or of Theron's.

Q. Well, what, if anything, did you do after that with respect to paying over money to Mr. Kirby for the purposes which you have mentioned?—A. He told me that when he got home he would start men out to see that they were properly registered; that he had had a good deal of experience in politics, and knew that I had none, and he would see that the money was properly expended.

Q. About how long have you known Mr. Daniel N. Kirby?—A. Oh, intimately, I should say for about 12 or 15 years. He was a frequent visitor at the house. I had known him socially.

Q. Now, after that time did Mr. Kirby make any calls upon you for contributions?—A. I told him that any money that he wanted for legitimate purposes that I would pay, and that when he got home he could call on my son D. K., who would give him what money was needed, or what money he asked for, up to a certain amount. There was not any amount mentioned, but I supposed by that that the limit would be somewhere about $7,000.

Q. You mentioned "D. K." Do you mean your son D. K.?—A. Yes, sir; Daniel Kaiser Catlin.

Q. Did you have any further conversation with Mr. Kirby relative to the manner in which any moneys that you gave would be expended that you recall?—A. I told him that under no circumstances would I spend one dollar for any illigitimate purposes; that I would sooner see my son in overalls, stemming tobacco, as his father had done before him, than to be elected by a dishonest and corrupt vote.

Q. Will you tell us, in your own words, as fully as you can, all that was said at that conversation concerning the subject mentioned?—A. Mr. Kirby and myself went over to call on my father and his family. I do not remember whether we saw the other members of the family first or not, but toward the end of our visit, Mr. Kirby, my father, and myself were alone; and in the course of our conversation we discussed my brother's candidacy for Congress in a general sort of way. Mr. Kirby asked—I do not know that he asked, but he referred to the fact that neither father nor myself had ever taken any active part in politics, and that we were more or less ignorant and inexperienced in political matters. He then volunteered, in view of this fact, to offer his services in furthering my brother's candidacy for Congress and doing whatever he could to promote his interests. He told my father and me that at the coming election it was likely that the question of prohibition would come up, and that in his opinion it was important to get out a full registration in order to defeat that movement. He thought it would be detrimental to the State to have it go prohibition, and especially detrimental to St. Louis. My father agreed fully with what Mr. Kirby said with respect to that and felt, inasmuch as he was a large property holder in St. Louis, that he himself was personally interested in the movement. And he told Mr. Kirby that he wanted him to use every proper and legitimate effort to get out the registration, whether they were Democrats, Republicans, or German, or Irish, or any other nationality. He wanted the election to represent the true voice of all the people on such an important matter as prohibition was. Father told Mr. Kirby, as I remember it, also, that he had always contributed toward the various Republican campaigns in St. Louis, and that naturally also he wanted to contribute toward his son's; that he appreciated Mr. Kirby's offer, and that he was accepting it because he had the utmost confidence in Mr. Kirby's honesty, integrity, and judgment. He knew that if Mr. Kirby spent any of the campaign money for any purpose that purpose would be one which was both proper and legitimate.

Q. Was there anything said concerning the matter of soliciting contributions from the friends of your father to a fund for promoting the campaign of your brother, the contestee?—A. There was.

Q. What was said on that subject?—A. Mr. Kirby asked my father if he would like him (Mr. Kirby) to solicit contributions from my father's friends and from some of the more influential voters in my brother's congressional district. My father said that he would not; that he felt he was able to pay for the proper and legitimate expenses of my brother's campaign himself, and he did not wish to be indebted to his friends for aiding his son in the campaign.

Q. Was that all of the conversation that you recall which occurred at that time?—A. I think that is the sum and substance of it. I do not remember anything more that was very material.

Q. Where was your brother, Theron, at the time that this conversation occurred?—A. He was in St. Louis.

Q. Was he in Dublin, N. H., at all during the summer of 1910 or fall of that year?—A. He was.

Q. About what time was he there?—A. It was in the early part of the summer; I think early in July—the first part of July.

Q. About how long did he remain?—A. I think about a fortnight—10 days or a fortnight. I do not remember the exact number of days.

HOW THE MONEY WAS SPENT.

Daniel N. Kirby, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Barrett:

Q. Please state your name, residence, and occupation.—A. Daniel N. Kirby; 4142 Morgan Street is my residence—St. Louis; I am a lawyer, a member of the firm of Nagel & Kirby.

* * * * * * *

Q. How much did you contribute to the congressional committee of the eleventh district, Mr. Kirby?—A. I made no contribution—I spent no money for Mr. Catlin as agent or representative in any way. The money that I referred to in the last answer, and all money that I handled or spent, was spent not as the agent or representative, but because of the fact that I had volunteered to some of his friends to see that any money which was expended by them, voluntarily on their part, was properly disbursed for the proper purposes. I contributed in that way about $1,400 that went to the congressional committee of the congressional district. That is my recollection.

* * * * * * *

A. I will try to classify in answer to your question, the purposes—the different kinds of purposes—for which I spent the money, in furtherance of Theron E. Catlin's campaign. My plan was to introduce him as widely as possible to the voters in that district—advertise him as extensively as possible—and to further that purpose I employed a press agent, whose work was to write up the press notices and write up the advertisements and to see the different political editors of the various newspapers, so as to see that the notices were inserted, so far as he could get them inserted, advertising Mr. Catlin's candidacy, and the meetings that Mr. Catlin held or attended, and the speeches that he would make, and any political gossip that was going around that was favorable to his candidacy. Do you want to know what that cost me?

Q. Yes; you may state the cost of that.—A. Well, I paid the press agent, the man that I employed—I paid him about $400.

A. I paid out for the posters—and all these other kinds of advertising, outside of the newspapers advertising—posters and cards and dodgers for ward meetings, and advertising like that, not advertising in the newspapers themselves, about $350.

Q. Now, Mr. Kirby, what was the cost of these transparent slides and the amount that you paid to the various picture shows for displaying the slides on their curtains?—A. I have no recollection as to the number, but to the best of my recollection as to the amount, I think it was over $50.

Q. Now, can you give the names and amounts paid to any persons to defray the expenses of ward meetings?—A. No, I don't remember, except to this extent: I remember in one case I paid about between $50 and $54 or $55 on a printing bill which had been incurred by a ward organization in advertising the different candidates on the Republican ticket, including Mr. Theron E. Catlin.

Q. Did you pay any money to any member of the congressional committee, in the eleventh district other than the amount that you contributed to the organization, through its treasurer?—A. Yes, I gave money to the Republican city committeemen who represented the different wards which had precincts in the eleventh congressional district; I did that with specific instructions as to what they were to do with it; before I gave them the money I called them together and told them that I was going to represent some gentlemen who were interested in promoting the candidacy of Theron E. Catlin, and I told them that I did not represent Theron E. Catlin's candidacy, and I would not represent him. I told them that I would have certain money to spend, and that I was going to determine the amount that would be spent; that I had had experience in politics, and I was chairman—I told them this—of the executive committee of the precinct organization in my own ward, and had been for a great many years, and I know what it cost to conduct a campaign properly, and I told them there was not going to be any barrel tapped in promoting Mr. Theron E. Catlin's campaign for Congress in the eleventh congressional district; and that there was not going to be a dollar spent by me or through me except for the purposes which I considered proper and in amounts which I considered reasonable for the needs and the proper conduct of the campaign in that district; I told them further that I intended, in working with them as committeemen in the different wards, to furnish a reasonable amount of money to meet what I regarded and would regard from time to time as the reasonable needs of the district for the purpose of properly advertising the candidate, but that I was not going to throw away any money, and that I was not going to buy a single vote, and I was not going to make any trades, and that I did not want anybody who worked with me or worked under me to do anything of that kind. I told them that the candidate would rather be defeated than to have anything done on his behalf that might—or by anyone else, who was trying to help him—of which he would be ashamed afterwards if the fullest possible light was thrown on it. And then I took up with them the amount which I was willing to hand to them at that time as committeemen in charge of the different wards for the purpose of seeing that a full vote was registered. I had previously had instructions from Mr. Daniel Catlin, father of the candidate, Theron E. Catlin, to spend money with reference to registration, without regard to whether we were sure that the people who registered were Republican voters or not. We figured, and it was our judgment—I told the father of the candidate that the fuller registration we could get out, especially in view of the fact that the campaign for State-wide prohibition was on, and that the district was full of German-American citizens, most of them who liked their glass of beer, and did not want to be denied the privilege of getting it when they wanted it—that I thought the more of the stay-at-home—the ordinary stay-at-home—vote we could get out in the district and get registered the more would be the Republican gains, and the result proved that my estimate was correct. For the purposes of registration I turned over money to the Republican committee, who represented the different wards which had precincts in the eleventh congressional district. I turned over to them, and used in that way, approximately $1,300.

Q. Will you state the amount that you gave to each committeeman for that purpose?—A. No; I can not tell you the amount that I paid each committeeman.

Q. Can you state the aggregate sum that you gave to them?—A. I can give you, with a fair degree of accuracy, what the total amount was that I spent in that way; I can not tell you the total amount that I gave to any one committeeman.

Q. Well, give the aggregate amount.—A. I gave—paid—to the different members of the city committee, for the purpose of employing workers, who were to work for Mr. Catlin's campaign on election day, about $2,400; I figured that, from my own experience, in my own ward, as I had worked different parts of St. Louis, that in order to get out the Republican vote properly, and canvass all the precincts properly, during the whole of a long election day, it would take an average of from three to four, and in some precincts perhaps five men; on an average say four men to a precinct that would do the work thoroughly, because I gave instructions that the work was to be done thoroughly; that I wanted the workers on election day to compare the registration lists, of which they could get copies, with the names of the men who voted, as the men voted, so as to keep an account of the Republican voters in the district who had not voted, and then to go from house to house, and telephone, and do everything else they possibly could to get the Republican registered voters to come in and vote at the polls on election day. My instructions, when I paid the ward committeemen, and the men for the doing of the work, was substantially the instructions that I gave them at the time of the registration. I told them I would not spend a dollar for the purchase of a vote, and would not spend a dollar for the making of a trade—trading votes—and I would not sanction or permit the trading of any votes; that I would not spend money for anything except printing bills, and other bills, where we had to buy materials, or rent halls, or hire bands, etc.—I would not pay for services of any kind, except actual work being done in the canvassing of the different precincts, and paying men for taking their time to actually do the work.

Q. What was the sum of money that you paid to the city congressional committeemen for the distributing of those flags? First, I want to know what it cost for the flags, and then the sum of money which you contributed to the committeemen; that is, the congressional committeemen, who were also city committeemen; you understand that? That the congressional committeeman is a city committeeman—they are the same?

Q. About how much?—A. The flags cost me $700; I can't give you that—you asked that—but I can't give you even approximately the amount of that, because I was never informed of exactly how much of the money I furnished to those committeemen from the different wards, for that and other purposes, was, in fact, used for that purpose.

Q. How much did you contribute to the committeemen for the purpose of distributing the flags, and other purposes, that you have suggested?—A. I paid them about $2,300 in all, for all of the labor, all of the work, all of the campaign, and visiting work which was done between the registration day and the election day. The distribution of flags was not the only work or service for which I needed the help of the workingmen in every precinct in the different wards. Our plan of campaign was to have the candidate, Mr. Theron E. Catlin, actually meet in person just as many of the voters in his congressional district as he had time to meet. I thought the best way in which he could meet those voters, and make friends with as many as he had time to meet, would be by going through the congressional district.

Q. Now, Mr. Kirby, did you pay out any other sums of money for any other purposes at any other time than those that you have already detailed in your testimony?—A. Yes; I paid for advertising in the newspapers, in entertainment programs, in church programs—church fair programs—in the negro newspapers, the Jewish newspapers, in the Bohemian newspapers, the Russian newspapers—if there is any other kind of newspapers they escaped me—I don't know it. Up there in that district, in the different parts of the district, those papers all circulate, I believe; and I used them, with the exception of the large morning dailies in St. Louis; I have no recollection that we advertised in them; our advertisements in them were through the services of Mr. Lewis, who was the press agent who wrote the notices for that and the political notes, rather than what was in the advertising column. Now, altogether, for newspaper advertising of that kind, I spent about a thousand dollars.

Q. How much did you pay Mr. Haller?—A. I paid Mr. Haller altogether for that, and some other painting—I think he painted some signs or banners—some other signs in addition to the portrait—my best recollection is that it was $70 or $80; the total amount that I paid him for all of that headquarters' work, the signs and banners and lights and so forth, at headquarters was about—well, $300 or $350. Not in excess of $350.

Q. Now, Mr. Kirby, did you expend any other sums of money out of this fund?—A. Yes; I spent money for the hire of automobiles on election day for the use of the committeemen in the different wards.

Q. That is to say, you paid each one $25?—A. Yes; I paid them $25—allowed them that for hiring automobiles.

Q. That would be $225 all told?—A. Yes; about $225 or $250. I think there was one of them who wanted two, I am not quite sure about that, Mr. Barrett; I know one of the committeemen asked for two; whether it was in the twenty-sixth or twenty-seventh ward. I don't know—where the votes are more scattered, and the precincts and voting places are far apart, where we found it most congested, because of the fact that the voters had moved in in great numbers—they had 1,600 or 1,700 voters in some of the precincts, and there was a long distance to cover; I know one of the men said that he would want two. Whether he got two automobiles or not I don't remember; I spent altogether about $250 for automobiles.

TESTIMONY AS TO LACK OF KNOWLEDGE ON THE PART OF THERON E. CATLIN AS TO HIS FATHER'S EXPENDITURES.

Theron Catlin. Cross-examination, by Mr. Barrett:

Q. You don't know what transpired in the meeting?—No, sir; I do not—father and I left.

Q. Sir?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did they tell you anything about it?—A. I never heard a thing about it.

Q. Never heard a thing about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did your father or brother ever tell you anything about the amount of money they expended?—A. Never mentioned it; I never knew a thing about it until it came out.

Q. Did you sister say anything to you about the money?—A. No, sir; it was never mentioned.

Q. And the members of your family, except your brother, Daniel K. Catlin—they were all at this meeting that was held in your house?—A. At this meeting my father and mother and sister were there.

Daniel Catlin, sr. Cross-examination, by Mr. Barrett:

Q. Any moneys that you paid out to your son on account of your son's campaign, have you charged it up against him in any way?—A. I haven't paid out any.

Q. Sir?—A. I haven't paid out any.

Q. Well, this $10,000?—A. Oh, you mean that?

Q. Yes.—A. Why, no. It is charged up to me.

Q. I say, have you charged it up against your son?—A. Have I?

Q. Yes. In the nature of an advancement?—A. Why, of course, not. My son never would have heard that I had given this money if it hadn't been for this contest.

Direct examination of Daniel K. Catlin by Mr. Early:

Q. Was your brother Theron E. Catlin, the contestee in this case, present at any conversation between yourself and your father, or between yourself and Mr. Kirby, at which the subject of expenses of the campaign was mentioned?—A. He was not.

Q. Do you know whether or not the contestee, Theron E. Catlin, knew anything of these expenditures being made by Mr. Kirby at any time?

The WITNESS. No; he did not know.

Q. I ask you whether you know or not?

A. Of my knowledge they were never mentioned.

Direct examination of Irene Catlin Allen:

Q. Did you ever discuss with your brother at any time the expenditures?—A. With whom?

Q. With your brother, the contestee.—A. Before the election he told me he was only allowed to spend some several hundred dollars, and was going to stay well within that limit. That was the only time he ever mentioned money to me.

Q. How did that conversation arise, Mrs. Allen, between you and the contestee at that time?—A. It was before the nomination. He was talking about what he would have to do, and the speeches he would have to make, and so forth. I asked him if the campaign would cost money, and he said he was allowed to spend so much.

Q. How much did he say?—A. Some several hundred dollars; I do not remember—some four or five hundred dollars.

Q. That was the only conversation you had with him?—A. That is the only conversation relative to money I ever had with him.

Direct examination of Daniel Kirby by Mr. Barrett:

Q. During all this time, while you were spending this money in the furtherance of Theron E. Catlin's candidacy, you were doing it at the request and acting for the father and the brother of Theron E. Catlin, I understood you to say?—A. Well, I was doing it as a volunteer, having gone to them in the beginning, and having offered them my services, thinking that I might be of personal service to them, because of the fact that I knew that they were totally inexperienced in politics, that they had no idea of what the reasonable amount would be to expend for reasonable needs of the campaign, or spend it in the right way or for legal purposes, and I thought I could be of service to them, by helping them out to the extent of my judgment and experience, and in that way I would be of help to them; they accepted my voluntary offer of service, and after that time I spent their money to further the campaign.

Q. You were acting for them, for the son and for the father?—A. I was acting entirely for them and not for Theron E. Catlin, who was the candidate—with whom I had no relation of any kind during the campaign with reference to any expenditures of money, and as far as I know, and as far as my information goes, I do not believe he knows to this day just who contributed to his campaign, or what anybody contributed to his campaign—or just where I got the money.

Q. Did you receive any money from Theron E. Catlin?—A. Not a dollar.

Examination by Mr. Early:

Q. Was the subject of campaign expenses on the part of Theron E. Catlin ever mentioned by you, or by anyone in your presence, at a time at which Mr. Catlin was present?—A. No; at no time in the presence of Mr. Theron E. Catlin did I ever take part in or hear any conversation relative to campaign expenses.

Q. Did you ever say anything to Mr. Theron E. Catlin with reference to his consent in the making of any expenditures which you have detailed here to-day?—A. I did not.

Q. Have you ever discussed the subject of expenses with Mr. Theron E. Catlin at all during the campaign?—A. I never had; had no talks with him whatever on the subject.

Q. Did you have any way of knowing, Mr. Kirby, as far as you are aware, the amount of moneys which you may have spent in the time that you were expending them, or at any other time?—A. He did not.

Q. Did he ever ask you to represent him in any way in the matter of the conduct of his campaign?—A. He did not.

Q. Did you have any authority from him, in any respect, to do or not do anything whatsoever, from the commencement of his candidacy until after the polls had closed in November, in this election?—A. No, sir; nothing at all.

I want to qualify one of my last answers by saying that, as I testified before, I think once or twice throughout the campaign I did speak to him about subjects that I thought it would be well for him to discuss in the meetings when he made speeches campaigning through the district, to this extent—I asked him at different times how the campaign was coming on, and what kind of crowds attended the meetings, and what interest voters seemed to take in his campaign, but that is the extent of my talks with him.

Q. That is what you were doing, and all that you ever did was done at the instance and request of his father and his brother, Daniel Catlin and Daniel K. Catlin, and friends of Theron E. Catlin?—A. Yes; I represented, for the purpose of spending such money as they chose to hand me for that purpose, his father and his brother and Mr. Chester H. Kern, separately, without any agreement between them, as far as I know.

Daniel Catlin:

Q. Did you at any time tell your son Theron of your conversation with Mr. Kirby as to these expenditures?—A. I never spoke to him in my life—never spoke to him about it during the campaign. He knew nothing about it then, and he would not have known anything about it now only for this contest.

THE ATTEMPTED BRIBERY OF THOMAS J. LEONARD.

Thomas J. Leonard, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. P. T. Barrett:

Q. State your name, residence, and occupation.—A. My name is Thomas J. Leonard; I reside at 5581 Easton Avenue; I am 39 years of age.

Q. What is your business or occupation?—A. Liquor dealer; retail liquor dealer.

Q. Mr. Leonard, are you acquainted with Mr. Theron E. Catlin, the contestee in this case?—A. I have met him a few times.

Q. Did you meet him prior to the 8th day of November, 1910, or during the campaign for the election of Congressman of the eleventh district?—A. Well, I met him on election day, and possibly a week or 10 days or 2 weeks before that. While I wasn't in the party, I was right close to where Mr. Catlin was with a party of friends.

Q. Where did you meet him on the occasion that you refer to as 10 days or 2 weeks prior to the election?—A. Myself and Mr. Carten were walking up Easton Avenue, and there was a gentleman named Reynolds—I always knew him as Doc Reynolds—he halloed out that he wanted to see us, and I said I couldn't stop to talk to him, and I walked on. I didn't know Reynolds very well; just had a passing acquaintance with him.

Q. When was that?—A. Well, that was, I guess, about two weeks before election—10 or 12 days—I don't recall just exactly.

Q. Where was it?—A. That was at Francis and Easton Avenue.

Q. On the sidewalk?—A. Yes; on the sidewalk.

Q. What conversation was had there?—A. I walked away when the conversation was had. I walked on. I didn't stop at the place. Mr. Carten related to me something after he came on.

Q. Did you hear any of the conversation between Carten and Catlin?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or with Reynolds?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Reynolds say anything to you?—A. Oh, nothing, only just "How do you do?" Something in that way; I just know him to talk to, that is all.

Q. Did Mr. Catlin say anything to you on this occasion that you refer to, about 10 days or 2 weeks prior to the election?—A. No, sir.

Q. Anything said about money?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was anything said about your working for or in the interest of his candidacy?—A. No, sir; nothing said, except what I learned through Carten.

Q. What did Carten tell you?—A. Carten told me that Mr. Reynolds would bring Mr. Catlin out some night—that he would like to meet me. I said, "Well, I couldn't agree to do anything like that. Gill is a poor man, and I am a Democratic committeeman."

Q. Was there anything said about money?—A. Yes.

Q. What was it?—A. Well, it was intimated that possibly I could get money if I wanted to make an engagement to work for Catlin.

Q. How much? Was any sum suggested?—A. Oh, yes. Mr. Reynolds said maybe there was $400 or $500 in it if I could get my ward club to go out and hustle for this fellow.

Q. Did the suggestion include the idea that you were to work for Catlin—that you were to vote and work for Catlin?—A. I wasn't near enough to hear what arrangements were spoken of.

Q. Did you accept the offer?—A. No, sir.

Cross-examination by Mr. Newton:

Q. Who is this Mr. Reynolds?—A. Why, Mr. Reynolds always lived in the old twenty-first ward. I don't known how you could identify him. He worked at one time in the license collector's office at the city hall.

Q. Does he live in that ward now?—A. I don't know where he is, only I saw him around Grand and Franklin Avenue or Spring.

Q. How long since you saw him?—A. I never saw him since that night.

Q. As to what the conversation was between the parties you don't know, except what Carten told you?—A. That is all.

Q. You didn't hear any conversation between them?—A. No; none at all?

Q. I want to ask you a question or two more. You say that you are the Democratic committeeman for the twenty-seventh ward?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been Democratic committeeman there?—A. Well, I was first elected in the central committee some time in June or July, about, and I took charge of that ward. The ward was redistricted, and I was elected at the August primaries.

Q. What were you doing on election day? Did you go to any of the precincts?—A. I visited all the precincts; yes, sir.

Q. Did you leave any money there to buy dinners with for the Democratic judges and clerks?—A. I gave the precinct committeeman money to buy dinners with the night before election.

Q. How much did you give them?—A. I believe I gave them $15 or $20. I don't remember exactly the amount.

Q. $15 or $20 for the whole ward?—A. No; for each precinct; that is, to pay the challengers and buy the dinners and suppers for the precinct men.

Q. You gave them for that ward at least $150 for the 10 precincts?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. To be used on election day?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And $5 of that was to go to the judges and clerks?—A. In some precincts it was all right to feed them and in some precincts it was not, and I left it to the committeeman. Some would buy the dinners and some the suppers; there were watchers and challengers and others, and there would be policemen there. I believe it was customary to feed them. There was altogether 12 men. In some places it was customary to buy the supper.

Q. Usually the Republicans paid for one meal for both parties and the Democrats paid for the other meal?—A. Yes, sir.

David Carten, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Barrett:

Q. State your name, age, residence, and occupation.—A. David Carten, 5579 Easton Avenue. I am a painter.

Q. What is your age?—A. Thirty-five.

Q. Did you meet Mr. Catlin about 10 days or two weeks prior to the election of November 8, 1910?—A. Well, I met Mr. Reynolds; there were two or three gentlemen standing talking a few feet away; Mr. Reynolds wanted to know what I was doing down there, if I was working for Mr. Gill, and I told him no. He says, "Call Tom back," and I says, "No, we are in a hurry"—by "Tom" he meant Mr. Leonard; he says, "If you see Tom tell him there is about $400 or $500 in this thing if you see Catlin, and I want you to arrange a meeting for him."

Q. Was Mr. Catlin there at the time?—A. Well, I don't know Mr. Catlin.

Q. Would you recognize Mr. Catlin by his photograph picture?—A. Well, I don't know as I would.

Cross-examination by Mr. Newton:

Q. You say he wanted you to arrange with Leonard?—A. I say he wanted me to tell Leonard, to arrange with Leonard to meet Catlin.

Q. Tell us exactly what language he used, what he said.—A. I will tell you as near as I can. He wanted to know if I was working for Gill, and I said no, and then he wanted to know how Leonard was, and I told him I didn't know, and he says, "Do you think you could arrange for him to meet Catlin?" and I said, "I don't know," and he says, "Will you ask him," and I says, "Yes," and I says in a joshing way, "What is in it?" He says, "$400 or $500."

Q. You were joshing?—A. I said that to him in a joshing way. I says, "What is in it?" and he says "$400 or $500."

Q. You said, in a joshing way, "What is in it?"—A. Yes.

Q. And he said "I guess $400 or $500"?—A. Yes.

Theron E. Catlin, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Newton:

Q. What is your name?—A. Theron E. Catlin.

Q. Are you Congressman-elect from the eleventh congressional district?—A. I am.

Q. Do you reside in that district?—A. I do.

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Catlin?—A. No. 21 Vandeventer Place.

Q. How old are you?—A. Going on 33—32 now.

Q. During the testimony of the contestant, one David Carten testified on behalf of the contestant in the case, and in that testimony he stated that he saw you with some man by the name of Reynolds, on Easton Avenue in this city, and he contended that Reynolds intimated that he would give a certain sum of money to Leonard, the Democratic committeeman; I will get you to state whether or not you ever read Carten's testimony.—A. Yes; I read Carten's testimony.

Q. I will ask you to state whether or not there is any truth in that testimony.—A. None whatever.

Q. I will ask you to state whether or not you ever met Carten or ever heard of him or knew who he was until this testimony.—A. Never heard tell of him or knew of him until he testified.

Q. Were you at any time during the campaign upon Easton Avenue, at Francis, or any other point on Easton Avenue with anybody by the name of Reynolds?—A. I was not.

Q. Was any offer ever made, directly or indirectly, to give Leonard, or any other Democratic committeeman, any money to help you in your campaign?—A. There was not.

Q. As far as you know?—A. Not as far as I know.

Q. Do you know Leonard?—A. I do not; I would not know him if I saw him.

Q. Now, do you know a man named Doc Reynolds?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you ever see him before the campaign, or did you see Doc Reynolds during the campaign ending November 8, 1910?—A. Who is Doc Reynolds?

Q. I ask you; don't you know him?—A. No, sir; I don't know him.

Q. Never saw him?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Never were around during the campaign with Doc Reynolds?—A. Why, no.

Q. And you say you don't know Dave Carten?—A. I do not.

Q. You don't know Tom Leonard?—A. Tom Leonard, I see, testified that he met me in the legislature; if he did, I don't remember; I wouldn't know the man if I saw him.

Q. Did you ever hear tell of him in the campaign?—A. Yes; I went into his saloon once, but he wasn't there; I knew there was such a person.

Q. You knew there was such a person as Tom Leonard?—A. Yes.

Q. You wouldn't know Carten?—A. I never heard of Carten; never heard of the man until he testified.

George W. Rinkle; cross-examination by Mr. Newton:

Q. How long have you known Carten?—A. I guess 30 or 35 years. I have known him since a little boy.

Q. You knew him when in the saloon business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever know of his drinking?—A. I knew him when he was drinking.

Q. Knew of his drinking excessively a few years ago?—A. He did at one time.

Q. Don't you know he got to a point where he had to be taken care of because of his excessive drinking?—A. I knew he went to St. Vincent's at one time; I don't know that he went for that.

Q. That is an asylum?—A. I heard that he was taken there.

Q. Taken to an asylum?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how long ago has that been?—A. A couple of years ago.

Q. About two years ago?—A. Of course, not exact.

Q. To an insane asylum?—A. It is out about 2 miles west of Wellston.

Q. About 2 miles west of Wellston?—A. Yes.

Q. That is about 2 miles from where you live out there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Out in the country?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a private insane asylum owned by some church or something?—A. I don't know how that is.

Q. But it is an asylum—an insane asylum?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know how long he was confined out there?—A. I do not.

ALLEGED CORRUPTION OF WILLIAM SHEEHAN AND OTHERS.

Thomas Murphy, being duly sworn on behalf of the contestant, deposes and says:

Direct examination by Mr. Barrett:

Q. What is your name?—A. Thomas Murphy.

Q. You are a resident of the eighteenth ward?—A. Yes.

Q. When you were around on election day did you see any of the committeemen around?—A. Yes.

Q. Who did you see? State their names.—A. Mr. Weeke.

Q. Hank Weeke?—A. Yes.

Q. He is the Republican congressional committeeman for the eighteenth ward?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did you see him?—A. I saw him at Twenty-fifth and Dodier.

Q. Was anybody with him?—A. Well, yes.

Q. Who?—A. I can not say who was with him. There was, I ain't sure, two or three men in an automobile.

Q. Two or three men in an automobile who drove up to Twenty-fifth and Dodier?—A. Yes.

Q. Where were you?—A. Standing on the corner of Twenty-fifth and Dodier.

Q. Anybody with you?—A. Yes.

Q. You may state what was said and done and what happened.—A. Well, I saw Mr. Weeke get out of this automobile and he walked across the street to where Mr. Sheehan was. Mr. Sheehan was not talking to us.

Q. What Mr. Sheehan is that?—A. James J. Sheehan.

Q. Was he formerly Democratic committeeman for the eighteenth ward?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he a candidate for Democratic committeeman in the August primary?

(Counsel for contestee objects to the question as leading.)

A. No, sir; I do not think.

Q. Was he candidate for committeeman in August and was beaten?—A. Yes.

Q. Go ahead.—A. And he, Mr. Sheehan, left us to walk over to him, just a few steps away, and I saw Mr. Weeke hand him some money.

Q. Hand Mr. Sheehan some money?—A. Yes.

Q. What did Mr. Weeke take out—did you see what quantity the money was?—A. Well, no, sir; I saw him take a pocketbook which was one of those long pocketbooks like.

Q. A long pocketbook?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did he take it; from the inside coat?—A. I never took notice. I saw the money given to Sheehan.

Q. Was it more than one bill?—A. More than one; looked like several bills.

Q. You could not see the denominations?—A. Yes.

Q. And then what did Weeke do?—A. Well, he left; went away in his automobile again.

Q. What, if anything, did Sheehan do?—A. Well, Sheehan just got us fellows together and talked to us to do all we could to work in any way we could for Catlin and Miller, and handed me $5.

Q. Gave you $5?—A. Yes.

(Counsel for contestee objects to this testimony and moves that it be stricken out on the ground it is not rebuttal testimony.)

Q. Who do you mean by us fellows?—A. McCaffery and John Russell.

Cross-examination by Mr. Newton:

Q. You took the $5, did you?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you vote for Catlin and Miller?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you were not corrupted by the $5? Were you corrupted by that $5?—A. I do not understand you.

Q. You were not induced by the $5 to vote for Mr. Catlin and Mr. Miller, were you?—A. No; he told me when he gave me this $5 to go and work for Mr. Catlin and Mr. Miller and get all my friends.

Q. You did that, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not do that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Still you took his $5?—A. Yes.

Q. You knew at that time you would not do it and did not intend to do it?—A. Yes; I accepted the $5. I did not work for them.

Q. Then you were not corrupted by it, were you?—A. No.

Q. It did not influence you to vote for anybody, did it?—A. No.

Q. Did you tell him when you were taking this amount of money and put it in your pocket and used it for your use at that time that you did not intend to vote for either of the men he asked you to vote or work for?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not vote for either of them?—A. No.

Q. What did you say that Sheehan said to you when he gave you $5?—A. He told me—he gave me $5 and said, "Here, you go down and do all you can for Catlin and Miller."

Q. Miller was a candidate for judge?—A. Yes.

Q. Of the court of criminal corrections?—A. Yes.

Q. To do all you could?—A. Yes; and get all my friends to work the same way.

Q. Did he think you were his friend?—A. Yes.

Q. And you took his money and never told him you would not do it?—A. I never told him anything. I accepted his money and bid him good-by.

Q. And used the money yourself?—A. Yes.

Q. You did not let him know you thought he was doing anything wrong in giving you money?—A. I never told him anything at all. I just accepted it. I always do. I never refuse money.

Q. You take all you can get?—A. Yes.

Q. It does not make any difference what conditions are attached to it?—A. No, sir.

John C. Russell, of lawful age, being produced, sworn, and examined on the part of contestant, in rebuttal, deposeth and saith:

Direct examination by Peter T. Barrett, Esq.:

Q. Your name?—A. John C. Russell.

Q. Where do you live?—A. 2341 University Street.

Q. What ward do you reside in?—A. The eighteenth.

Q. Were you in the eighteenth ward on November 8, 1910?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know anyone around Twenty-fifth and Dodier Streets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you meet any committeemen there?—A. I saw Hank Weeke.

Q. Where?—A. At Twenty-fifth and Dodier.

Q. You may state what was said and done.—A. I went over there in a carriage. I saw Weeke offer to hand Jim Sheehan some money.

Q. Do you know how much money he gave him?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Where did he take the money from?—A. Took it out of his pocket.

Q. Did you see the denomination of the bills?—A. No, sir.

Q. What kind of money was it?—A. Greenbacks—paper money.

Q. Were there several bills?—A. Oh, yes; several bills. He had them in his hand.

Q. How did Weeke come there—in a carriage?—A. No, sir; I think he had an automobile.

Q. After he had given Sheehan the money, what did he do?—A. Why, he went away then.

Q. Went away in his automobile?—A. Well, yes; I think he did.

Q. Did you speak to him or he to you?—A. Yes, to Weeke.

Q. Did he say anything to you?—A. No, sir; he didn't say anything to me. He gave Thomas Murphy a $5 bill.

Q. What did he say when he gave Murphy the $5 bill?—A. I didn't hear. I understood from Murphy that he told him——

Q. I meant, did Sheehan say anything to you?—A. Not exactly. He gave me $2 to see what I can do with it.
Q. He gave you $2 to see what you can do with it?—A. Yes.
Q. Did he say anything to you about using your influence working for him?—A. No, sir.

Cross-examination by Mr. Newton:

Q. You don't know where Weeke got the money?—A. No, sir.
Q. Did you hear what, if anything, Weeke said to Sheehan when he gave him some money?—A. No, sir; I was too far away, about 50 feet away.
Q. Was Murphy near?—A. Murphy standing at the corner talking to the crowd.
Q. How far was Murphy away from you?—A. I guess about 5 or 6 feet.
Q. Then he was nearly 50 feet away from Sheehan and Weeke?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You don't know what he gave the money for?—A. No, sir; I don't.
Q. He gave it to him out on the open streets; everybody saw it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You did see it and the whole of the rest could?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He did it out openly, in broad daylight?—A. Yes.
Q. Sheehan took it and put it in his pocket?—A. Yes.
Q. What is it Sheehan said when he gave you the $2?—A. "See what you can do with it."
Q. That didn't influence you in any way?—A. No, sir.
Q. It didn't buy your vote?—A. I voted in the morning.
Q. You had already voted at that time?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did he ask you whether or not you had voted?—A. No.
Q. What did you do with the money?—A. Stuck it in my pocket with the rest of the money I had.
Q. Where did you get the rest of the money?—A. I made it working.
Q. You put it in with the rest of your money, spent it with the rest of your money, did you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you do anything at all for it that day?—A. No; I went home.

Leo McCaffrey, being duly sworn on behalf of the contestant, deposes and says:

Direct examination by Mr. Barrett:

Q. What is your full name?—A. Leo McCaffrey.
Q. Where do you reside?—A. 2513a St. Louis Avenue.
Q. Do you reside in the eighteenth ward?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you around on the 8th of November, 1910—election day?—A. Yes.
Q. Did you meet any of the committeemen?—A. I met Mr. Weeke.
Q. Where did you see him?—A. Met him over there at Twenty-fifth and Dodier Streets, right across the street from the polls.
Q. Who was with Mr. Weeke at that time?—A. Well, he drove up in an automoblie and jumped out of the automoblie and ran across the street and met Mr. Sheehan.
Q. Tell us what happened.—A. Met Mr. Sheehan, called Mr. Sheehan aside and talked to him; whatever he said, I don't know, and he pulled out his pocketbook, a long pocketbook, and pulled out money and gave him several bills. I can not tell how much they were; and got through and went over to the polls, and whatever was done, I don't know.
Q. Who went to the polls?—A. Mr. Weeke. Whatever was done there, I don't know. They called Mr. Murphy and myself, and Mr. Sheehan gave Mr. Murphy some money and gave Russell money. Mr. Murphy gave Russell some money.
Q. Do you remember what his name is?—A. John Russell.

(Counsel for contestee objects to this testimony for the reason it is not rebuttal and is not admissible under the statutes governing contested-election cases)

Q. What did he say, if anything, to Mr. Murphy and Mr. Russell when he gave them the money?—A. He handed him the money and told him to go down and work for Catlin and Miller.
Q. Sheehan was formerly the Democratic committeeman, was he not?—A. Yes.
Q. And was looking to be reelected Democratic committeeman at the August primary?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he elected?—A. No, sir.
Q. He was beaten?—A. Beaten.
Q. Did you take any hand?—A. No, sir.
Q. Were you interested with Burns?—A. No, sir.
Q. Were you interested with Sheehan in any of his fights?—A. No, sir.
Q. You were interested with Burns?—A. No, sir; nobody.

Cross-examination by Mr. Newton:

Q. And you were not influenced by any money?—A. No.
Q. You voted for Mr. Gill, did you?—A. I voted.
Q. Did you vote for Mr. Gill?—A. Of course I voted for Mr. Gill.
Q. You voted the straight Democratic ticket?—A. Yes.

The record further shows that Mr. John F. Byrne, the Democratic committeeman from the eighteenth ward, was the treasurer of contestant's committee and a close personal friend of contestant (Rec., 1606); that one James J. Sheehan was the predecessor of the said John F. Byrne as Democratic committeeman for the said eighteenth ward; that the said Bryne and his friends, after a bitter contest, had wrested the political power from Mr. Sheehan (Rec., 2086), and that much feeling existed between them, and it would be only natural for Sheehan to be opposed to contestant, who had Byrne, Sheehan's rival, as his treasurer.

ALLEGED INTIMIDATION OF ARTHUR DAVIS AND OTHERS.

John T. Gleason, a witness of lawful age, being produced, sworn, and examined on the part of the contestant, deposeth and saith:

Direct examination by Mr. Moore:

Q. State your name.—A. John T. Gleason.
Q. Did you serve as an election official in the election on November 8, 1910?—A. Yes, sir; in charge—Democratic judge.
Q. What precinct?—A. Third precinct, twenty-seventh ward—twenty-sixty ward.
Q. Are you acquainted with Arthur Davis?—A. I am.
Q. Did he vote in that precinct?—A. He did.
Q. On that day?—A. He did.
Q. Did he come to the polling place alone, or with anyone?—A. Six or seven came to the polling place together.
Q. Do you remember who they were?—A. Arthur Davis, Richard Davis, his brother, Chris Davis, Redding——
Q. How do you spell that?—A. R-e-d-d-i-n-g—Will Redding, William Redding, John Heffernan, and a man by the name of Dowd—I disremember his first name—O'Dowd, I think it is—they are all registered from the same place except the two Reddings——
Q. They are all registered from the same place—did they come there together?—A. Yes.
Q. What did Arthur Davis do?—A. He came in and give his name and got his ballot and went over to the booth and Will Redding got his ballot next and they were in the adjoining booths together, and I was waiting on the other persons coming in and giving the ballots, when I discovered Arthur Davis was in Redding's booth talking to him. I told him he'd have to stop that; that if he wanted information he'd have to come to the table with the judges, and with that he lifted Redding's ballot and walked over to I. Joel Wilson—I discovered him standing at the door——
Q. (Interrupting.) Inside the door?—A. Inside the door—inside the polling place.
Q. And what did he say?—A. He come up with the ballots in his hand and asked Mr. Wilson if he wanted to look at them. Mr. Wilson said "No." I said, "You have no right to show them to Wilson or anyone else." With that he threw them on the table, and I turned to the Republican judge, J. Lewis Hall, and says, "Lewis, this ain't right;" and we called him back, and he says, "There's my ballot"——
Q. (Interrupting.) Who says this?—A. Arthur Davis says, "My ballot is there," and we called Redding over, and he took his ballot and went back into the booth with it again, and come back with it folded, and went out.
Q. What was Wilson doing in the polling place?—A. I don't know—just came in there—dropped in there with several other gentlemen.

Cross-examination by Mr. Newton:

Q. Do you know whether or not the ballots were counted as they were polled?—A. Everything was regular; counted fair and regular.
Q. Was this the only irregularity you saw that day?—A. That's about all.
Q. Everything else went off perfectly regular?—A. Yes; I think so.
Q. As a matter of fact, every voter that came in that day did have an opportunity to prepare a secret ballot—that's the only exception?—A. Yes; he's the only one that done that.
Q. But you do know, as a matter of fact, that all the voters except this one did prepare the ballot in secret?—A. Yes.
Q. And that those ballots were honestly counted and cast?—A. Yes.
Q. And, so far as you know, there was no irregularity that day at those polls?—A. Yes; that's the only thing the entire day.

Charles L. Geraghty being duly sworn on behalf of the contestant, deposes and says:

Direct examination by Mr. Barrett:

Q. What is your name?—A. Charles L. Geraghty.
Q. Your address?—A. 1417 Euclid Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.
Q. Where is your place of business?—A. 4821 Easton Avenue.
Q. Did you meet Mr. Josephs on the 8th of November, 1910 last?—A. Yes.
Q. Where?—A. My office.
Q. What time of the day?—A. About 8 o'clock in the evening.
Q. After the election?—A. Yes.
Q. What is his full name?—A. I do not know.
Q. What is his business?—A. He is a clerk in some of the courts, around the four courts, the three C's, the court of criminal correction.
Q. Was anybody present with you?—A. Well, there was Mr. Lavin there, James Lavin, and Mr. Werner, and one or two others—now, I don't remember; I forget who they were.
Q. Please state what was said and done.—A. Well, he came in after the election.
Q. That is, by him you mean Josephs?—A. Yes. Mr. Josephs.

Mr. NEWTON. I object to this, unless it is shown to be in rebuttal of the testimony heretofore given on the part of the contestee.

Q. Go ahead.—A. He came in and says "Well, we fixed you all right." I said, "Yes." He said, "We voted every son-of-a-gun's brother that was under indictment." I said, "That is good." And he said, "We got them Davises in line. We did not have to wait all day for them to vote. They stay around the polling place until about 5 o'clock in the afternoon and we got in a machine and got some man by the name of Wilson, Joe Wilson, Joel Wilson, to come across, and it seems like he had some things in his office, and they had to come in and vote."
Q. Did you have anything to do with raising any campaign funds for the congressional race in the eleventh district?—A. Yes; I raised some money.
Q. How much did you raise?—A. Three hundred dollars.
Q. What did you do with it?—A. I gave it to our committeeman, Mr. Patrick.
Q. John Patrick?—A. Yes.
Q. You did not spend any yourself?—A. No.
Q. You do not know what disposition was made of it?—A. I do not.

Cross-examination by Mr. Newton:

Q. You say that some man by the name Josephs told you that they had voted men under indictment?—A. Yes.
Q. Who was under indictment, who was voted on that day?—A. Well Mr. Davis was the one he had reference to.
Q. Is that the only one you know of?—A. The only one I know of at that time; the only one he said. I don't know of anybody else.
Q. You do not know of anybody else in the district?—A. No; that is all I know.
Q. Do you know whether the Davis indictment was pending?—A. That I can not tell you.
Q. You do not know he was indicted?—A. No.
Q. You can not swear any information was pending against him?—A. I can not swear.
Q. All you know is the evening of the election day Josephs said what you say he said?—A. Said, "We voted Mr. Davis, and got him in line all right."
Q. The extent of the influence according to his statement, extended only to the one party, Davis?—A. That is all.
Q. That is all you know about it?—A. That is all.
Q. Even according to his statement you do not know whether his statement is true or not?—A. I can not say that.
Q. Do you know of any person who voted out there who had not the right to vote in the eleventh district?—A. No; I can not say that I do.

James A. Lavin, being duly sworn, on behalf of the contestant, deposes and says:

Direct examination by Mr. Barrett:

Q. What is your full name?—A. James A. Lavin.
Q. Did you meet a Mr. Josephs?—A. Yes.
Q. In the office of Charles Geraghty, on November 8, 1910?—A. Well, I was there when Mr. Josephs came in. I was not even introduced to him. I was sitting in the office at the time.

Q. What was said and done at that time?—A. Well, this man, as I understood, I heard Mr. Geraghty say, "Hello, Josephs"; I think that is the way it took place, and I just glanced around, and he immediately made the remark referring to politics; he said, "Well, Charlie, I have told you we would get away," words to that effect; he says, "We went down the line with all the boys." So Mr. Geraghty says, "What do you mean?" He said some of these fellows they hald back for some time from the polls and we went and cut loose; and I think Mr. Wilson, that is the name, he came up, and I stopped from reading the paper to listen to what he said; and he says, "We got all the boys; indictments did not stop us; we got them all to cast their ballots"; and he says, "we lined the Davises up"; I think it was Davis, or words to that effect. I do not know what more took place. So after that he left, and I said to Mr. Geraghty, "Who was this man?" He said his name was Josephs. I said he came out very broadly as to dishonest things. Mr. Geraghty said, "Yes; he is a politician"; so I says, "What is his business?" Mr. Geraghty said something in the court of criminal correction, or a clerk there. That is all I know.

THE GIVING OF PRIZES TO JUDGES AND CLERKS.

Francis H. Evers, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by P. T. Barrett, Esq.:

Q. State your name.—A. Francis H. Evers. Twenty-seven. Real estate agent. Republican clerk.

Q. Did you attend a meeting at Judge Reichman's court a night or two prior to that election?—A. I did.

Q. And that was a meeting, I believe, of all the Republican judges and clerks of that ward?—A. Well, it included the Republican workers, you know, ward workers.

Q. What ward was that?—A. Third ward.

Q. Who was the Republican committeeman for that ward?—A. George W. Reichman.

Q. He is also treasurer for the Republican congressional committee for the eleventh district?—A. I don't know about that.

Q. He is also the Republican congressional committeeman for that ward?—A. I believe he is.

Q. Did Mr. Reichman make an offer of prizes at that meeting?—A. Well, there was some prizes offered.

Q. He offered the two judges and clerks returning the highest vote from their precinct for Catlin the sum of $15 each in cash, didn't he?—A. Well, I don't remember just what those prizes were. I remember it was $15 for the precinct showing the best return, $10 for the next best, and $5 for the third best; but I don't know just all that was for.

Q. But those prizes were to go to the judges and clerks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not for any other person?—A. No, sir.

Q. And it was paid on the best return for Catlin?—A. I am not sure about that.

Q. Mr. Catlin was present there when Mr. Reichman made those offers?—A. He was.

Q. And it was within his hearing and presence?—A. It was.

Q. He did not make any objections to it, did he?—A. No.

Cross-examination by Mr. Early:

Q. Mr. Catlin wasn't being represented, so far as you know, by Mr. Reichman in any of these matters, was he?—A. As far as I know, no.

Q. Mr. Reichman was simply speaking for the Republican organization, was he not, so far you knew?—A. So far as I knew, yes, sir.

Francis H. Evers, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Newton:

Q. You testified, I believe, some time last month?—A. I did.

Q. On behalf of the contestant, Mr. Gill, in this contest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Over in the Houser Building in this city?—A. I did.

Q. You gave some testimony there regarding some remark made by Mr. Reichman, regarding prizes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What remark was it that Mr. Reichman made up there that night?—A. I don't remember it exactly.

Q. You don't remember that remark?—A. No, sir; he made a number of remarks.

Q. What remark did he make there regarding prizes?—A. He offered prizes, $15, $10, and $5.

Q. He offered prizes to whom?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Was that a meeting of judges and clerks, or precinct committeemen?—A. I have forgotten.

Q. You have forgotten?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you know that the precinct committeemen were together that night, and that Mr. Reichman was calling upon them to name the watchers and challengers, and so forth?—A. The watchers and challengers were appointed that night; yes, sir.

Q. And they were appointed by the precinct committeemen?—A. I don't know who appointed them.

Q. That is, they were suggested by the precinct committeemen, were they not?—A. I don't know. They were suggested by the men present.

Q. Will you say now that that offer was made to precinct committeemen, judges, or clerks?—A. I can't say.

Q. For whom did you vote for Congress in the last election?—A. I voted for Gill.

Q. Do you remember betting on Gill's election?—A. Yes, sir; and I paid my bet the day after election.

Q. You bet, and paid the bets?—A. Yes, sir

Q. How much did you bet?—A. Didn't bet any money. I bet a bottle of champagne, and I gave him $2 for a half bottle.

Cross-examination by Mr. Barrett:

Q. Prior to the time that you testified on behalf of the contestant in this case, did not Mr. George Reichman call on you before you testified in this case?—A. No; I spoke to him in the car. I met him there.

Q. Did he speak to you about your testimony?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He told you what you were to testify to, didn't he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you say to Mr. Reichman?—A. Oh, he asked only if I had been subpœnaed, and I replied that I had. He suggested that I tell the truth and have no hesitancy about speaking of any money matters.

Q. Did he say something about precinct men?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Evers, as I remember your testimony before, you testified that an offer was made by Mr. Reichman of $15, $10, and $5 to the clerks in the precincts returning the highest vote for Mr. Catlin—$15 each on the Republican ticket?—A. No; I don't believe I testified that way.

Q. That is the way you testified, and it is so reported.—A. No; I didn't say that those prizes were for the clerks.

Q. Who were the prizes for, then?—A. I don't know.

Mr. Evers recalled.

By Mr. Barrett:

Q. The report that you said the election judges were paid any money or offered any money, was not true?—A. I said I did not know what those prizes were for.

Q. And you saw what the newspapers said, quoting you?—A. The papers said that I said they offered prizes for election judges and clerks for the highest votes for Catlin.

Q. And you didn't say it?—A. No; I did not.

By Mr. Newton:

Q. Do you know of any prizes having been given to anybody in that district?—A. No.

August Borcherding, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Barrett:

Q. State your name, age, residence, and occupation.—A. My name is August Borcherding; I reside at 1310 Warren; my occupation—I am not doing anything just now.

Q. What is your age?—A. Sixty. I will be 61 the 20th of July.

Q. You are 60 past?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you officiate in the election that was held in the eleventh congressional district, on the 8th day of November, 1910?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what capacity?—A. Judge.

Q. Republican or Democrat?—A. Republican.

Q. At what ward and precinct?—A. Third, ninth precinct.

Q. Did you attend the meeting that was held at Reichman's court a night or two prior to the election?—A. I did.

Q. And Mr. Reichman made an offer of prizes to the judges and clerks, didn't he?—A. He did; yes, sir.

Q. And when he made that offer Mr. Catlin was present?—A. He was present.

Q. And he made no objection to it?

Q. And the offer of prizes was as follows: $15 to the judges and clerks returning the highest vote for Mr. Catlin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. $15 each?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To the judges and clerks returning the second highest vote for Catlin, $10 each in cash, and to the two judges and clerks returning the third highest vote for Mr. Catlin, $5 each?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Reichman visit that polling place on election day?—A. He did.

Q. Did Mr. Reichman leave some money there?—A. Yes, sir; I seen him leaving money there.

Q. To whom did he give it?—A. If I recollect right, he gave it to——

WITNESS (continuing). If I recollect right, he gave it to Mr. Conway, if I remember right, and Mr. Conway turned it over to Mr. Summers.

Q. Who is Mr. Conway?—A. The Democratic clerk of that precinct.

Q. Do you remember the amount?—A. I think it was $10.

Q. And was that $10 wrapped up and tied with a rubber band?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And had Mr. Catlin's card inclosed in it?—A. I don't know anything about that. I don't think it was, because it didn't look that way to me.

Cross-examination by Mr. Early:

Q. You did not see Mr. Catlin hand anybody any money, did you?—A. Not a thing.

Q. Not a cent?—A. No.

Q. You never heard Mr. Catlin say that Mr. Reichman had any authority to represent him at any time, did you?—A. Not at all.

Q. This $10 that was given was for the ward workers, wasn't it?—A. It was given, if I remember distinctly, for their meals.

Q. That was the purpose for which this money was given?—A. That is what he announced to us. He said, "Boys, here is $10. There is the money for your meals."

Q. And that is what you understood that this money, the only money that you saw passed, was passed for? Was for the purpose of buying or paying for the judges' and clerks' meals?—A. The meals; that is all that Mr. Reichman announced.

Q. Mr. Reichman never asked anybody to accept the money, or offered any money, in your presence to corrupt any votes, did he?—A. No.

Q. He said nothing about your influencing anybody's vote, did he?—A. No.

Q. And, as far as you know, was the election in your precinct conducted honestly and fairly?—A. I am pretty sure that we conducted the election as square as we knew how.

Q. You did the best that you could, did you?—A. The best to our knowledge.

Q. Did you burn up any ballots, or refuse to count any that were cast?—A. Never.

Q. Do you know of anything of that sort being done?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any votes cast for Mr. Gill being counted in your precinct for Mr. Catlin?—A. No.

Q. Do you know of a dollar or a cent being spent for the purpose of corruptly influencing any vote in your precinct?—A. I do not.

Q. And you never heard of Mr. Catlin offering anybody any money?—A. Never in my presence.

Q. So far as you know, he never did, did he?—A. Never did in my presence.

Q. And if there was any money corruptly spent, you don't know it?—A. Don't know anything about it.

Q. Did the Democratic committeemen receive a like sum, or about the same sum, from the same source, for the same purpose—of buying meals?—A. From the Democratic side?

Q. Yes—A. I think they did.

Q. Did you see it?—A. I believe it was $5 that passed from the Democratic committeeman.

Q. And that always prevailed at the elections with either party, did it not, that the judges and clerks were furnished their meals by the committeemen?—A. Yes, sir; on election day—not on revision day or any other day—but on election day and the primaries.

Q. That was done by both committees?—A. As a rule, yes, it was.

Cross-examination of August Borcherding resumed by Mr. Early:

Q. These prizes that were offered there at the meeting, they were offered to the precinct committeemen, were they not, for getting out the voters?—A. How is that?

Q. These prizes that you have spoken of that you say were offered, they were offered, were they not, to the precinct committeemen?—A. I don't know; I don't know anything about that. I heard there was an offer.

Q. You don't know that?—A. I don't know where they came from. I don't know where they should go to.

Q. You don't know whether they were offered to the judges and clerks, or whether they were offered to the committeemen?—A. As I understood it, it was for the precinct that had the highest vote. I didn't make any head out of it at the time.

Q. It was spoken to the precinct committeemen, wasn't it?—A. How is that?

Q. That was a meeting of the precinct committeemen, wasn't it?—A. Well, it seemed that way.

Q. Republican precinct committeemen?—A. It was that way; it was called by the board.

Q. That was a meeting, wasn't it—this offer was made at a meeting of the precinct committeemen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the same meeting that was spoken of by Mr. Evers, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the only offer that you ever heard that was made—was at the precinct committee meeting?—A. Yes; that is all.

Henry Pins, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Newton:

Q. What is your name?—A. Henry Pins.

Q. Where do you live?—A. 1409 Clinton Street.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. Clerk in the license commissioner's office.

Q. Did you hold any official position prior to the election held on the 8th of November, 1910?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. License inspector in the commissioner's office.

Q. Did you hold any position with reference to the political organization in the ward?—A. I was precinct committeeman.

Q. What precinct?—A. The twelfth precinct, third ward.

Q. Were you present at any meeting held in Judge Reichman's court prior to the election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What night was it held?—A. I think it was Saturday night prior to the election.

Q. What, if anything, was done with reference to making rules for the election that night?—A. Mr. Reichman instructed all of the men to get up early and see that the judges were at the election polls, and not to be fooled as they were once before, not to pay any attention to any letter with his name signed to it, that they shouldn't pay any attention at all to any letters, and that everybody was to be there.

Q. What, if anything, was done with reference to calling the roll of the precincts?—A. Why, they called them down the line, from 1 to 17. They were all present.

Q. What, if anything, was done there by anyone, or what was said, if anything, regarding prizes?—A. That was after the meeting was all over, and we were all sitting there joshing, and I said it would be a good idea to give $10 to the one bringing in the returns first, and Mr. Wade said, "We ought to make it $15, that we would get that as quick as we would get $10."

Q. What did the others say?—A. They all laughed about it. That is all that was said.

Q. Were there any prizes offered by Judge Riechman to anyone?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is the sum total of what was said about prizes, is it?—A. Yes, sir.

Robert Olsen, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Early:

Q. You may state your name.—A. Robert Olsen.

Q. What ward and precinct were you in on November 8, 1910?—A. First precinct, third ward.

Q. Were you at a meeting at Judge Reichman's court two or three days before the election of November 8, 1910?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a meeting was that, Mr. Olsen?—A. I understood it to be a meeting of the precinct workers.

Q. What time did you get there?—A. Shortly after 8 o'clock.

Q. What happened after you got there?—A. Well, the meeting was called to order, and Mr. Reichman began giving instructions to the judges and clerks not to pay any attention to any letters or notices to them on the morning of election, and that he would give no notices out; if he had any messages to deliver, he would be at the polls on election morning and deliver them himself. So after that he went on with other instructions. After that we dismissed the judges and clerks, told them that that was all. Then they started in with the precinct workers, selecting the challengers and watchers.

Q. What was said and done there as nearly as you can recall?—A. Well, each precinct committeeman was asked to place a name or two names for challenger and watcher, and I was selected as a challenger in the first precinct.

Q. Did you hear anything said there about prizes or anything of that character, to workers, and if so state what was said and by whom?—A. I heard Mr. Pins make a remark——

Q. Where does he live?—A. I don't know; somewhere on Clinton Street, I think—I am not positive. I don't know his address. He said that they should make an offer to give the precinct men or man bringing in the quickest returns $10, and some one in the crowd, who it was I don't know, said, "You better make it $15"; and it was laughed off and passed on as a joke. Nothing more was done that evening.

Q. During that time did you see Mr. Catlin in the room?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Was he in the room at any time while that conversation was going on?—A. I did not see him.

Q. As a matter of fact, do you know of a cent, or of any prize offer being paid either before the election or after the election?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. You received nothing?—A. No, sir.

Emil Alexander, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Newton:

Q. What is your name?—A. Emil Alexander.

Q. What ward and precinct do you live in?—A. Third ward, fourth precinct.

Q. Do you remember attending a meeting in Judge Reichman's two or three days prior to the election, which was held on November 8, 1910?—A. I remember attending a meeting there. I think it was a day or two previous to the election of November 8.

Q. Do you remember what night in the week it was?—A. Well, I am not positive whether it was Saturday night or Monday night. It was a day or two previous to the election.

Q. You may state who was present at that meeting.—A. Well, there were a number of people present at the meeting. I don't just remember all who were there. I heard there was a meeting of precinct committeemen, a precinct meeting to be held at George Reichman's court, and I happened to be in the neighborhood, and I dropped in.

Q. What were you at the election?—A. I was a clerk.

Q. A Republican clerk?—A. Republican clerk; yes, sir.

Q. You heard of this precinct committee meeting?—A. I heard that there was to be a meeting of the precinct committee at Judge Reichman's court.

Q. Did you go in?—A. I stepped in for a while; yes, sir.

Q. What took place there?—A. The meeting had already convened when I got there, and they were calling the precincts in order to see whether the representative was there for each and every precinct.

Q. Who were they calling for each precinct?—A. The precinct committees.

Q. What, if anything, were they doing with reference to the election; with regard to instructions, or anything of that sort?—A. Well, I didn't hear all the instructions. I stepped out of the room; stepped in and stepped out several times. They had finished calling the numbers and precincts in the ward, and I stepped in again and I heard Mr. Pins saying something about a prize that ought to be offered to the precinct returning the largest number of votes.

Q. Offered to whom? The judges and clerks or precinct committeemen?—A. It was a suggestion that was made; I don't know who he was directing it to; he was just suggesting it.

Q. From whom do you say that suggestion came?—A. That came from Mr. Pins.

Q. It didn't come from Mr. Reichman, then?—A. No, sir; I heard that remark come from Mr. Pins.

Q. Was there any offer by Mr. Reichman of any prizes?—A. The judge said that would be a pretty good idea, and we laughed. They all laughed.

Q. Did they regard it seriously?—A. No; I think they considered it as a joke.

Mr. BARRETT. I object to that as suggesting to the witness.

Q. What do you say?—A. From their actions, I considered it a joke.

Q. Did you hear of any offers of prizes made to any of the judges or clerks?—A. There wasn't any made to me, and I didn't hear of any made to anybody else. I was one of the clerks of election, and there was no offer made to me, and I did not hear of any other judge or clerk being offered any.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some arrangement about the disposition of the remaining time. As we have the right to begin and the right to reply, we want a reasonable time in which to make that reply. I make this suggestion that we go on for half an hour, and then the gentlemen on the other side consume the balance of their time, and that will give us just a half an hour in which to reply.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Does the gentleman expect to have more than one speech in his reply?

Mr. HAMILL. I do not know.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. It is hardly fair to complete the argument on this side, and then have half a dozen speeches on that side.

Mr. HAMILL. So long as we do not limit the gentleman to the number of speeches on his side I do not think he can complain.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I think the custom is for the proponents of the resolution to conclude with one speech.

Mr. HAMILL. Whatever the custom is we are willing to abide by it.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 1 hour and 45 minutes.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. KORBLY].

Mr. KORBLY. Mr. Speaker, this case naturally divides itself into two parts, and for the few moments allotted to me I shall endeavor to discuss but one part of the case.

There is no dispute about the facts, as far as I am concerned; it is just a question of conclusion, and I will begin by directing the attention of the House to a letter which one of the counsel for the contestee was kind enough to send me through the mail yesterday. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 3, 1912.

Hon. C. A. KORBLY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your attention is respectfully invited to the accompanying extracts from the Washington Post and Washington Times of recent date:

"Patrick Gill, Democratic contestant in the eleventh Missouri district, was defeated by a plurality of 2,500 in the Democratic primaries Tuesday.

"Theron E. Catlin, Republican contestee, was renominated without opposition in the Republican primaries on the same day.

"The foregoing result was attained at a direct primary. It is a true expression of popular sentiment at home, where the people, Democrats and Republicans alike, know the facts.

"The registered will of the people vindicating Mr. Catlin and repudiating Mr. Gill confirms the judgment of the Democratic Supreme Court and Legislature of Missouri in dismissing all Democratic contests of Republican State officials elected at the same time the election in the eleventh congressional district was held and by the same election officials, registration and naturalization, in that district.

"The Democratic State contests were dismissed because of lack of evidence of fraud or corruption in every congressional district of Missouri, including the eleventh district.

"Can the majority report of Election Committee No. 2 be justified or honestly sustained in the light of these and all other facts in the case?"

Very truly, yours,

E. C. BROKMEYER,
Associate Counsel for Mr. Catlin.

Now, it might have occurred to Mr. Brokmeyer that in view of the rosy prospects for Republican success at the coming election there might have been several candidates in the district seeking the nomination. As a matter of fact, there were three candidates seeking the nomination on the Democratic ticket, and Gill went down. Democratic prospects brought out the candidates. As one of the committee, I am not very much impressed with the argument adduced in this irregular way by the counsel for the contestee.

Now, as I have said, this case naturally divides itself into the question whether or not Catlin is entitled to his seat; and then, if it is decided that he is not, whether or not Gill is entitled to the seat. On the first branch of the case I desire to make a few observations. The corrupt practices act of the United States, like its prototype, the corrupt practices act of Missouri, had for its purpose the giving to the public of knowledge concerning the use of money in elections.

The contestee in this case, who is only 32 years old, who is only a graduate of Harvard University, whose experience is limited to one term in the Missouri Legislature, called to his assistance, directly or indirectly, one of the most astute lawyers in the State of Missouri, and one time partner, if you please, Mr. Speaker, of the present Secretary of Commerce and Labor. It was through this astute lawyer that the money—$10,200—was expended. I will take the minority report. I do not have to go to the record to read:

The testimony in this case shows that the contestee spent, in securing his election, the sum of $551. The maximum amount which he could legally expend under the law of Missouri was $662, and it is not claimed that the contestee personally exceeded the limit in his personal expenditure. But the evidence further shows that the father of the contestee, Daniel Catlin, expended, to secure the election of his son, the sum of $10,200.

If there is anything proven clearly in this case it is that the spirit of the corrupt practices act of Missouri and the spirit of the corrupt practices act of the United States was violated, for—I quote again from the minority report this excerpt from the testimony of the contestee's father:

My son would never have heard that I had given this money if it had not been for this contest.

Can the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], can the gentlemen from the other side of the House, have any doubt on the proposition that it was the intention of the parties to these transactions that the dear public should never know about what took place? The contestee can not be allowed to close his eyes to what took place. At the time the dinner was to be given at the home of Mr. Catlin's father, Mr. Goldstein came to the contestee and asked him whether or not he had invited Dan Kirby, and he answered that he had not, and Goldstein said, "Then I want you to have him there," and Mr. Catlin invited him. Why should he invite Dan Kirby, the great lawyer and astute politician, to his home? Kirby did not even live in his district. Yet he invites him to his dinner table, together with his manager, Mr. Goldstein, and eight or nine members of his campaign committee.

They sit down to dinner, and when the dinner is over the astute lawyer and politician, who seems to have been brought into the case to show the contestee how to evade the law, said to him, "Let's get down to business. I think you better leave the room." This contestee, living under the same roof with his father, who gave $10,200, eating at his breakfast table, having office room in his office, access to his books, was not put upon notice by this suggestion that a man outside the district should be invited to the party councils at his father's board! When he was invited to leave the room, he meekly obeyed. He avoided means of knowledge. It will not do for the contestee and it will not do for the father and the brother and the sister and the other parties to this dinner to say that money matters were not discussed. That would be to overthrow the very evident purpose that was apparent through the whole transaction, that they desired to expend $10,200 in bringing about the election of Theron E. Catlin, and not have anybody known anything about it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I prefer for my part, as a judge in this case, to disregard the statements of interested people and to give credence to the facts that speak so forcibly and eloquently.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KORBLY. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to his position before the committee. The gentleman during the hearings of the committee said:

There is no question if a sufficient number of votes to vacate the election were fraudulently obtained, but if he put in ten and that would not change the result, I am free to say as a judge in a case that I would not regard it.

Has the gentleman changed his mind since then?

Mr. KORBLY. I have not. If this money had been spent by strangers to the contestee I would not undertake to hold him responsible, unless enough votes were corrupted to change the result, but for him to have one, two, three, four of the people with whom his everyday life is cast, a party to the thing, and then undertake to say to the American people or to me as a judge in this case that he knew nothing about it and that his intentions were good is not very convincing nor persuasive.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman point out why his father or any of his relatives would stand in a different position with reference to the law of Missouri than any other person would?

Mr. KORBLY. The statute is clear. It says he shall not spend himself or by or through others. He can not escape the conclusion that these men were acting for him as his agents. They came out of his house. They were practically of his rooftree and hearthstone. He can not do by another what the law will not allow him to do himself, and so far as the case in the Missouri court deciding the questions involved at this bar are concerned, I wish to say that the expenditure of $10,200 by the relatives of this contestee was not in any wise whatsoever involved. This case is on trial at the bar of this House. This is the proper tribunal, and what has been done and what has been said about it elsewhere can not and will not be allowed to control the action of this court.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KORBLY. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHARP). The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I am seeking light and information.

Mr. KORBLY. But my time is gone.

Mr. RAKER. I know it has gone, but this is important to get an answer.

Mr. KORBLY. I yield if I may have the time.

Mr. HAMILL. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. I understand in section 646 of the Revised Statutes there is a provision that the candidate must make a statement and can expend only so much money.

Mr. KORBLY. That is my understanding.

Mr. RAKER. And under a section following it provides that a committee may spend money for a candidate.

Mr. KORBLY. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. It says two or more persons. Is there any provision of the Missouri law that one man may go out, voluntarily and by himself, relative or otherwise, spend money for the candidate without violating the law?

Mr. KORBLY. In answer to that I will say to the gentleman that in this instance two or more men did it, because Mr. Catlin turned the money over to Mr. Kirby. It was the act of two people, and they are constituted a committee by the law. They did not report and did not intend to report.

Mr. RAKER. They made no report?

Mr. KORBLY. None whatever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to enter upon a case of this kind. I especially like to see young men enter public life and take a part in affairs relating to the National Government, their various States, counties, and municipalities. I feel that the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Catlin, under other circumstances might have been a very valuable Member of this House—a man of sufficient means to take the time to come here and devote his services and energy to this work, a graduate of Harvard who, no doubt, is abundantly able to cope with the various matters that come before this body for action and with time and ability to give them proper and thorough consideration; but under the circumstances and in view of the testimony and facts contained in the record in this case I have been constrained to agree that he ought to be unseated and that his opponent, Mr. Gill, ought to be seated.

I can not agree that a man can enter upon an election, that more than $10,000 can be expended on all sides of him, and that the candidate can go through that election, hearing and seeing what the money has purchased, and knowing that the wheels and machinery of the election are turning around with great rapidity, and knowing that much advertising is being done on his behalf—I can not but believe that a man of his ability, a man of his experience, a graduate of the great university of Harvard, could not go through an election of that kind without knowing something about where the money came from. Why, Mr. Speaker, 35,000 American flags with white streamers were placed in the hands of all the school children of the district with "Vote for Catlin for Congress" on them. An electric sign was displayed in Catlin's candidacy with his photograph. Men went about soliciting votes and getting everybody they could interested in his election.

Then we find that this money was being provided by those of his own household, and that all of the members of his family knew of it and sanctioned the expenditure, and that the brother of contestee, his sister, and the attorney for the family all knew that his father was giving the money and his attorney, Daniel E. Kirby, was attending to the affair, all going about doing what they could to elect Theron E. Catlin to Congress. I can not but believe that some information must have sifted through and informed him that money was being expended in his behalf. I realize that a certain amount of money must be expended in every election. I realize that certain advertising must be done for candidates, and especially new candidates, by way of advertising in the newspapers of the city or of the State, and by flags, if you please, and otherwise. I realize all of these facts, but the Missouri law provides a way in which that could be done, and that way was through a committee, which must account for money received and expended, and in this case they did not even constitute themselves a committee, but expended the money without making any report whatever, and with the evident intention of evading the law. I say that while I realize a certain amount of money must be expended, there is a legitimate way to do it; there is a legitimate way to account for it, so that the people could have full knowledge and information of what had been done.

The testimony in this case shows that an arrangement was entered into by Daniel Catlin, the father; Daniel K. Catlin, the brother, and Daniel E. Kirby, a prominent lawyer, by which money was to be furnished Mr. Kirby by the father, and that he was to expend the same in procuring the election of Theron E. Catlin to Congress. From all the testimony it would appear that Mr. Kirby was trying to avoid violating the corrupt-practices act of Missouri, which provides that not more than $962 could be expended by the candidate or others in his behalf, and for that reason it would appear that the contestee was to be kept in ignorance of the expenditures so made under this arrangement. We find that at the dinner given at the house of Daniel Catlin, at which the workers and Mr. Kirby and the contestee were present, as soon as the festivities were over some one remarked, "Let us get down to business," and immediately the contestee retired, and after his retirement the question of money was discussed.

Why did the contestee, who should have been the one the most vitally interested, leave the room at this juncture? Could it have been for any other purpose than to remain in ignorance of the money question? His sister, who lived at home with her father and the contestee, knew of the money being furnished by her father. The check books of the father were at all times accessible to the contestee, and showed plainly the payments to Mr. Kirby.

When the contestee visited the various saloons in the district he entered with one of his congressional committee, but when it came time to settle he left and entered his automobile, asking, as he states, nothing of what the visit had cost nor who had settled, except that on one or two occasions, when he settled with his committeeman for the expenditure. Can any one explain why he took this course, other than to remain in ignorance.

When the judges and clerks of election were called to meet at the offices of his friend and committeeman, Justice Reichman, the night before the election, when prizes of $15, $10, and $5 were offered to those obtaining the largest number of votes for Catlin, two of the witnesses testify in their examination in chief that the contestee was present and must have heard the speech of Reichman and also the offers made by him to those judges and clerks, and was certainly put upon notice, being a lawyer and a business man, that such action was improper, to say the least. And one would naturally suppose that he would desire to know from whence such a large sum of money for the district was to come.

I know the gentleman from Minnesota states that these witnesses disputed that, and say they did not tell the facts upon examination in chief, but we are entitled to rely upon their testimony before the examiner in chief as much as their cross-examination, and, I may say, more so. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in view of these facts, in view of the fact that a large sum of money was being expended and not being accounted for, and in view of the fact that the legislature of which the gentleman was at one time a member has provided means for expending money and means for accounting for the money so expended, I am convinced that the contestee was fully informed, and certainly had sufficient legal knowledge to know that he should comply with the law. As to the seating of Mr. Gill, we find that three-fourths of the unnaturalized voters in that district lived in the third and eighteenth wards. We find that 2,000 unnaturalized persons voted in that election, and it is so admitted by the contestee. It was impossible to trace the whole 2,000, but we were able to trace some 311 of those votes and, while the contestee averred in his answer that those votes were cast for Mr. Gill, we find by tracing those votes directly from the ballot to the poll register, that each and every one of them had voted for Mr. Catlin, and the committee determined that if out of 2,000 votes 311 had been traced and each and every one of them had voted for Mr. Catlin, it was but fair to assume that the whole 2,000 had voted for him and that those two wards ought to be cast out. Therefore the committee voted to cast out the third and eighteenth wards, and by computation we find that the majority for Mr. Gill would be about 431.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I wish to say that I, personally, do not believe that the question of an election ought to rest upon the question as to whether the candidate had himself purchased his election, but no man or men should be allowed to purchase it for him. I think in the Lorimer case, at the other end of the Capitol, very little money, if any, was ever traced directly to Mr. Lorimer; but it was shown that other persons did the buying, of which he was the beneficiary.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. In a moment. The fact that some one who is a candidate or somebody in his interest purchased the election for him ought to be enough to invalidate it, and why? Because if persons are made to know that an election purchased by the candidate himself or some third party for him will be invalidated, then the third party will never purchase an election, knowing it to be corrupt and a useless purchase. So I say in this case that granting Catlin did not allow any facts to sift through to him, and though he did not know of the purchase of this election by his family, his father, his sister, and brother, and counsel, it seems to me it is not fair that he should occupy a seat upon the floor of this House, but that the law and likewise the spirit of the law should be enforced.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman speaks of 311 of the votes being the votes of unnaturalized citizens?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. It is a fact, is it not, that when they consulted the ballots and the registry books they could tell exactly that these voters voted for Catlin, and that they investigated those 311 votes?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes. It is also shown, as I remember it, that they could take the registration books and compare the vote with the registration books and find out exactly for whom the voters had cast their ballots, and they found that out of the 311 each and every one had voted for the contestee.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that none of these 311 persons were called in to testify?

Mr. LINTHICUM. No; they were not called in.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Was it proved that these men were naturalized or unnaturalized?

Mr. LINTHICUM. They went upon the registration books as unnaturalized.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the nativity of the voters was given, but that under the column devoted to remarks they neglected to state the places where they had been naturalized, and so far as the evidence shows there was no evidence to indicate that these people were not naturalized.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I believe some of them claimed they were naturalized by act of Congress. They were omitted and are not included in the 311. The reason why the whole 2,000 were not investigated was that there was not sufficient time in which to do it.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Most of this evidence was brought in in rebuttal?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes; but I do not think it matters much whether it was brought out in the examination in chief or in rebuttal.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I think it is very important.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I yield.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The committee did find upon investigation that 311 of these votes were cast improperly, and as a consequence they threw out 2,000 votes of the same class?

Mr. LINTHICUM. The committee found that 2,000 unnaturalized voters had voted in that district who ought not to have voted. The committee was able in the allotted time to investigate only 311 of those cases, and of those 311 who were found to have voted improperly every one of them was found to have voted for the contestee.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the committee found that 311 had voted improperly, why should you go behind that and find that in addition to the 311 who had voted improperly 1,689 more votes should be placed in the same classification? Would it not have been sufficient to have simply shown that 311 had voted illegally?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I say it was found that 2,000 voted illegally and that 311 were traced and were found to have voted for Catlin.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. As a consequence of that, however, they threw out the entire vote, in the aggregate 9,100 votes, and you say in your report that that was done because the committee found that there were 2,000 unnaturalized citizens who voted in the entire congressional district?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will say that in addition to that the committee believed that the judges were bribed in the third ward, and that the Democratic and Republican committeemen worked in the interest of Mr. Catlin, both in the third ward and in the eighteenth ward.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will, as soon as I get through with this colloquy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Was there evidence supporting the allegation of bribery of election officers?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly; evidence showing that prizes were offered to the judges of election for the highest vote cast for Mr. Catlin.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But that is not within the subject of controversy here.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Prizes were offered in that ward by the justice of the peace elected by the people to the judges and clerks of election in the presence of contestee.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But these bribes were not offered to the election officers?

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I believe we ought to have a quorum here while this case is under consideration. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey moves a call of the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a roll call is now in progress.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I see that Members are returning, and I therefore withdraw the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have just come into the Hall. Did the Chair announce that there was no quorum present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I suggest that the roll call proceed. It is too late to withdraw the point.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he answered "Present."

The SPEAKER. The roll call shows 200 Members present, a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimouse consent for one minute to make a statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On account of the congested condition of the public business it will be necessary for us to complete this case to-night. I hope that the Members of the House will remain here so that there will be a quorum, and no further delay in the transaction of business.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER].

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the contention of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] that there were 2,000 illegally registered voters in the third and eighteenth wards of the eleventh congressional district of Missouri, the district from which Mr. Catlin was elected as a Representative in Congress, I desire to say that there is no evidence, in or out of the record, to show that there were 2,000 illegally registered voters upon the list. There is not a scintilla of evidence showing that number. The only illegally registered voters were 31 in number. True, it is shown that there was a defective registration of 2,000 voters, but a defective registration does not make an illegal registration. I desire to say to the gentleman that before you prove that a vote cast and counted is illegal you must show something more than the mere fact that there was a defective registration. In other words, a man may be defectively registered and yet be a legal voter; and on that proposition there is no need for me to waste much time in argument. That question was decided by this House in the Broad Seal case from New Jersey in the Twenty-sixth Congress in 1840. This House then laid down this rule:

A vote being received as sound, the mere fact that a voter is an alien does not compel the party claiming it to prove the naturalization.

That was laid down as a rule in that case and has been followed ever since; and the mere fact that some clerk has left off the name of the court or something else from the registration list, while it makes a defective registration, does not make out of that alien-born, whose name is enrolled there, an illegal voter.

See report of the majority of the committee in the Broad Seal case on pages 1032 and 1033, Hinds' Precedents, volume I, as follows:

A minority of the committee were of opinion that it was sufficient for the party objecting to the vote to prove that the voter was alien born, and that the burden of proof was thereby thrown upon the party for whom the vote had been rendered at the poll to prove that the voter had been naturalized. And it was urged with great earnestness that to adopt any other rule of evidence would be to depart from the plainest principles of law and reason—to impose upon the party objecting to a vote the proof of a negative, and a negative, too, which nothing short of searching of every court of record having common-law jurisdiction, a clerk, and seal, and in the Union could possibly establish.

Without minutely criticizing the argument, it is deemed proper to inquire to what practical consequences the rule would lead if it be fully admitted; for the proposition is to be taken, not as a mere abstract annunciation of the order of proof, but as practically applicable to the decision of cases of contested election in the House of Representatives.

The committee, as the organ of the House, have a positive affirmative proposition to adjudge and declare before a sitting Member can be displaced or a single vote received for him at the polls can be ejected from the ballot box. Before a Member is admitted to a seat in the House, something like the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction has been pronounced on the right of each voter whose vote has been received; and in order to overturn this judgment it must be ascertained affirmatively that the judgment was erroneous. Prima facie, it is to be taken that none but the votes of qualified voters have been received by officers whose sworn duty it was to reject all others. This principle will be found to have been solemnly and unanimously declared by the committee, as a basis of future action, soon after entering upon the investigation of this case. (See Rept. No. 506, p. 46.)

It is not sufficient that there should exist a doubt as to whether the vote is lawful or not; but conviction of its illegality should be reached, to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt, before the committee are authorized to deduct it from the party for whom it was received at the polls.

Will the mere naked fact that a voter was alien born, in the absence of all other proof, produce such conviction on any candid mind? Is it not already answered, or rather, is not even a presumption from that fact alone precluded, by the judgment at the polls? All foreigners from birth are not disqualified from voting, but only a certain class. Are we to presume that the voter, whose vote has been received by the officers of the election, to be of the disqualified or the qualified class? The question is answered by the unanimous resolution of the committee already referred to, as well as by the reason and analogy of the case.

The committee can not believe that the House of Representatives would eject a Member from his seat upon the mere proof that every man of his constituents was alien born. It is not apprehended that, after an election has been regularly held, the House would even consider an investigation necessary upon a petition which alleged no other fact. * * *

* * * The proper season to demand such proof is at the polls. There the voter is the actor; he comes forward claiming to exercise a right, and there he should prove his qualification. Where the case assumes the form of a contested election between other parties, the disqualification must be made out by the party seeking to overthrow the right of the sitting Member thus acquired at the polls.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there? I have asked the question two or three times, and I will ask the gentleman, Is there any evidence in this record that these men were actually aliens and were unnaturalized?

Mr. SWITZER. I will answer that in this way: My recollection is that the registration list shows that there were 2,000 persons registered in those two wards who were of alien birth, Germans, Jews, or other aliens, giving their places of birth. But the registration list does not show in what courts they were naturalized or that they had naturalization papers.

Mr. RAKER. Did the committee in any instance in regard to any one man that voted determine, as a matter of fact, that he man was not or was naturalized?

Mr. SWITZER. No; I never heard such a proposition advanced when I was present in the committee, but I was not present at all the meetings.

Mr. RAKER. Then, from the record no one can say that a man was nor or was naturalized?

Mr. SWITZER. No; except 31. They sent out a list of names of 4,000 voters from the whole congressional district, not from the two wards, and out of 4,000 they were unable to find 31 persons whose names appeared on the registration rolls, and by that sort of negative evidence we concede that likely out of the 2,000 alien born who were defectively registered that 31 of them voted for Mr. Catlin and were illegal voters, and that these votes should be deducted from Mr. Catlin's vote; but that does not change the result.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Let me read from page 15 of the record, section 53——

Mr. SWITZER. Oh, I can not allow the gentleman to read in my time; I have only 40 minutes. I say that if you will take the time to read the pleadings, and I doubt whether many gentlemen have read this record and the pleadings, although it seems to me it is a serious enough matter that gentlemen ought to read the pleadings and the testimony, especially when you vote to unseat a man. I desire to say that in the matter to which the gentleman from Maryland refers, that while the contestant in his notice avers that there were 2,000 voters that illegally registered and voted for Catlin, the contestee in his answer specifically denies it, so that it throws the burden of proof upon the contestant.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. No; I can not yield. The contestee goes further and makes a subsequent averment in his answer and says that there were 3,000 voters illegally registered under assumed names and in various ways in this district that voted for Gill. That is another set of voters. That is not the set of voters mentioned in the contestant's notice of contest that voted for Catlin. Recollect that these 2,000 men, these foreign-born voters, lived in that ward. So there is no admission in the pleadings; that is a stretch of the imagination. It is specifically denied by the contestee, and he makes a counter averment that 3,000 were illegally registered who voted for Gill, and the contestant filed no denial of that averment. You might say that that was an admission on the part of the contestant, but it would be unfair. The truth of the matter is both parties must produce evidence to support the allegations of the notice of contest and the answer thereto, if I understand the law correctly.

But I do not want to get too far away from the main purpose that I started out on. This House has decided that you must prove something more than the mere fact that an alien born has been defectively registered; you must go further and prove that that man was not a naturalized citizen at the time he voted. Not only that, but the Supreme Court of Missouri, following, I suppose, this decision, has settled this case. That is the very question that came up in the Supreme Court of Missouri, and that court held that a defective registration, some neglect, something left undone by a clerk, as failing to record the name of the court issuing the naturalization papers to the voter or to note that the voter was naturalized, would not disqualify the judges from accepting the vote of the person who appeared and answered to the name on the roll.

I notice that the majority in their report admonish us to follow the statutes and decisions of the proper officials of States in this matter, and if you are going to do that, that disposes of the whole 2,000 claimed to be illegally registered votes. The Supreme Court of Missouri has passed on that question, and, as I said, these men are legally entitled to vote. Before you have the right to reject a vote cast by an alien born because of defective registration, merely showing him to be foreign born, you must not only show that he is not now naturalized, but you must show for whom he voted.

Now, in reply to the contention of the gentleman that Theron Catlin had knowledge of the large expenditure of money during his campaign, that the congressional committee was invited to his father's residence, and that he was present with them, I would inquire of the gentleman what is the purpose of a congressional committee? Why did the statutes of Missouri provide for the election of a city committee which, by virtue of its office in the respective districts throughout the State and cities, would become a congressional committee? Why, it was for the very purpose of looking after the interest of the party candidate.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Daniel Catlin and Daniel Kirby were not members of any congressional committee.

Mr. SWITZER. Daniel Catlin and Daniel Kirby were not members of a congressional committee, but by a stretch of the imagination you might say that they were a voluntary committee under the statutes of Missouri. But whether they were a voluntary committee or not, or just individuals, did not they have the right to expend an unlimited amount of money providing they expended it in a legal way?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Could they expend any money without accounting for it through the courts of Missouri?

Mr. SWITZER. Daniel Catlin could because there is no law under the statutes of Missouri that requires him to make an accounting. If you call Catlin and Kirby a voluntary association, then it was their duty to have selected a treasurer and kept books and accounts and filed a publicity statement under the statutes of Missouri. But if they failed to do that, or if they refused to do that, what right have you to penalize Theron Catlin because of some violation of the law on the part of his father or Mr. Kirby or of some stranger of whom he had no knowledge? I can not understand that sort of reasoning.

Improper acts by a candidate's friends without his participation are of effect only so far as they are shown to have actually affected the result.

In absence of evidence to incriminate him a returned Member is presumed innocent as to acts of agents of his party. (See Duffy v. Mason (New York), 46th Cong., sec. 944.)

But the gentlemen say that there were 35,000 flags circulated in the district. That is the evidence; but there is no evidence that Catlin saw one of these flags. But suppose he did, would not he have the right to assume that a congressional committee whose function was to solicit and collect funds and expend them in the interest of a candidate for Congress, had likely procured and distributed them, and that it was being done in a proper and legitimate manner and in conformity with the statutes of Missouri?

Why certainly. Are you going to turn Theron Catlin out because his father or Mr. Kirby bought 35,000 flags and distributed them in that district? But the gentleman says, turn him out, because Theron Catlin knew that this congressional committee were taking an active interest in his behalf, and yet that was their function. You would not have a committee that would not evince some interest in your candidacy during a campaign, would you? I can not understand the reasoning of the gentleman. He says that the mere fact that this committee had a meeting at Theron Catlin's father's house and that he was there present with them was notice to him, Theron, that his father was spending money in his behalf. How was it? There is something to be proved. The burden of proof is upon the contestant. They say they do not believe the father, the brother, the sister, and the contestee on these matters, because they are interested; but what evidence have you of these transactions except what you have got out of interested parties, if you call these people interested? You have no other evidence of the expenditure of money of the $10,200, except as it has been given to you by Daniel Kirby, who was the agent and attorney of Daniel Catlin. You have no other evidence.

Mr. GOEKE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SWITZER. Certainly.

Mr. GOEKE. Was candidate Catlin in a position to know that his father and brother were spending large sums of money for him?

Mr. SWITZER. Why, the minority of this committee believe that he was not.

Mr. GOEKE. I am asking the gentleman what his opinion is.

Mr. SWITZER. I am of the minority, and I am with them upon that proposition. I do not believe that he knew, and to convince the gentleman I will put this question to him: Suppose the gentleman's son were a candidate for Congress in that district and the gentleman was a wealthy man—and probably he may be as wealthy as Mr. Catlin—and he had a notion to assist his son and knew that his son could only expend $662, especially after consulting with an attorney of high standing that attorney had advised him that he could spend legally any amount of money he wanted to provided that he did not let his son know it, and he was doing that; would he not have done just as Daniel Catlin or any other father would have done for his son?

Mr. GOEKE. May I answer that question?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. One at a time, please. Recollect that this is my first introduction to a debate in this House.

Mr. GOEKE. I would like to answer the question that the gentleman put to me. If I had a son, under the circumstances that the gentleman has detailed, and he would not have discovered that I was spending large sums of money to buy him a seat in Congress, I would disown him.

Mr. SWITZER. The gentleman might do that; but listen to the facts and then make up your mind, not upon what somebody will do who is prejudiced or because somebody will mistreat his own child, or something of that kind. Some people do. Look at the facts. In the summer of 1910 Daniel Catlin was in New Hampshire at his summer home. Theron Catlin was in Missouri, at St. Louis. I will ask gentlemen to follow me just a few moments. The father was in New Hampshire, and he stayed there until just a few days before the election, I think 10 or 12, the very last part of October, before he came home. How could Theron Catlin have access to any checks or stubs of checks that the father gave when he was in New Hampshire? How was Theron Catlin associating with his father at his father's house in St. Louis when that father was in New Hampshire? I do not know whether the father was purposely staying there or not, and I do not care if he did not want to see his son. If he did not want to have his son have knowledge of the matter, that was his business.

Knowing the fact that Daniel Catlin did not get home until the latter part of October, and knowing that Mr. Catlin, having had the advice of an eminent lawyer, knew that he should not notify his son that he was spending any large sum of money in his son's behalf, when the old gentleman came home it would not be expected that he would break his neck to tell his son.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. I desire to say that I am speaking now in defense of Theron Catlin. It does not matter what the old gentleman was doing, so long as the old gentleman was not violating the law, and you can not put your finger upon a scintilla of evidence that shows that Daniel Catlin violated any section of the law of the State of Missouri, nor Theron, either.

Mr. HAMILL. Why should not the father, being a highly honorable man, a citizen of high social and civic standing, have regard for the spirit that regards publicity of campaign contributions as desirable and form himself and his attorney into a committee and let the public know that he was spending $10,000?

Mr. SWITZER. I can not give the reasons. I have given you what I thought the reasons were. I do not care what actuated the father. The fact is that he did not notify the son, and the fact is that he testified that he did not notify the son; the son testified that he did not; the brother testified that he did not. Mr. Kirby testified, and they all testified, and in the face of that affirmative evidence to the contrary, you are going to say that he had notice? If he had heard of some stranger spending two or three hundred dollars or a thousand dollars in his behalf, he would have to go out with a club, I suppose, and stop him, or something of that kind. That is about the sum and substance of this kind of argument. Why, the gentleman himself asked the attorney for contestant whether he meant to say that if a candidate finds that somebody is spending money in his behalf that candidate must go and stop him. He put that question to one of the counsel himself, it so surprised him. Of course, he would not do such a thing, and you would not do such a thing, nor I, especially if you learned that that man is spending the money for a legitimate purpose.

Mr. HAMILL. Will the gentleman yield for another question, and then I promise not to interrupt him again?

Mr. SWITZER. One more question.

Mr. HAMILL. Is it not a fact that under the law the father and the attorney and the brother could have constituted themselves a committee?

Mr. SWITZER. I have said so once.

Mr. HAMILL. And could have expended the money and then obeyed the law and 30 days after the election filed a report, and the son need never have known that a dollar was being expended for him until 30 days after his election?

Mr. SWITZER. They thought they could, I suppose, but they did not, and what right have you to penalize Theron Catlin——

Mr. HAMILL. Does the gentleman remember——

Mr. SWITZER. By kicking him out of his seat?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? It seems to me the gentleman from New Jersey is giving his whole case away. He insists in his majority report that he must have known, and now he says he did not need knowledge which——

Mr. SWITZER. I will not yield any further.

Mr. HAMILL. The logic of the gentleman is very bad.

Mr. SWITZER. But upon this question of notice, and I have given this considerable attention and a good deal of hard study, not maybe as much as some other gentlemen in this House, but I say upon this question of notice, if Theron Catlin did have notice his father was expending this large sum of money in his behalf and for a legitimate purpose, for which the record shows it was expended, he has not violated any of the corrupt-practices act of the State of Missouri by not including in his publicity statement or oath thereto the fact that his father had expended the sum of $10,000, or an amount unknown to him. I want you first to understand that the minority believe that Theron Catlin swore to the truth that he had no notice, but even if he had notice, it was not a violation of any section of the corrupt-practices act. If there was no State statute on the subject you certainly would not oust him; but because of the publicity statute, which is loosely thrown together, it is claimed by the majority of the committee that it is necessary for Theron Catlin to have included this amount or made some mention of it in his publicity statement.

If gentlemen will just give me their attention for a few minutes, I will probably be a little slow and perhaps a little worrysome upon this subject, but it seems to me like this is one of the crucial places in this case; it seems to me that the proposition is to oust this contestee upon a mere claimed technicality which, in my opinion, does not exist in the statute. If you will read Clark and Skyles on the "Law of Agency," which the majority side bring forward in support of their contention, you will find that in order to establish agency by ratification the alleged agent must have assumed to contract in the name of the man who is claimed to be his principal, and if the knowledge of that fact comes to the principal afterwards, and he does not disclaim it, it would be a ratification, but recollect that the evidence in this case shows conclusively that Daniel Catlin acted for himself and used his own money and never at any time acted in the name of his son. He stated distinctly on numerous occasions that he was acting for himself and not for his son. So there can be no such thing as a ratification in this case. Why, you can not bind me by going out and doing something I have not requested directly or indirectly, but if you do it in my name and then knowledge comes of that fact to me and I make no disclaimer, after a long lapse of time sometimes that becomes a ratification. But that is not this case.

AGENCY BY RATIFICATION.

See Clark and Skyles on "Agency," section 75, which, in part, reads as follows:

Agency of parent for child: The mere relationship of parent and child does not of itself make the parent the agent of the child to manage or dispose of his property or for any other purpose, whether the child is a minor or of full age. * * *

A majority of the committee quoted from page 339 of Clark and Skyles on "Agency," volume 1, laying down the following principle of law, to wit:

Although, as a general rule, a principal must have full knowledge of all the facts, as we have seen before, yet the principal can not purposely remain ignorant where the means of information is within his control so as to escape the effect of his acts that would otherwise amount to a ratification.

But this principle of law is qualified by another principle of law to be found on page 340, paragraph C, which reads as follows:

Act must be performed on behalf of the principal.

It must be remembered, also, that the doctrine above discussed applies only to unauthorized acts performed in the name of the assumed principal. "The general doctrine that one may, by affirmative acts, and even by silence, ratify the acts of another who has assumed to act as his agent is not disputed. It is illustrated by many cases to be found in the books, and set forth by all the text writers upon the law of agency. But the doctrine properly applies only to cases where one has assumed to act as agent for another, and then a subsequent ratification is equivalent to an original authority."

I desire to call your attention to this publicity statute. I think all who have followed this case agree that the expenditure allowed of $662 is a personal expenditure solely of the candidate for office in this case, but there is a publicity statement required of a candidate for Representative in Congress. Now, if you will just give me your attention for a few moments, I will read just a portion of it, as I do not desire to weary you. This is an extract of this statute 6047, and it says this: The candidate shall file a statement in writing setting forth in detail—

All sums of money, except all sums paid for actual traveling expenses, including hotel or lodging bills, contributed, disbursed, expended, or promised by him—and, to the best of his knowledge and belief, by any other person or persons in his behalf, wholly or in part in endeavoring to secure or in any way in connection with his nomination or election to such office or place.

Now, if you exclude that clause "contributed, disbursed, expended, or promised by him," and I want to call attention that in the brief of these gentlemen I do not know why they put a semicolon after "contributed," when the statute has a comma. I do not know whether it is intentional or not. There is not a semicolon after the word "contributed" in this statute. I say, "contributed, disbursed, expended, or promised by him" is the clause that is used and there is a comma after the word "him," and when you do that I think you have to say that the money expended by the contestee and the other qualifications means his own money and no other money. If you exclude this clause that statute is meaningless, and you can not make any sense out of it. If you include it, necessarily the section refers to and means the candidate's money. If you will read the title to that statute it will show you it relates to personal expenditures of the candidate under section 6046. The title shows it, and the construction put upon it by the contestant himself shows it. If you will go to the contestant's publicity statement that he filed in St. Louis, a copy of which appears in the record, you will find that he did not mention any money other than the money that he was allowed to spend under the law, and if you will take the time to read the record you will find that upon one occasion John Y. Patrick, I believe, was at his own house, and a check for $260, given by the treasurer of the Democratic committee, was broken up and distributed by contestant, giving his individual checks of $20 each to 13 committeemen.

You say you traced this money home. You will trace it to the home of the contestee. You say you traced this money to his father's house, where the contestee slept and where he boarded. What about this $260? It is traced to Gill's house.

Recollect that the man who gave the check does not deny it. Recollect that he never filed a publicity statement. Recollect that this was traced to Gill's house, and in the presence of all of those committeemen he, by his own hand, issued 13 checks to them. It is not denied. He can not deny it. Four or five witnesses testified to it. It is admitted. But when Mr. Gill files his publicity statement does he say anything about this transaction? No.

Why, gentlemen, that is the way to construe it. That is the way they all construe it in Missouri. What reason is there for him to say anything about money that somebody else expends? The law provides the means for making that public. The way is this: That the committee appointed or elected shall have a treasurer, and that treasurer shall make a statement and file it before the clerk of deeds or some other designated official of the county. Recollect that is the construction put upon this publicity act by the contestant himself. Recollect that the Legislature of Missouri recognized that to be the construction, because they provided a method by law for these other persons to make publicity statements, and it would be foolish for the contestee, if he found out what they were doing, to include in his statement all the other publicity statements that might be made in this district by candidates of the ticket on which he is running. It would be foolish.

Now, gentlemen, it seems to be clear that if you are going to say that Catlin made a defective publicity statement you must also say that Gill made a defective publicity statement, and what right have you to seat him if you unseat Catlin? Recollect this can not be gainsaid.

If you will take the trouble to read the report, you will see it is established by four or five witnesses. Gill does not go on the stand. The man that gave the $260 check does not go on the stand, and I suspect that the man who got the $260 check came right back to about the source where that $260 check started.

I suspect that in place of $20 going to each committeeman of that ward, $20 went to each of the 123 committeemen of the entire district. But, of course, you have no right to cast a man out on that. But you would have just as much right to do that as you would have to base your action on such farfetched inferences and presumptions as are advocated by gentlemen on the other side of the Hall. If making a defective or false publicity statement is going to damn Catlin, how can you seat Gill?

Gentlemen, take the time to read the publicity statement of Byrne, treasurer of the Democratic congressional committee. That publicity law provides that he should file a statement of receipts and expenditures—not in just that many words, but to that effect. But that treasurer does not show by his statement that he received any money from anybody. He has got no receipts, and he has got only two items of expenditure. One is an item of $250 to some committeemen, not naming them—and the law says he should name them—and the other item is $300 for sundries.

So they say that Catlin did not include in his statement the $60 that was spent for drinks and refreshments. But he states in his testimony that he did. And I presume that it is included in "et cetera" appearing in the $381 item, the last item of his statement. And it is as permissible for him to include drinks and refreshments under this head as it is for Mr. Gill to set out in his statement of $150 item of "refreshments for club," without detailing the kind of refreshments; or for Mr. Byrne, treasurer of the Democratic committee, to set out in his publicity statement a $300 item to "sundries," which would include most anything, and, of course, beer, whisky, and so forth. Gentlemen, recollect there are many saloons and hundreds of clubs in this district; and the record discloses that the contestant, Gill, personally spent money freely in the saloons of this district.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. I can not yield on account of lack of time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SWITZER. Recollect that Byrne did not comply with the law. Recollect that Byrne was treasurer of the Democratic congressional committee. If the acts of a committee or of a stranger or of a father, who are making legitimate expenditures, can condemn a candidate and can be considered grounds for ousting him from his seat, you will have to leave out Mr. Gill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWITZER. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SWITZER. So, gentlemen, there being no law on the statute books of the State of Missouri prohibiting Daniel Catlin or anybody else in that district from expending all the money that they can legitimately expend in the candidacy of a person running for Congress, and this record failing to show that a single voter was corrupted; that a single vote was cast outside of the 31 that should not have been cast—and that, of course, would not change the result—the record showing these facts, why should you say that because the father spent, through an attorney, money which he believed could be legitimately spent, the son should be ousted? The father employed an attorney whom he thought was an honorable man, and whom he believed knew the law, as he himself testifies, because he did not want to do anything contrary to law. He got the best legal advice and the best legal talent he knew in St. Louis, and he did everything he could to protect himself. That man has done everything in a perfectly legitimate way. But the majority of the committee assume, apparently, that because $10,000 was expended somebody was corrupted. That is not the law. You must show that some votes were corrupted.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In section 6046 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Missouri I see this language——

Mr. SWITZER. The amount to be expended by a candidate is determined.

Mr. RAKER. The law provides:

No candidate for Congress or for any public office in this State, or in any county, district, or municipality thereof, which office is to be filled by proper election, shall, by himself or by or through any agent or agents, committee, or organization, or any person or persons whatsoever, in the aggregate pay out or expend, or promise or agree or offer to pay, contribute, or expend, any money or other valuable thing in order to secure or aid in securing his nomination or election or the nomination or election of any other person or persons, or both such nomination and election——

Mr. SWITZER. You need not go further. In the case of a candidate for Congress the amount prescribed is $662.

Mr. RAKER. Does not that apply to all committees?

Mr. SWITZER. No. It applies only this far: If a candidate gives $200 to the congressional committee, he must state it in his publicity statement. Mr. Catlin did that. He says in his publicity statement that he gave his congressional committee $100. What was the use for him to set out what the congressional committee had expended? He sets out what he gave them, and they are supposed to set out in their publicity statement what they solicited, collected, and disbursed in his candidacy.

And recollect that the function of that committee was to work for Catlin and not for anybody else; and because they were working for Catlin is no evidence that he should presume that they were expending money illegally in his behalf, or money that was coming from his father, any more than money they collected from some other rich man who might be his friend. It appeared that another man did give $250, one Chester Kern, a lawyer there. And it seems that Catlin's father never knew until the contest came up that this man Kern had contributed $250. But if the congressional committee received it, they should make their publicity statement.

But I say, gentlemen, that some of these decisions go this far, that a conspiracy to bribe and the receiving of money and giving it to the voter does not vitiate an election beyond the actual votes shown to be affected. See Bowen v. Buchanan, Fifty-first Congress; also see the following authorities as to rejecting whole wards or individual votes:

First. Broad Seal case (sec. 801, Hinds' Precedents): An election being honestly conducted, the reception of illegal votes does not vitiate the poll.

Second. Threet v. Clark (Alabama), Fifty-first Congress, section 1925: Although there may be evidence establishing a conspiracy to defraud, it is still necessary to show effects in order to change the result.

Third. Hill v. Catchings (Mississippi), Fifty-first Congress, section 1039: In a district shown to be permeated by fraud and intimidation the contestant must still show sufficient effects to change the result.

Fourth. Chalmers v. Morgan (Mississippi), Fifty-first Congress, section 1035: Where the examination so far as made showed fraud, but not sufficient to change the result, the House declined to presume fraud as to other boxes which might change the result.

Fifth. Wise v. Young (Virginia), Fifty-fifth Congress, section 1102: Although the fraud in a district may be extensive, the House prefers to purge the return rather than declare the seat vacant.

Sixth. Walker v. Rhea (Kentucky), Fifty-sixth Congress, section 1118: The mere existence of frauds and irregularities do not vitiate an election if not shown to be sufficient to change the result. (See also, Horton v. Butler (Missouri), 57th Cong., sec. 1122; Wilson v. Lassiter (Virginia), 57th Cong., sec. 1127.)

The mere existence of frauds and irregularities do not vitiate an election if insufficient to affect the result.

Seventh. Watson v. Black (Georgia), Fifty-third Congress, section 1055: Bribery being proved, the House deducted the tainted votes, but did not reject the whole.

You have got no right, because some stranger or a father, or brother, bribes some voters, to throw out a whole ward. You would merely throw out the votes that were bought, would you not?

But not a single act of bribery has been proven in the pending case.

Something has been said about prizes being offered by the Republican congressional committeeman, Reichman, to the Republican judges and clerks of election of his ward. But the man who made this statement took it back on cross-examination, and it is clearly established by seven or eight other witnesses that the talk about prizes was merely a joking remark made by a man named Pins.

No evidence whatever that anybody took this joke seriously and ever acted upon it, or that any judge or clerk ever got a prize, or ever expected to receive one. And yet the majority membership of the committee propose to oust the contestee upon such flimsy testimony of corruption, and the fact that the registration list of voters for the third and eighteenth wards of this congressional district discloses a defective registration of 2,000 persons, alien born; because of the failure of the registry clerks to note on the registration book whether or not these persons were or were not naturalized. This matter was passed upon by the Supreme Court of Missouri, which held that all of these identical persons who voted were legal voters and that the same were legally counted.

The disfranchisement of the 9,000 voters of these two wards by throwing out the entire vote upon this so-called "evidence," thereby overturning the decision of the Supreme Court of Missouri and disregarding the long and well-established precedents of this House, would manifest a determined purpose to turn Theron Catlin's plurality of 1,394 votes into a majority of 431 for Patrick Gill, and brand such action as a deliberate, outrageous throttling of the will of the people of the eleventh congressional district of Missouri, concerning which they would undoubtedly speak in no uncertain tones through the ballot box next November. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to make an argument of this important matter in five minutes; but I wish to call attention to some things that seem to me to be of importance. I notice that in quoting the law relating to expenditures in election cases in Missouri the majority in their report have left out a line which has great significance and is very important. I hold in my hand the revised statutes of the State of Missouri for 1909, upon the title page of which it is declared that it was "revised and promulgated by the forty-fifth general assembly." Section 6046 begins in this way:

SEC. 6046. Amount to be expended by candidate—how determined.

That is not a headline or side note inserted by a compiler or printer. It is the language of the legislature itself explaining and defining and limiting the scope and purpose of the section. That is part of this enactment of the legislature and, taken in connection with what follows, shows clearly that what is forbidden is the expenditure of more than a graduated scale—in this instance amounting to $661—by the candidate himself, either directly or through the agency of another. It must be the candidate's own expenditure, made either in person or through another. It must be the candidate's own money. When you inject into the case expenditures made, not by a candidate, but by his cousins and his sisters and his aunts or his father or his uncles or his brothers or by strangers, you inject something which is not found in the act of assembly. It is not made illegal for persons other than the candidate or those acting as his agents to expend more than $661.

Suppose Theron Catlin's father did expend $3,500 for flags to be distributed among school children. Is the distribution of the American flag among school children illegal in Missouri? Even if it were illegal, if done as it was done by others and not by Theron Catlin, how does it affect Theron Catlin's right to a seat in this House? They say, "But do you suppose he did not know it?" The evidence is that he did not know that his father and brother were expending money; but suppose he did know it. This statute applies only to money expended by the candidate. He may either expend it himself or through his agent or some other person, but it must be his expenditure. It must be his money. I have not heard even a claim made in this argument that Theron Catlin expended a cent in excess of five hundred and some odd dollars, or that there has been any expenditure of his money in excess of the legal amount.

So much on that point. Then they have thrown out, according to the majority report, some 9,000 votes, disfranchising two whole wards. The reason they give is that certain precincts were thrown out in the Wagner-Butler case some years ago.

Why, the law is, Mr. Speaker, that when a return is shown to be fraudulent and it can not possibly be ascertained how many legal votes, if any, were cast in the precinct, you throw out the precinct. In the Wagner-Butler case ballots that were cast at the election were not in the box when it was opened. They had been fraudulently abstracted and other ballots put in their places outnumbering the persons whom the poll books showed to have voted. You could not tell how many honest votes were cast in a number of districts, consequently those districts were cast out. This is not such a case. There is no evidence, as I understand it, that these 2,000 alleged unnaturalized persons voted for anybody. They say they pursued only 311 of them. It is the easiest thing in the world under the statutes of Missouri to ascertain if there was fraud in that particular. When a man votes his name is put in a poll book, and the number upon his ballot is the same number as the one opposite his name in the poll book. All you have to do is to open the ballot box, take out a ballot, look at the number, compare it with that number in the poll book, and you know at once the name of the voter and the name of the candidate for whom he voted. Why did they not do that?

Mr. SWITZER. They did that.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I must decline to yield. I have only a moment left.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. OLMSTED. If any number of unnaturalized foreigners voted it was the easiest thing in the world to find for whom they voted. They found no illegal votes, and yet they threw out two wards—9,000 votes. In the whole history of Congress there is no precedent for such an outrage. We are sitting here as judges. I appeal to gentlemen upon the other side who wish to do justice. I submit to them that the unseating of this Member is not at all justifiable. I wish I had more time to elucidate my views. This act of the General Assembly of Missouri applies only to money expended by the candidate. Had it been the intention to forbid the expenditure of more than a certain sum by anybody else, the legislature could readily have found apt words to express its intention. It is not even pretended that Theron Catlin spent any money improperly, or that he spent one cent more than the law permitted.

On the other branch of the case there is, if possible, even less basis for this proposed action. The vote of a precinct can not lawfully be thrown out and the precinct disfranchised unless the return has been proved fraudulent, and it is impossible to ascertain how many legal votes, if any, were cast. Here the return has not been proved fraudulent, and if it had been it would be perfectly easy to determine just what unnaturalized foreigners did vote and for whom they voted.

It is easier under the statutes of Missouri than under the statutes of any other State that I have had occasion to examine. If they had looked at these ballots they could have told for whom the votes were cast.

Mr. SWITZER. They did look at them.

Mr. OLMSTED. If they did not look at them, there is no justification for throwing out those wards. If they did look at them there is still less, for they found no fraudulent votes save 31, which would not affect the result.

The burden is upon the contestant to prove any foreign-born person voting was not naturalized. This was not done. Before a single vote can be taken from Catlin it must be shown that it was illegal and that it was cast for him. There is no proof upon either point, but without evidence and without even a decent pretext you propose to throw out more than 9,000 votes. If there were a single dishonest vote among them it could easily have been shown. It was the duty of the contestant to prove it. He has not done so, but the honest voters of two whole wards are to be disfranchised and their honest votes not counted. The unseating of Theron Catlin, upon the facts of this case, will be a monumental outrage, a travesty upon justice, and a disgrace to the party which exercises its strength to perpetrate such an infamy.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

[Mr. COOPER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, that is the most amusing argument that, I think, has ever been offered to this House, certainly the most peculiar construction of this statute that has been so far made. It is, of course, very much in favor of the contestee in this case. The difficulty with it is that it outrages the plain reading of the statute, in the first place; and, in the second place, it disagrees totally and absolutely with the construction put upon it, not only by the committee and the contestant and his attorneys but also by the contestee and his attorneys.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Oh, I ask the gentleman to yield there.

Mr. HAMILL. I will not yield until I make one other statement.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I say if the gentleman says that that is my construction of the law, he says something that is not true.

Mr. HAMILL. Very well. Then I commiserate with the gentleman upon the fact that he construes it as my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] does.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HAMILL. Oh, if we had lots of time, I would be delighted to yield in this discussion.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman heard the law and the title of the statute read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED]?

Mr. HAMILL. Oh, gentlemen, we have got to get down to some theory of things in this case. The law is as follows:

> No candidate for Congress or for any public office in this State, or in any county, district, or municipality thereof, which office is to be filled by proper election, shall, by himself or by or through any agent or agents, committee, or organization, or any person or persons whatsoever, in the aggregate pay out or expend, or promise or agree or offer to pay, contribute, or expend, any money or other valuable thing in order to secure or aid in securing his nomination or election or the nomination or election of any other person or persons, or both such nomination and election, to any office to be voted for at the same election, or in aid of any party or measure, in excess of a sum to be determined upon the following basis, namely.

He shall not pay more than a certain amount proportioned on the number of votes cast at the preceding election. In this instance it would make $662, and so satisfied is the contestee and his attorneys that this is the proper reading of the statute that they have labored diligently to show the fact that Theron Catlin expended something like $550, through himself, and that he never expended a single dollar through any agent whatever.

Mr. COOPER. That is the exact point I make. You must prove the agency. That is the point I make, exactly.

Mr. HAMILL. We did prove the agency, as the gentleman could have seen had he listened to the discussion. Let me show you how Theron Catlin knew that Daniel Kirby was managing his campaign. If you will read the minority report, I think on page 13—though I will not be sure of the page—you will find that Nat Goldstein, in talking to Theron Catlin about the dinner, said to Theron, "Why don't you invite Dan Kirby?" and Theron said, "No; you invite him." Nat evidently thought that Kirby would get the impression that he was going to milk him [laughter on the Democratic side], and so he said to Catlin, "No; you tender him the invitation to come here"; and Theron Catlin invited him. If Theron Catlin did not know that Dan Kirby was managing his campaign, how did it ever occur to him to consider that of all men Dan Kirby, any more than John Smith or John Jones, was so necessary a factor that he ought to be invited to take his place and sit down at a conference of a congressional committee?

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit a correction? He is misstating the evidence.

Mr. HAMILL. Oh, well, we have read the evidence.

Mr. COOPER. I have it right here.

Mr. HAMILL. And a gentleman who considers it for five minutes of course thinks he knows more than one does who has considered it for five months.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HAMILL. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman said that Mr. Goldstein said to Theron Catlin, "Have you invited Kirby?" and Theron said, "No; you invite him."

Mr. HAMILL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. But that is not the evidence. This is the evidence:

> I had occasion to see Nat, and he said, "Did you invite Kirby to this dinner?" I said, "No."

Mr. HAMILL. Who is talking?

Mr. COOPER. Theron Catlin.

> I said no. He said: "I would like to have Kirby there. Please ask him."

Mr. HAMILL. That is, Goldstein said to Catlin?

Mr. COOPER. Yes; but that is not what the gentleman said. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HAMILL. Oh, yes.

Mr. COOPER. Do not dodge it. I have seen a lot of lawyers practice law in justice courts just as the gentleman is doing. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILL. And I have seen a lot of misguided gentlemen so uncertain that they can argue themselves into a correct position, even if it is not the one they want to assume.

Mr. COOPER. Wait a minute. Goldstein said——

Mr. HAMILL. Oh, the gentleman may tell it any way he likes and we will all agree with him whatever way he tells it.

Mr. COOPER. He said——

Mr. HAMILL. Who, Nat? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER. Yes. He said to Catlin, "I would like to have Kirby there. Please ask him."

Mr. HAMILL. That is precisely what I said.

Mr. COOPER. It is not what the gentleman said at all. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HAMILL. Oh, well——

Mr. COOPER. Oh, well. It is not a laughing matter on an important thing of this kind to have evidence deliberately misstated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. HAMILL. I have the time, and I will take another minute of my time to say that the only laughing matter consisted in the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the gentleman on the other side remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCOY). Nineteen minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota has 30.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL].

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, in the Fifty-fourth Congress it happened that I was the chairman of a Committee on Elections. We had some 15 cases referred to that committee. Twelve of those cases were decided in favor of Democrats. That committee had upon its membership one of the best lawyers I have served with here, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. De Armond. It had the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES]. I have long had the notion that the action of that committee helped establish the rule of justice in this House instead of partisanship in deciding contested-election cases. I fear that if you unseat the contestee in this case you will take a long step backward toward establishing the rule of political thievery in dealing with election contests. I have examined this evidence somewhat, and it seems to me that if the committee of which I have spoken had followed the rule that you establish here we might easily have taken a half dozen seats of those Democrats whom we permitted to serve in this Hall.

The gentleman proves agency by mere knowledge. As one of my colleagues remarked, we know the gentleman is making a speech, but that does not make him our agent.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCALL. I have only three minutes, and the gentleman must admit that one can hardly argue a case in that time. Look at the way they threw out votes; look at the cool manner in which they would disfranchise the great city of St. Louis, the greatest city upon this continent west of the Mississippi. Why, they threw out 9,000 votes, and how did they do it? They say there were certain illegal votes in certain wards. In the two wards where there was the least number of illegal votes they threw them out because they voted for Catlin, and yet the wards which had the greatest number of illegal votes, and which voted for the contestant, were permitted to remain and were counted for him. Why, it will be a perfect travesty upon justice, gentlemen, if you shall decide this contested election case upon the flimsy grounds which are presented in the majority report. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] has 27 minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, this proceeding takes place under the constitutional provision which makes each House of Congress the sole judge of the qualifications of its Members. Consequently we are sitting as judges and not as partisans. Yet we find that the majority and minority reports have been adopted by strict party votes. Surely a sad commentary on the ability of Members of Congress, when acting in the capacity of judges, to divest themselves of the instincts of partisanship.

If I were to hearken to the voice of my party I would, instead of loudly protesting against a proposed act of cruel injustice, remain silent in my seat and let the Democratic majority do their worst, in order that the Republicans might not only be supplied with a new and effective campaign issue, but also be assured for a long term of years and until the outrage is forgotten of absolute ascendancy in the eleventh congressional district of Missouri. As some of the older Members, including the honored Speaker of the House, will remember, this is exactly what happened 29 years ago when Charles F. Joy, a Republican, although elected by an honest majority in the same district, was driven from his seat in a Democratic House because of a mere technicality. That act of injustice was perpetrated by a Democratic majority over the protest of all the Republicans and of 26 of the most prominent Democratic Members, including the late Judge De Armond, from Missouri, and as a result the eleventh district remained safely Republican for the following 10 years, electing and reelecting the same Charles F. Joy, who had been so unjustly ousted, four times in succession. And it is not too much to say that the outrage then committed against the electorate of that district greatly increased the momentum with which Missouri traveled in an opposite political direction until she found herself a "mysterious stranger" in the company of the great Republican States of the Union.

In the present instance the contemplated action of the majority has already had its political effect in the district. Mr. Catlin has been unanimously renominated without opposition, and consequently without effort or expense on his part, while Mr. Gill was repudiated by the voters of his own party by 2,300 majority, and this in spite of the fact that the majority report, with all its unproven allegations of fraud and corruption, had shrewdly been timed for publication for the evening before the primary and was so published by the Democratic evening and morning papers a few hours before the voters went to the polls. Now, if the people had actually believed Mr. Gill to have been the victim of Republican fraud and corruption, would they not have been disposed to stand by him? Instead, they nominated another Democrat, and one comparatively unknown, and it is worthy of note that out of a total of 22,812 votes cast at the primary Mr. Catlin received a clear majority, to wit, 11,753, while Mr. Gill could muster only 3,337. It may fairly be said, therefore, that the people themselves have passed upon the merits of this contest. Shall the people rule or will this House undertake by arbitrary decisions to correct the popular will?

But, Mr. Speaker, I do not regard a vote on a contested-election case as a party question, hence I raise my voice in protest against the palpable attempt of the present majority to make it such and to drive a Member of this House from the seat to which he was fairly and honestly elected by a majority of the voters of his district. In his able speech the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] has covered the ground fully and proved to the satisfaction of every fair-minded man, I believe, that the conclusions set forth in the majority report are not justified either by the evidence or the facts in the case. I shall not go over the same ground again, but let me briefly recapitulate.

It is conceded that Mr. Catlin's father contributed $10,200 to the Republican campaign fund, placing it in the hands of Mr. Daniel N. Kirby, a prominent member of the St. Louis bar and a friend of the Catlin family. Mr. Kirby's character and knowledge of the law was a sufficient guaranty to the elder Catlin that no improper use would be made of the money, and, indeed, according to Mr. Kirby's accounts, not one dollar of the money was used for improper or illegitimate purposes. But, says the majority report, Mr. Catlin, the son and candidate, knew of this contribution, hence he violated the State law, which limits campaign expenditures of candidates, and thus forfeited his seat. How easy! The burden of proof, mind you, is on the contestant, but no scintilla of evidence was adduced to substantiate the charge. In other words, the knowledge of the contestee is a mere assumption. On the other hand, we have the sworn statements of the father, of Mr. Kirby, of the brother, and of Mr. Catlin himself that the latter had no knowledge whatever of his father's contribution. "He would have never known it but for this contest," says the gentleman, in so many words, and his reputation and character as one of the oldest and most highly respected citizens of St. Louis vouchsafe the truth of the statement. What the contestant did know was that money was being spent by the congressional committee in his behalf and in behalf of other candidates, but that knowledge does not make him amenable to the corrupt-practices act. Under that act it must be proven that it was his money and that it was expended for him by his agents, and there is no such proof.

In this connection permit me to call attention to the character of our political committees. Their members are not appointed by the candidates, but they are State appointees, and represent their wards not only on the congressional committee but on the city, senatorial, legislative, and judicial committees as well. It is customary that these committees collect a campaign fund, and the law limits neither their collections nor their expenditures. The money expended by the members of these committees is not spent for congressional candidates alone, but for all candidates running on the party ticket at the time, and the practice is the same with both parties. If Mr. Catlin, as is probably the case, saw members of his committee spend any money, it was money collected from all sources and expended for the benefit of all candidates running on the Republican ticket. And, as I have already stated, every cent of the money spent by Mr. Kirby is accounted for, and it was expended for legitimate purposes only.

In order to connect Mr. Catlin with his father's contribution, counsel for contestant tried to convince the committee that the money was advanced to contestee. But if you will look up page 66 of the hearings you will find that counsel failed in his effort. Chairman HAMILL, in addressing counsel, says:

> If you could show it (the money) was an advance there would not be the slightest difficulty in fixing the blame upon Catlin. That is where we do not get evidence.

Well, Mr. Speaker, they surely tried to get the evidence, for they examined all the check books and stubs of old Mr. Catlin for the whole period in question, but that fact is carefully kept from the record. Why? Because they could find nothing to connect contestee in any way with the transaction. So I say again the contestant has utterly failed in furnishing the needed proof, and the allegation in the majority report of Mr. Catlin's knowledge is as unsupported as would be my assertion here and now that Mr. Gill knew his own committee was spending money in excess of a reasonable limit. As a matter of fact, it was common gossip at the time that the Democratic committee did have an exceptionally large campaign fund in 1910; as large as was that of the Republican committee. And if the mere knowledge on the part of candidates of the expenditure of money by committees would bring them within the scope of the Missouri law Mr. Gill would be disqualified the same as Mr. Catlin.

The failure of contestant to prove by positive evidence that Mr. Kirby was acting as contestee's agent in the expenditure of the fund furnished by the older Catlin naturally destroys the ground upon which this contest is based. The majority of the committee knew this full well, therefore they took up the allegations of fraud and corruption, flimsy as they were. And they did this for another reason. It was discovered that while they might risk a recommendation to unseat Catlin on account of his father's campaign contribution, they could not seat Gill on that ground because of a decision of the Missouri Supreme Court. The statute does provide that the contestant in such a case shall be given the office, but this provision was declared unconstitutional by a Democratic supreme court.

Mr. HAMILL. Will the gentleman yield for just a short question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. HAMILL. It was not because of any law of Missouri. It was simply because McCreary on Elections holds that in this country in order to seat your man it is not enough that the other man is unseated, but that he have a majority of the vote. That is not the law of Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That was very lucidly stated by the gentleman in his argument.

Mr. HAMILL. I am glad of it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Strange to say, the majority report contains the misleading statement that this provision had been held constitutional. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to reflect on the committee. I know how reluctant the majority were to make the report they did, but they were under constant and strong pressure from the outside. They were called upon to save the face of the Democracy of Missouri. When after the last election the Democrats raised the cry of fraud because the Republicans had carried St. Louis by an unprecedented majority, owing, of course, to the prohibition amendment, and when the most searching investigations failed to disclose any evidence of fraud, the Democratic leaders became desperate. The contests in Congress were their last straw, and so Mr. Catlin is to be made a scapegoat in order that at least one scalp might be exhibited to the contributors to the contest fund as a return for their good money. Fortunately, not only the outraged electors of the eleventh district and of Missouri, but the people of the whole country, are witnesses to the transaction.

It is wonderful with what degree of circumspection the majority of the committee proceeded in this matter! They throw out the vote of two whole wards, Republican wards, of course, in order to obtain a majority of 431 for the contestant. Although there was not a scintilla of evidence to sustain the allegation of fraud, they propose to completely disfranchise the voters of the third and the eighteenth wards, nearly 9,000 in number, and to correct and subvert the people's will by a vote of this House. It is now generally conceded that the election of 1910 was the fairest and squarest we ever had. A Republican governor had been elected in Missouri whose solemn pledge and paramount purpose was to secure honest elections, and to-day it is the proudest boast of the Republicans of my State that he has completely succeeded in his well-meant efforts in that direction. This fall we shall appeal to the people for their continued confidence on account of this great and beneficent achievement of a Republican State administration. Remember that every St. Louis vote cast in that election was officially recounted and compared with the poll books, and the difference between the original count and the recount was barely sufficient to change the result in a single precinct. As I said before, immediately after the election the Democratic State committee raised the cry of fraud, and finally a commissioner was appointed, a prominent Democrat, to investigate the matter. He reported to the supreme court that no proof of fraud had been adduced, and the Democratic judges of the supreme court, in an elaborate decision, approved his findings. And more than that, contests for the legislative seats comprised in this district were instituted, and a Democratic legislature seated the Republican contestees in senate and house by an overwhelming vote, so that at last it is admitted on all sides that the election of 1910 was free from fraud and corruption and as honest as any election ever held. And I wish to call attention to another important fact. The Republican candidates for the supreme court were elected by very small majorities and consequently their Democratic opponents began a contest which resulted in a most searching investigation. The majority of the court depended upon the outcome, and you can imagine better than I can tell you how much there was at stake for the Democratic Party in saving its Gibraltar. If they had thrown out those two wards, which it is proposed to throw out here, they would have elected the Democratic judges, but with all their partisan zeal and despite the assurance that a Democratic majority of the court would pass upon the proposition, nobody, not even the intensely partisan counsel of the Democratic contestant, had the temerity to breathe such a monstrous wrong. Rather than go to such an extremity and invite the resentment and condemnation of the people without regard to party the leaders dropped the contests and allowed control of the supreme court to pass into Republican hands. Oh, yes, there were scruples here, too, but evidently they were overcome, and so with a few strokes of the pen and a party vote in this House 9,000 voters in my city are to be disfranchised.

What about the allegations of fraud and corruption? During the contest proceedings contestant secured copies of all the ballots and poll books of the district and sent out fraud hunters armed with the names and addresses of all the 20,000 voters who had voted for contestee. These fraud hunters reported that 31 out of the 20,000 could not be found, and that was six weeks after election. This, gentlemen, is seriously mentioned as proof of fraud; in reality is it not rather evidence of the contrary when in a large city, with a constantly shifting population, it was possible to run down 19,969 men out of 20,000 at the localities from which they had voted six weeks previously? But this is one of the reasons assigned for throwing out the two wards. In justification of this action it is pointed out that a Republican House in deciding the Butler contests had also thrown out parts of the district. The fact is that in the Butler case the Republican contestant had proved 13,000 fraudulent votes. That was the time when St. Louis was helpless in the hands of ballot box-stuffing mob, and when Democratic election crimes became so appalling that they resulted in the overthrow of the so-called "Old guard" and the election of a reform governor. Yet, in 1900, while the House unseated Butler, it refused to seat the contestant, and in 1902 Butler was unseated for the short term on account of the 13,000 fraudulent votes, but seated for the long term. The committee then threw out a number of precincts where it was absolutely impossible to ascertain the honest vote, but never dreamed of throwing out whole wards and disfranchising their 9,000 honest voters. A comparison of the present contest with the Butler contests could have suggested itself only to a man desperately in need of facts upon which to base his case, and will be looked upon as an affront to the citizenship of the eleventh district.

The next allegation is that 2,000 unnaturalized residents had voted at the election. This was thoroughly gone into in the supreme court contests, and you will be astounded when you hear the real facts. It appears that the clerks who attended to the registration of voters had, in a number of instances, neglected to fill out all the columns of the registration sheet. They asked whether a man was a qualified voter and whether he was duly naturalized, but they failed to ask in what court the naturalization papers had been obtained. Three hundred and eleven such omissions were discovered, whereupon contestant jumped to the conclusion that there were 2,000 such cases in the district, and the majority report boldly declares:

> It is unquestionably established that 2,000 unnaturalized residents were registered in the district, and that they voted at this election.

Not one of those 311 men was summoned as a witness, for if they had been it would have been discovered that they were duly naturalized citizens and therefore qualified voters, and in fact the registration lists show that they are, only the courts issuing the papers were not given owing to the neglect of the clerks. This whole matter is disposed of by a decision of the supreme court, which says that the failure of an election official to perform his duty shall not operate to disfranchise a voter.

All the testimony, by the way, with regard to the unnaturalized voters was taken in rebuttal and the contestee was given no chance to answer it. For four days he had constantly endeavored to do so, but he was waved aside with one excuse or another. On the last day an adjournment had been taken until 2 o'clock p. m., and it was understood that during that afternoon he should be given an opportunity to cross-examine witnesses, but notary and counsel failed to appear until 6 o'clock, when the former peremptorily declared the hearing closed.

The allegations of corruption have no better foundations than those of fraud. The eighteenth ward is to be thrown out because Hank Weeks, a Republican committeeman, gave money to one James J. Sheehan asking him to do what he could for Catlin and Miller who was a candidate for the criminal court. Sheehan thereafter handed $5 to Thomas Murphy and $2 to John C. Russell:

The record wholly fails to show—

Says the minority report—that the money was given for any corrupt purpose; that anyone was corrupted by it; that it was contestant's money; that he was responsible for it or even knew of it.

Murphy testified the money had not influenced him in any way, and Russell stated he had already voted when he received the $2. But on account of these $7 the whole vote of the eighteenth ward is to be thrown out.

The third ward is to be thrown out because one Evers testified that prices of $15, $10, and $5 had been offered to judges and clerks of election for the three precincts showing the highest vote for Catlin. This evidence was afterwards recalled, or rather Evers testified he had never said the men were judges and clerks. The fact is that at a meeting of the precinct committeemen and judges and clerks of election, one Pins made the jocular remark, after the judges and clerks had left, that prices should be offered to the precinct workers, but Judge Riechmann, the committeeman who addressed the meeting giving instructions, did not respond to the suggestion. Such prices to precinct workers have often been offered by the party organizations, and there is, of course, nothing wrong in giving them, but in this particular case it happens none were offered or given.

Mr. Speaker, this is the whole case of Gill against Catlin in a nutshell. If the Democratic majority of this House can afford on such flimsy ground to drive a Member from the seat to which he was honestly elected by over 1,300 majority, let them take the responsibility, but I venture to say that this will not be the end of it. This case will be again tried before a higher tribunal. It will be taken before the people in this campaign and made an issue in every district of Missouri and elsewhere. And in connection with it we shall tell another story, the story of the Missouri gerrymander. The Republicans have carried Missouri three times in succession, in the presidential elections of 1904 and 1908 and in the State election of 1910. It is evident, therefore, that out of 16 Members on this floor that party should have a representation of at least one-half, but instead it has but 3 Representatives out of 16. And now we are to be robbed of one of the three simply because the Democrats have the majority and the power to do it. The ousting of Mr. Catlin is to be made a party question, owing to pressure from certain Missouri leaders, who boldly declared not long ago that if out of three contested seats they took one they were according us a most generous treatment. But I predict the people will resent this double disfranchisement and agree with the St. Louis Globe-Democrat when it says:

Missouri Republicans are robbed of half the congressional representation to which they are entitled, and the Democratic House is planning to steal what little is left. Playing politics like this will boom Republicanism in the State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey has 19 minutes remaining.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman from New Jersey yield me one minute?

Mr. HAMILL. I will yield one minute to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to say in conclusion, turning to my young friend and colleague from Missouri, that even if he is ruthlessly driven out of this House to-day, let him take comfort and take courage, because, as sure as the flag floats over the dome of this Capitol, he will come back. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HAMILL. I will object to that just now, for this reason: The gentleman from Minnesota and myself had a sort of agreement that we would ask unanimous consent for all those who speak in this discussion to have five legislative days within which to print and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Why not make the request now?

Mr. HAMILL. I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all persons who have spoken on the resolution and who will speak on it may have five legislative days in which to extend remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have or shall speak on this case may have five legislative days in which to extend remarks in the RECORD on the resolution itself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey has 19 minutes remaining.

Mr. HAMILL. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, before I commence what I intend to say in reply to gentlemen who have spoken in favor of the contestee in this case, I feel it my duty to the Committee on Elections No. 2, in view of what the gentleman from Massachusetts said a few moments ago, to make this statement of fact. I am not a member of that committee and therefore speak impartially.

I find by the record furnished me that that committee has had pending before it the following contested election cases:

Mauer against Bartholdt.

Kinney against Dyer.

Prolio against Legare.

Gill against Catlin.

That makes four cases. They have only reported to this House the unseating of one man who holds the commission in the first instance. So that the charge which the gentleman from Massachusetts seeks to make or to have inferred against this committee is unjust, unfair, and not warranted by the facts. I feel it is due to the committee to make that statement.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. McCALL. I based what I said on the report of the committee also and the grounds upon which this seat was to be taken.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am sure that the gentleman from Massachusetts will modify his remarks now that he has been informed as to the actual record made by this committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am proud that I come from a State that was one of the first to adopt a corrupt-practices act in order to protect the ballot and the people. A condition had grown up in the State of Missouri and perhaps almost as bad as my colleague from St. Louis, Dr. BARTHOLDT, describes, and it is especially unfortunate for him that that bad condition is confined to the city of St. Louis, his home. The good people throughout the State who believe in an honest ballot felt that it was necessary to enact some law to compel the people down in St. Louis to hold fair and honest elections. This is real progressive legislation for which Democrats stand.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. I regret that I can not, for I have only a few minutes. The Missouri Legislature, Democratic, passed a corrupt-practices law, intending to prevent men of large means from buying their elections, the main section of which reads as follows:

No candidate for Congress or for any public office in this State, or in any county, district, or municipality thereof, which office is to be filled by proper election, shall, by himself or by or through any agent or agents, committee, or organization, or any person or persons whatsoever, in the aggregate pay out or expend, or promise or agree or offer to pay, contribute, or expend, any money or other valuable thing in order to secure or aid in securing his nomination or election or the nomination or election of any other person or persons, or both such nomination and election, to any office to be voted for at the same election, or in aid of any party or measure, in excess of a sum to be determined upon the following basis, namely: For 5,000 voters or less, $100; for each 100 voters over 5,000 and under 25,000, $2; for each 100 voters over 25,000 and under 50,000, $1; and for each 100 votes over 50,000, 50 cents, the number of voters to be ascertained by the total number of votes cast for all the candidates for such office at the last preceding regular election held to fill the same; and any payment, contribution, or expenditure, or promise, or agreement, or offer to pay, contribute, or expend any money or valuable thing in excess of said sum, for such objects or purposes, is hereby declared unlawful.

It is conceded that under this statute only $662 could be expended in this congressional district.

It seems to me this statute could not be any plainer—that the candidate must not expend beyond the above limit himself or permit anybody else to expend for him a sum in excess of the above limit if he knows of that fact. Of course, I can see that if the candidate does not know it he would not be bound by what some one might do in his behalf and without his knowledge or consent.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri, the contestee in this case, understood perfectly well that he could not expend himself, or through an agent or anybody else, by his knowledge or with his consent, a sum in excess of $662 in this campaign.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman from Missouri keeps putting in the word "permit"; there is no such word used in the statute.

Mr. HAMLIN. I can not yield, Mr. Speaker. I say, with his knowledge or consent. And Mr. Catlin, the contestee, understood the law to be just as I have outlined it, because on the 11th day of November, 1910, following this election, he filed an affidavit in accordance with this same statute, in which he used this language:

I, Theron E. Catlin, being duly sworn, on my oath say that I was a candidate for Representative to the Congress of the United States in the eleventh congressional district of Missouri and at the primary election held on August 10, 1910, and that the following is a true and complete list of all sums of money contributed, disbursed, expended, or promised by me, and to the best of my knowledge and belief by any other person or persons in my behalf, wholly or in part, in endeavoring to secure, or in any way in connection with, my nomination or election to said office or offices or in connection with the nomination or election of any other person at said election.

He understood that the law meant that he could not expend an amount in excess of $662, either by himself or through another. He can not possibly get away from that construction now. Every man who holds a commission in this House from the State of Missouri, including my genial friend from the tenth St. Louis district, Mr. BARTHOLDT, filed an affidavit similar to the above, because it is the form that we all use in the State of Missouri; the law requires it.

Now, gentlemen, I want to call your attention to this fact, and I can only outline a few important points in this case: Did Theron Catlin know that $10,500, in addition to the five hundred and some odd dollars which he admits he spent, was expended to bring about his election? It is admitted that that amount of money was expended. Did he know it? I undertake to say that every man here will do violence to his intelligence to even intimate that he does not believe, under the testimony, that Theron Catlin knew that this money was expended for him and in his behalf. Of course he knew it.

His father and brother put up the money. He lived with his father. The testimony shows that he had access to his father's books, to his check book and stubs.

His father testified that he kept a record of his expenditures, even of the ordinary household expenses, and this son had access to his books. He knew the money was being expended. He was riding around in automobiles with the men who were expending this money, and they were spending $35, $40, and $75 a day here and there at the saloons and clubs. Where was the money coming from? He said he did not expend it. His father was a multimillionaire, and any man must know that he must have known that his father was putting up this money. Of course, the only conclusion that can be reached is that there was a studied purpose on the part of the Catlins to put Theron in a position where he could say that he did not actually know that his father was putting up this money; but this is an evasion which the law will not permit. The gentleman from Wisconsin says that they employed Mr. Kirby, who was able to tell them how they could evade the law. He does not state it just in those words, but that is the substance of it and that is what it means. I agree with him entirely. Kirby was employed by the Catlins to tell them how to evade the corrupt-practices act of Missouri and secure the office by purchase. He said he employed a lawyer, who said to Theron Catlin, "You can not spend above a certain sum, which is $662, in the eleventh congressional district"; but Kirby was able to tell the father of the candidate how more money could be expended and evade the law, and that was the purpose of the whole thing. They said, "We will not let Theron know, we will make him close his eyes and shut his ears"—become one who has eyes but see not and ears but hear not.

You will recall that Theron Catlin invited this man Kirby to a dinner given at his father's house just before the election, and after they had eaten dinner somebody said, "We want to talk a little business." Who were there? Reichman, the treasurer and chairman of the contestee's committee, and some of his lieutenants, and this man Kirby, the elder Catlin, and the candidate. They said, "We want to talk a little business." Theron, the candidate, immediately got up and left the room. Why? If my friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] and my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] have put the proper construction upon the law, it would be no violation for the old man to spend $10,000 or $20,000 to elect his boy to Congress, and there would have been no necessity for them to invite the candidate to leave the room while they talked over their plans; but they realized that they were scheming to violate the law. They knew it as well as they knew that they lived, and they said, "We do not want you to know anything about this, Theron, and you go out in the other room."

He got up and marched out and they talked about 15 minutes; and yet that boy, being a candidate, vitally interested, was not consulted and never asked a living soul what they were talking about. I recollect once in this House when the lamented Cushman, who afforded this House much amusement when he was a Member, told a story, and I think that story is applicable to the case in hand. It was about a fellow out West, who was found with a good many cattle gotten in too short a time. They waited on him and said to him that he had more cattle than he ought to have in such a short time. They took him down the road to a tree and put a rope around his neck and threw it up over a limb. They then asked him if he had anything to say before he shuffled off this mortal coil. He said: "Well, gentlemen, I expect I am more vitally interested in this matter than anybody else, but I will swear that I do not believe I am as enthusiastic over it as some of the balance of you." That appears to be the way of Theron Catlin. He was more vitally interested in what they were talking about than anybody, but he did not display any enthusiasm. He never even asked how much money they were using in his campaign, or who was paying it out, or what was being done with it. Tell me that he did not know that his father was expending this money that was being used for his benefit? I tell you that you absolutely do violence to your own intelligence when you say that. It is too plain for further discussion.

My friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] brings into this argument a matter entirely foreign to this case. He says that in a late primary Patrick Gill, the contestant in this case, was defeated for renomination and that Theron Catlin was overwhelmingly renominated. He argues from that that the people of the district have passed on what happened two years ago. Let us see. The evidence shows that two years ago part of this $10,500 was used in securing the services of one James J. Sheehan, who was then Democratic committeeman in one of those wards, that he was paid money by Catlin's friends. He worked for Catlin, also a man named Parker, and half a dozen others of the so-called leading Democrats. Those fellows did not want Pat Gill to bring this contest. Why? If these facts were developed, it would lay bare their treachery and reflect upon them just as much as it does upon Theron Catlin, and even more. They were playing to be Patrick Gill's friends. They had taken Catlin's money and had broken their word to Gill. They did not want this contest brought. They were afraid of it. One of the fellows who ran against Gill for nomination at the previous primary, M. C. Early, turns up as one of Catlin's attorneys in this contest, so that you see Patrick Gill——

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. I decline to yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I want to ask the gentleman if that is in the record?

Mr. HAMLIN. So that you see how it was. Patrick Gill was 1,000 miles from the scene of action, with Catlin on the ground working for renomination, these so-called Democrats being aroused over this contest case and knowing that it would expose their perfidy, and of course they were not for Pat Gill for renomination, and I am surprised that he carried the third ward, one of those wards where we allege these frauds were committed.

They say that there is no evidence here of any fraud, and I want to make just this one reply to my friend from Missouri. He talks about the State contests out there. He will not rise in his place and say that in any of those State contests was this question of the violation of the corrupt-practices act involved. It was not. It was not involved in any of those cases. This is the first contest in Congress that has been brought which is based on the corrupt-practices act of the State of Missouri. Interrupting one of the gentlemen this afternoon, I stated that the contestee in this case had admitted that there were 2,000 illegal voters permitted to register and vote—unnaturalized citizens—and that he was bound by his pleadings and could not now be permitted to deny that proposition. Here it is, on page 15 of the record:

Further answering, contestee avers that in said eleventh congressional district a large number of foreign-born persons, to wit, 2,000, through mistake or error or oversight on the part of the registration judges or clerks, were permitted to register as voters who were not legally entitled to register and vote at said election.

On the next page he says that there are 3,000 more who had declared their intentions more than five years before this time, but had never taken out their final papers, and that consequently they were not legal voters.

There are one or two other things. I can not take up the argument consecutively, because erroneous statements made on the other side ought to be corrected in the presence of this House. For instance, there comes to my mind now that the charge was made, I believe by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER], that Mr. Gill gave his checks and split up a certain check of $350, giving his checks for $20 each to different parties. That is true; but my good friend from Ohio did not tell the whole truth. That money had no connection with the campaign of Patrick Gill. It was money given to a member of the city committee by the treasurer of the city committee, all in a lump sum. This city committeeman wanted to use some of this money, and the bank was closed. He went to Pat Gill and asked him to split it up by check for him. I will read the testimony:

Q. Now, at the time Mr. Patrick gave you that check he explained that he had received a check from Mr. Menne, treasurer of the city committee, but not having time to get it cashed he gave Mr. Gill the check for the entire amount and asked Mr. Gill to make out checks for the individual members of the committee, and ain't that their checks? Isn't that right?—A. He made an announcement there which, in substance, was practically that what you stated. He said that he had called the meeting, and that he had received his portion of the money from the city central committee for distribution to the city central committee——

Q. To the precinct men?—A. Yes; to the precinct committee organization; and that he had not had time to get it cashed; and that he asked Paddy Gill to furnish him with money for the meeting which he had called for that night.

Mr. DICKINSON. It has no connection with Gill's campaign?

Mr. HAMLIN. Absolutely no connection with the congressional campaign, and yet the gentleman from Ohio seizes upon that as a reflection upon the contestant in this case. There is one thing which I feel proud of so far as Patrick Gill is concerned. With all of this money back of this contest on the part of the contestee, unlimited, with all the testimony that can be found, not one single syllable has been found that reflects upon the conduct or character of Patrick Gill. [Applause.] Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another thing to which I wish to call attention. Ever since I began to look into this case I find, I think, about the rankest and worst fraud I know of having been perpetrated anywhere was that adopted on the night I believe before the election, when there was a meeting called of the Republican judges and clerks. Think of it now, men who were appointed to act in that high capacity invited to a certain place, to Reichman's office, and Mr. Catlin, the candidate, accompanied Reichman there, and in the presence of Theron Catlin, who may be blind to some things, but he is certainly not deaf, Reichman made an offer of cash prizes of $15, $10, and $5 to the Republican judges and clerks who should show the biggest vote for Catlin the next day. My God, think of it, the people of this country will not tolerate such methods. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitue for the resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call attention to the fact that there are two resolutions. The Clerk will first report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 666.

Resolved, That Theron E. Catlin was not elected a Representative from the Eleventh District of Missouri to the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Theron E. Catlin was elected a Representative from the Eleventh District of Missouri to the Sixty-second Congress and is entitled to the seat therein.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute.

The question was taken and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 70, nays 122, answered "present" 19, not voting 179, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he voted "nay."

So the substitute was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. HELM with Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts.

Mr. SAUNDERS with Mr. MCCREARY.

Mr. Cox of Indiana with Mr. HEALD.

Balance of the day:

Mr. HAY with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. SIMS with Mr. PAYNE.

On this vote:

Mr. MOON of Tennessee with Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia with Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL.

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington.

Mr. HAMMOND (against) with Mr. PETERS (for).

Mr. HOWLAND (for) with Mr. HENRY of Texas (against).

Mr. PARRAN. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded? I do not remember voting on this proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded as "present."

Mr. PARRAN. All right, sir; but I did not hear my name called.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay," but I find that my pair is not here, and therefore I would like to change my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. ADAMSON, and he answered "Present."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay" on this vote. I am paired with the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. KOPP. I desire to vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. FOSTER, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The substitute is lost. The question recurs on the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks for a division of the question, and he is entitled to it. The Clerk will report the first part of the resolution, so that Members will know how to vote.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Theron E. Catlin was not elected a Representative from the eleventh district of Missouri in the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the resolution will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 71, answered "present" 16, not voting 182, as follows:

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. PATRICK F. GILL, from the eleventh Missouri district, appeared at the bar of the House, escorted by Mr. LLOYD, and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the speech that was made by the Hon. OLLIE JAMES as permanent chairman of the Baltimore convention.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech of the Hon. OLLIE JAMES as permanent chairman of the Baltimore convention.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman consent to include a request that I be permitted to print in the RECORD a short speech by Jane Addams?

Mr. LLOYD. I do not object to the gentleman making that request.

The SPEAKER. Let us first dispose of the request of the gentleman from Missouri. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Now the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a short speech by Jane Addams. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an address by William H. Kellar, one of the delegates to the Republican national convention that nominated Mr. Taft at Chicago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech of W. H. Kellar, one of the delegates to the Chicago convention. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SPEECH OF COL. GOETHALS AT MILITARY ACADEMY (H. DOC. NO. 904).

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a House document a speech delivered by Col. Goethals to the graduating class at the Military Academy at West Point, with an introduction by the superintendent of the academy. (H. Doc. No. 904.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to have printed as a House document a speech by Col. Goethals with an introduction by the superintendent of the academy. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, August 13, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AINEY: A bill (H. R. 26232) to extend the provisions of the existing pension laws to the Enrolled Militia of Pennsylvania which cooperated with the forces of the United States during the Civil War and to provide for the issuance of certificates of honorable discharge to certain officers and men serving in the same; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 26233) for the study and eradication of pellagra; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 26234) to change the name of oleomargarine to margarin; to change the rate of tax on margarin; to make margarin and other substitutes for dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory into which they may be transported; to afford the Internal Revenue Bureau means for the more efficient detection of fraud and for the collection of revenues; to repeal an act defining butter and imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, approved August 2, 1886, with amendments thereto; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MANN: A bill (H. R. 26235) to authorize the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Little Calumet River, at Indiana Avenue, in said city; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FERRIS: A bill (H. R. 26236) conferring upon the Lawton Railway & Lighting Co. the privileges, rights, and conditions heretofore granted the Lawton & Fort Sill Electric Co. to construct a railroad across certain lands in Comanche County, Okla.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. JACKSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 350) proposing an amendment to the Constitution relative to the manner of amending the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 351) proposing an amendment to Article V of the Constitution relative to the manner of amending the Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 352) proposing an amendment to the Constitution, Article I, section 9, relating to taxation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania: Resolution (H. Res. 683) to print 5,000 copies of "Report on the Miners' Strike in Bituminous Coal Field in Westmoreland County, Pa."; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. RAKER: A resolution (H. Res. 684) providing for printing of hearings on oleomargarine bills; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. HOBSON: A resolution (H. Res. 685) authorizing the printing of 70,000 copies of a bulletin entitled "The Cotton Worm or Caterpillar"; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey: A resolution (H. Res. 686) directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish the House of Representatives with certain information relative to the construction of four torpedo boats and two battleships authorized in the naval appropriation act of March 4, 1911; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CURLEY: A bill (H. R. 26237) for the relief of Murty Lyons; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26238) for the relief of Thomas F. Rose; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26239) granting a pension to Catherine Moran; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26240) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Clifford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26241) granting a pension to Catherine Daley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26242) granting a pension to Margaret A. Murphy; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26243) granting a pension to George C. Haven; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26244) granting a pension to Daniel Sullivan; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26245) granting a pension to Arthur W. Cook; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26246) granting a pension to Edward Harrington; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26247) granting a pension to John L. Howell; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26248) granting an increase of pension to Milo J. Proctor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26249) granting an increase of pension to John V. Meade; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26250) granting an increase of pension to Frederick A. Emery; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26251) granting an increase of pension to John H. Tyler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 26252) granting a pension to Wilbur K. Baker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26253) granting a pension to Tony Judd; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26254) granting a pension to Lincoln Mothersbaugh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 26255) granting a pension to Elizabeth Cumming; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOLLAND: A bill (H. R. 26256) for the relief of the legal representatives of Seth Foster, John Foster, John Tunis, D. Gordon, William J. Hardy, and Thomas A. Hardy; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MORRISON: A bill (H. R. 26257) granting an increase of pension to William A. Watson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 26258) granting a pension to Charles Schmidt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 26259) granting a pension to Harriet M. Deuel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPEER: A bill (H. R. 26260) granting a pension to Alma A. Shephard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 26261) granting an increase of pension to Maggie E. Van Wert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Memorial of Grand Council of Ohio, Order of United Commercial Travelers of America, favoring change in the date of our national elections; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. DYER: Petition of committee on railway mail pay, relative to pay of railway mail and House Document No. 105; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of the American Mining Congress, favoring appropriation for Bureau of Mines; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of H. McGee Alexander Lodge, No. 3, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of St. Louis, Mo., relative to appropriation for celebration of fiftieth anniversary of the freeing of the negro; to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

By Mr. FORNES: Memorial of Newport News Chamber of Commerce, relative to shipbuilding industry in the United States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts: Petition of District Lodge No. 44, International Association of Machinists, Washington, D. C., relative to House bill 25305, against the stop watch for Government shops; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of Grand Council of Ohio of the Order of United Commercial Travelers, favoring a change in the day for holding of national elections; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. WILSON of New York: Memorial of the Commercial Telegraphers Union of America, of Chicago, Ill., relative to right of telegraphers to strike; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 13, 1912.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

Mr. GALLINGER took the chair as President pro tempore under the previous order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

UNITED STATES MARINE HOSPITAL, NEW YORK (S. DOC. NO. 918).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting certain information relative to the situation in connection with the United States Marine Hospital at New York City, N. Y., and requesting that an appropriation of $22,000 be made to extend the limit of cost for the completion of the building, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 2117) to change the name of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the Public Health Service, to increase the pay of officers of said service, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN MEXICO.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present resolution adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Graham County, Ariz., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAFFORD, ARIZ., August 4, 1912.

To Hon. MARK A. SMITH,
Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, and
Hon. CARL HAYDEN,
Washington, D. C.:

As nearly 3,000 Americans have been forced to leave their homes in Chihuahua and Sonora on account of the violent acts of the revolutionists within the past 10 days and are now being taken care of in different parts of the United States, and as the homes and property of these people are at the mercy of the different bands of revolutionists overrunning that part of the country, with no means of protection, and not daring to return under threats of violence, and as several hundred of the refugees are here in the Gila Valley now seeking assistance and protection from the flagrant outlawry that has been heaped upon them, we, the citizens of Graham County, in mass meeting assembled at Safford, ask that you use your utmost efforts in an endeavor to induce the Federal Government to protect the American citizens now residing in the Republic of Mexico, and also the homes and property of those who have been forced to come to the United States for the preservation of their lives.

Viewing the situation from close quarters, we deem the situation very grave, and while we do not advocate United States intervention at this time, we do believe that the Government is fully warranted in demanding that the Mexican Government give proper protection to United States citizens and property belonging to them; then in case this demand is not complied with to compel its recognition.

The refugees from revolutionary depredations can not remain long in the United States, for the reason that everything they own is in the Republic of Mexico, and they must be cared for by their friends or sympathetic citizens until they can return to their homes in Mexico, and we are firmly convinced that the sooner the United States Government gives the Government of Mexico to understand that it must protect American citizens, or that we will do it for them, the better it will be, not only for the unfortunates who have just left Mexico, but also for the human race in general.

Yours, truly,

Z. C. PRINA,
Mayor Town of Safford.

DERRICK SCOW "EDNA."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy relative to the claim of the owners of the derrick scow Edna for damages arising out of the collision with the navy-yard tug Hercules in the harbor at Norfolk, Va., on March 12, 1912, in the sum of $183.76, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 7456) extending to the Port of Pensacola, Fla., the privileges of section 7 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CULLOM:

A bill (S. 7457) to authorize the city of Chicago to construct a bridge across the Little Calumet River, at Indiana Avenue, in said city; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 7458) granting an increase of pension to James P. Bartlett (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 7459) granting a pension to George S. Parker (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

INQUIRIES OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Mr. KENYON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 378), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be, and is hereby, requested to inquire into and make investigation of the practical operation and enforcement of the act to regulate commerce passed in 1887, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, particularly (1) as to the progress made by the Interstate Commerce Commission in devising a more practicable and equitable scheme of rate making; (2) what proof is required respecting challenged rates; (3) what burdens are imposed upon the public in attempts to secure relief; (4) to investigate the practice of carriers with respect to unjust discriminations between localities and between commodities and class freight; (5) to consider the practicability and advisability of Congress prescribing maximum and minimum rates on low-grade commodities moving in large volume; (6) to discover the present evils not reached by existing statutes and the necessity for and recommendation of additional legislation to correct abuses found to exist; (7) to investigate the ownership and control of water fronts, harbors, and wharves upon the seacoasts, on navigable streams, and at lake ports by the railroads and the effect of such ownership and control upon the public welfare; (8) to investigate the ownership, control, operation, use, and practices of terminal railroads and whether said terminal railroads are aids or hindrances to commerce; and (9) to recommend such additional legislation which said investigation may suggest as being necessary to correct abuses or untoward conditions found to exist.

SMITH-LEVER AND PAGE BILLS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a paper which I wish to present to the Senate. It is an article by Eugene Davenport, dean and director of the College of Agriculture and Experiment Station, University of Illinois, on the Smith-Lever and Page bills. While I do not agree with all the views he takes, yet he suggests a line of thought that may aid us in preparing some amendments to the Page bill, and I think it would be well to place it in the RECORD—it is short—that Senators may use it before we reach the discussion of that bill.

There being no objection, the paper was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SMITH-LEVER AND THE PAGE BILLS.

Both these bills aim to benefit agriculture, but in ways that are very different, both in their immediate results and in their final effects upon the educational policy of the country. Some of these differences are worth special mention at this time.

The Smith-Lever bill is simple and direct. It aims at that form of extension work which teaches by the method of actual field demonstration. It assumes that the talking stage is past and the doing stage is here; and it provides for field demonstrations by a plan which will prevent the development of a gigantic political machine, such as is the inevitable consequence of some of the other plans proposed for aiding the farmer. This is avoided by placing the responsibility upon the State colleges of agriculture, where it belongs, and not upon Federal bureaus, exposing the service to scheming politicians seeking Federal positions.

1. The extension work is in the form of extension departments of the colleges, not of actual field demonstrations.

2. This bill proposes a subsidy to induce existing high schools to add agriculture, trades and industries, and home economics to their courses of study. The feature is a good one, but the amounts involved are so small as to be insignificant—about $400 per school for the introduction of these diverse subjects, all expensive.

3. When the contribution is so minute, the Federal control necessarily involved amounts to little else than pestiferous interference. This item should be 10 or 20 times as large to be at all effective.

4. This bill is dangerous to the public-school system at another point in that it establishes an entirely separate system of federally controlled industrial schools of secondary grade in both city and country having no connection with the public schools. Such schools must either duplicate the nonindustrial studies of the public schools or else offer inferior instruction. In the one case it is expensive; in the other it makes a cleavage between the children of industrial people and those of others; and in either case it is dangerous to our democratic institutions as well as demoralizing to our school system. What is needed is not a new system of schools but the completion of those already in existence by the addition of industrial departments.

5. The district agricultural high school herein provided (not fewer than 7 nor more than 15 for a State like Illinois) covers a territory so large as to require the children to leave home—this at an age (14 to 16) at which children should be at home nights. Such schools are therefore practically out of reach of the masses. It will be said that such schools are for older people, but when the high schools are equipped to teach vocational subjects we shall see fewer children dropping out, and the class of young men and women needing schooling at an age when they ought to be at work will disappear.

6. The amounts devoted to these district schools would far better be devoted to the encouragement of consolidation among the small one-room country schools, and the gradual upbuilding of secondary schools with departments of agriculture and home economics, such schools being from the first a part of the general public-school system.

7. The district experiment station is unnecessary and a step backward in research work in agriculture. What is needed is local demonstration, not duplication of experiments. Research is not a matter of locality in most cases, and when it is the people of the experiment station should be free to go wherever the conditions are favorable for the experiment and leave when they get through. The bill fails to distinguish between research, which is costly and should be concentrated, and demonstration, which is comparatively inexpensive and should be scattered.

8. In both district agricultural schools and experiment stations the States are called upon to carry the cost of real estate and buildings, and to pay the expense of all nontechnical instruction—an outlay that will check rather than develop the general course of agricultural education.

Altogether, the Page bill aims well, but its details are not well considered. It aims at too many things, and too many features will be found to work badly. It seems to be drawn to please diverse interests rather than to accomplish a set purpose, and should be divided.

Two, perhaps three, great advances are needed for agriculture: One is the form of extension work provided in the Smith-Lever bill; the other is the subsidization of existing secondary schools for industrial training, as Congress a half century ago subsidized collegiate instruction in agriculture and mechanic arts. Experience has shown that whatever was necessary in the beginning, it is not now necessary to locate this instruction in separate institutions of collegiate grade; no more is it necessary in institutions of secondary grade.

Let Congress pass the Smith-Lever bill and study further into the Page bill.

E. DAVENPORT.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS, June 3, 1912.

Mr. PAGE. In connection with the paper just presented by the Senator from Georgia, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from myself addressed to the editor of the Country Gentleman stating briefly the history of the Page vocational education bill.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 27 1912.

To the EDITOR OF THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN,
Philadelphia, Pa.

MY DEAR SIR: You have kindly sent me an article on the Page vocational education bill and asked that I answer the objections made thereto by Dean Davenport, of the Illinois College of Agriculture. I am happy to comply with your request, but before doing so, or rather as a part of my reply, I must state briefly the history of the Page bill.

That bill was originally introduced in the Senate on the 6th day of April, 1911, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That the bill as then introduced was crude, loosely drawn, and properly obnoxious to many of the criticisms made thereon by Dean Davenport I will frankly admit. Its fundamentals I then believed and still believe to be absolutely sound.

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, after a brief discussion, decided that some one must assume the burden of investigating the laws of the several States with a view to determining what amendments must be made to the original Page bill to make it properly articulate with State laws and State conditions, and inasmuch as I had introduced the bill the committee placed that burden upon my shoulders. I feel compelled to make this explanation because the criticism of Dean Davenport is founded entirely upon the original bill as introduced by me in April, 1911, and not upon the present bill.

During the summer and fall of 1911, in obedience to the command of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I entered into correspondence with the superintendents of public instruction of every State in the Union, with the governor of every State, with the president of every State agricultural college, with State boards of education, with leading educators, and indeed with the editors of the leading agricultural and trade papers of the country.

As a result, on the 26th day of February, 1912, a substitute bill was offered by me in which almost every one of the features of the bill which Dean Davenport has criticized were eliminated. Let me illustrate:

One of his objections to the Page bill is to the research work at the branch stations authorized to be established in connection with the district agricultural schools which the original bill provided for. It may be said in this connection that on the 14th, 15th, and 16th of December last a meeting of educators was held at Washington, at which were present President Thompson, of the Ohio State Agricultural College; Dean Russell, of the Wisconsin State Experiment Station; Dr. Connell, president of the Oklahoma State Agricultural College; Dr. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education; Hon. Willet M. Hays, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.; Mr. G. G. Dawe, of the Southern Commercial Congress; and other leading educators.

The whole question of research work at these branch stations was thoroughly discussed, and, with practical unanimity, the idea of such research work was eliminated. I quote the language of the original bill to which Dean Davenport's criticism applies:

"And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to give the schools and branch experiment stations designated in this act such advice and assistance as will best aid them in carrying out the provisions of this act in relation to instruction and research in agriculture, home economics, and rural affairs, and to issue reports on methods of research, education, and demonstration in agriculture and home economics."

The rewritten bill eliminates entirely every suggestion of research and limits the work to field tests and breeding. Let me quote from the rewritten bill:

"'Branch station' shall mean a branch of a State experiment station conducting field tests and breeding work and located on a district agricultural high-school farm."

It must be remembered that the provision in the original bill above quoted, in which the word "research" is used twice, was one of the features to which President Thompson and Dean Russell most strenuously objected, and it was largely because of their objection that every suggestion of research was abandoned in the rewritten bill and the work at these branch stations limited to the conducting of field tests and breeding.

From what I have stated above it can be readily seen that Dean Davenport has never taken the trouble to familiarize himself with the results of the long months of painstaking labor put into this matter by myself and others, and that had he done so he would never have written the criticism upon the Page bill to which you call my attention and invite an answer.

In support of this theory let me refer to another criticism made by Dean Davenport in his article in the Country Gentleman. He refers in his objection No. 3 to the Federal control, which, he says, is little less than "pestiferous interference." As the bill was originally drawn it is possible that there might have been some ground for this criticism, but the replies received by me from the different States called my attention to this obnoxious feature of the bill, and to relieve the measure of this objection a new clause was incorporated in the act which provided for what was known as a State board for vocational education, which should have "all necessary power to cooperate with the Secretary of the Interior in the administration of the provisions of this act relating to schools of secondary grade and the training of teachers."

And it was provided that this board for vocational education for each State should adopt, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and place in operation a general administrative scheme or plan. Indeed, the bill goes so far as to say that the moneys received by any State for any purpose under the provisions of the act shall be distributed after the manner specified in the act, or—and this provision should be especially noted—"such money shall be distributed on some other basis and according to some other plan previously adopted by the board for vocational education or by legislative authority."

Dean Davenport will find upon reading this bill that nearly every feature of the original measure which he has seen fit to criticize has been eliminated, and when he says, as he does in his article, that this bill is dangerous to the public-school system, in that it establishes an entire system of Federally controlled industrial schools, he is making a statement which he probably would not have made had he read the bill in its present form and noted how fully and perfectly the autonomy of the States had been protected by providing for a State board of vocational education to control the funds appropriated by this act.

It is but fair to say that Dean Davenport makes one objection which has not been eliminated. It is this:

"The district agricultural high schools herein provided (not fewer than 7 nor more than 15 for a State like Illinois) covers a territory so large as to require the children to leave home—this at an age (14 to 16) at which children should be at home nights. Such schools are therefore practically out of reach of the masses. It will be said that such schools are for older people, but when the high schools are equipped to teach vocational subjects we shall see fewer children dropping out."

Dean Davenport is respectfully referred to the district agricultural school in my own State, Vermont, which demonstrates absolutely that he is wrong in his contention. This bill is not a mass of impracticable ideas brought together hastily and without proper consideration. The experience of the several States of the Union which have these district agricultural high schools has been carefully studied, and the results prove conclusively that they are practical; and I shall be pleased to refer Dean Davenport or any other inquirer to several States of this Union which are working out this matter of district agricultural high schools very satisfactorily. I refer to the Vermont school because I am better acquainted with that school than I am with those of the other States; but there is no possible question as to the practicability of this class of schools.

In my judgment, these district agricultural schools will prove to be the college of the farmer boy. It is a well-known fact—and no one knows it better than Dean Davenport—that our agricultural colleges have not brought about the results contemplated by Senator Morrill, the author of the agricultural-college bill.

That they have given us an army of trained experts, who have done a wonderful work in the Department of Agriculture and elsewhere where trained experts are needed, is all the tribute necessary to the great work being done by Dean Davenport and his associates in the agricultural colleges. Without their work I do not know what the condition of our country would be to-day; but we certainly could not proceed with the supplemental work contemplated by this bill had these agricultural colleges not been established through the foresight and wisdom of that grand old man of Vermont, Justin S. Morrill.

I yield to no one in my admiration for Dean Davenport and what his colleges and experiment stations are doing for the country. But the trouble is that those schools are of little avail in staying the great tide from country to city, and we must have an intermediate school where the boy, with no other preparation than that which is received by him in the rural schools, may go and receive that training and inspiration which will make him a practical farmer. I quote from my speech in the Senate of June 5 as to the results which it is believed will follow the establishment of these schools:

"The district agricultural schools will send back to the farms hundreds of thousands of boys to join with the father, who, meanwhile, has been educated by the farm or college extension work provided for by the bill, and together they would join in vitalizing, stimulating, and energizing that more intelligent and more profitable farm management of which our country to-day stands in such great need."

It is difficult to understand why a broad-minded educator like Dean Davenport should not enthusiastically urge not only the appropriation of the $3,000,000 for the benefit of the secondary schools in rural sections, but also that other $3,000,000 which is designed to stimulate and encourage the district agricultural high schools to be established under the provisions of this bill.

The appropriation for these rural schools, supplemented as it is by the appropriation for the district agricultural high school, will do more for the welfare of the rural communities of this country than any other plan or scheme thus far evolved; and I sincerely believe that when Dean Davenport has looked at the whole field from a broader viewpoint he will join with me not only in asking for the appropriation for the rural school but also for the district agricultural high school.

The two combined only call for 6 cents per capita per annum from the National Treasury, and they favorably affect every rural community from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Canada to the Gulf, and together they will, in my judgment, constitute the steps in our rural educational life which will lead the brightest of our farmer boys in large numbers up to the great agricultural colleges like the one over which Dean Davenport so ably presides.

I may be pardoned in this connection for saying that since the original bill—the one which Dean Davenport so appropriately criticizes—was introduced, I have probably written nearly 4,000 letters to leading educators in every section of the country, asking for suggestions of amendment which would perfect the original Page bill and make it practicable and workable.

I do not wish to be misunderstood about this matter. In no case have I yielded any fundamental principle upon which the bill is founded, but with patient, painstaking, industrious labor I have drawn upon the ablest and most broad-minded educators of this country for advice and assistance, and the result, as it seems to me, is a bill which largely meets the ideas of the great educators of the type of Dean Davenport.

He seems to have foreseen just how a good bill should have been drawn, and the fact that the shape in which it is now drawn so thoroughly coincides with his broad-minded views is one of the best evidences, to my mind, that the Page bill is a good bill.

I am compelled to disagree with Dean Davenport in one important particular. He says:

"In both district agricultural schools and experiment stations the States are called upon to carry the cost of real estate and buildings and to pay the expense of all nontechnical instruction—an outlay that will check rather than develop the general course of agricultural education."

Dean Davenport has stated the exact truth as to the purpose of the Page bills, for it does design to do exactly what he says. Appeal after appeal has come to me from different sections of the country urging that the Federal Government pour its treasures into the laps of the States in such a way as to bear the whole or a larger part of the expense of the great educational work which the Page vocational education bill seeks to accomplish. To yield to this pressure would have been to sacrifice one of the important fundamentals of the bill, and I repeat in no instance has a single important fundamental been abandoned.

The Federal Government should not assume the general burdens of education in the States, but it should rather cooperate with the States, to the end that instead of there being 48 separate and distinct systems, in no way coordinated, the Federal Government should proceed to point the way—to blaze the trail, so to speak—leaving it for the States themselves in their own good time to accept one, two, three, or all the provisions of the bill at their own option and in their own good way, in no manner hampered, except by the proviso that if they accept of this bounty of the Government, they shall satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that they will carry out the spirit, intent, and the purpose of the bill.

In closing, Dean Davenport gives me credit for being a well-meaning man. He says:

"Altogether, the Page bill aims well, but its details are not well considered."

Inasmuch as I have shown beyond the possibility of a doubt that Dean Davenport did not, when he made this criticism, know what these details are, I think I may be excused for omitting to answer any of his generalizations. I have, at more length than I intended, taken up and answered his several criticisms, as given in the Country Gentleman of July 13, and have endeavored to reply to them in no critical or captious spirit, because I realize that by inadvertence Dean Davenport has made a criticism of a measure as to the contents of which he was not sufficiently advised.

Very truly, yours,

CARROLL S. PAGE.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL (S. DOC. NO. 919).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. At the request of the acting chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs I present a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20728) and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the conference report.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Inasmuch as it is to be printed in the RECORD I do not see any necessity to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be ordered printed in the RECORD, without objection.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. "That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be sent to the First National Bank of Douglas, Ariz., checks payable to the order of the individual Indian owners who are members of the band of Mexican Kickapoo Indians now resident in the Republic of Mexico, for and in the amount of all moneys known as lease money now on deposit with or in any manner under the control of the agents and officers of the Interior Department and all like money due or becoming due or collectible by them prior to the 1st day of January, 1914, and belonging to any of the said Mexican Kickapoo Indians."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 113: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 7 and 8 of the proposed amendment, after the word "than," strike out the words "February 1, 1913," and insert in lieu thereof the words "December 1, 1912"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to remove to and establish on the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation, in New Mexico, all persons now held as Apache prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, in Oklahoma, who may desire to go to said Mescalero Apache Reservation. The desires of said Indians shall be ascertained by a commission of two persons, one a representative of the War Department and one a representative of the Interior Department, to be selected by the heads of said departments, respectively. The personal effects, including horses, cattle, farm implements, and household goods of those electing to remove to said Mescalero Apache Reservation, shall also be removed and delivered to the respective owners on that reservation. The proportionate share of those removed in the common property of the tribes or bands shall be segregated and administered for their common benefit. The Secretary of War may, in his discretion, if he deems it advisable, sell either the individual or common property, and pay over the proceeds of such sales to the Secretary of the Interior, to be by him invested in property suitable in character for the use and benefit of those whose property is sold.

"That immediately upon the arrival and establishment of said Indians on the said reservation they shall be released from the status of prisoners of war and shall thereafter be and remain under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, upon equal footing in all respects with other Indians belonging on said reservation.

"That the Indians of the band electing to stay in Oklahoma may remain on the Fort Sill Military Reservation in their present status until further provision is made for them. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to purchase land of deceased Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians to the amount of not to exceed 80 acres for each of the Apache prisoners of war who remain in Oklahoma and desire land in severalty: Provided, That as fast as said Indians are so allotted they shall be released from the status of prisoners of war and shall thereafter be and remain under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That lands so purchased shall be held in trust for said Indians by the United States for the period of 25 years, except that fee patent may issue at any time, in accordance with rules and regulations governing Indian allotments generally.

"That Martin Grab, E. L. Welch, and the heirs of George Wrattan, white men who have resided among and rendered valuable services to these Indians for many years, shall be entitled to the same benefits under this act as the Indians themselves.

"That for the purpose of removing and establishing said Indians on the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation there be, and hereby is, appropriated the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be used under the direction of the Secretary of War; and for the purpose of purchasing lands for those remaining in Oklahoma there be, and hereby is, appropriated the sum of $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "eighteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 147: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$57,170"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 150: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "Wisconsin," strike out the word "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seven"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 156: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "thirty-five thousand and twenty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 157: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the Senate amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the necessity or advisability of constructing wagon roads on the Shoshone Indian Reservation, Wyo., the cost thereof to be reimbursed out of the proceeds of sale of surplus lands of such reservation, and to report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912, in which report he shall submit specific recommendations in respect to the kind of roads to be constructed, their location and extent, together with an estimate of cost therefor."

And the Senate agree to the same.

MOSES E. CLAPP,
GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JNO. H. STEPHENS,
C. D. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I also ask to have the report printed as a document, that it may be distributed among Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On August 10, 1912:

S. 7195. An act to authorize the Great Northern Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River.

On August 12, 1912:

S. J. Res. 129. Joint resolution to provide transportation for American citizens fleeing from threatened danger in the Republic of Mexico.

On August 13, 1912:

S. 7163. An act authorizing the State of Arizona to select lands within the former Fort Grant Military Reservation and outside of the Crook National Forest in partial satisfaction of its grant for State charitable, penal, and reformatory institutions.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITIONS (S. DOC. NO. 917).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, furnishing, so far as is known to the Department of State, the information requested in the resolution adopted by the Senate on July 13, 1911, concerning invitations extended to the United States to participate in expositions in foreign countries and invitations extended by the United States to foreign countries to participate in expositions held in the United States.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 13, 1912.

PUBLIC HEALTH AND MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives on Senate bill 2117.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2117) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask about that bill. Is it a substitute for the various measures which are pending here for a consolidation of the different agencies pertaining to public health?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; it does not involve those bills.

Mr. BURTON. Then what is the object of this bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a bill passed by the Senate some time ago, which went to the House. It has been amended in the House, and I now ask for an agreement with the House. It increases to some extent the salaries of the health officers.

Mr. BURTON. Does it change their duties or responsibilities?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that it supersedes those bills and makes them unnecessary at present. It entirely removes them from present consideration. There are various health bills. One is the Owen bill, and there are a number of bills of that sort. They are very voluminous measures. This supplants them and makes them unnecessary, certainly for the present.

Mr. BURTON. Does that mean that there would be no occasion for the passage of any of those bills if this passes?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. None whatever, in my judgment. I do not mean that there may not be occasion for legislation to better the service at a future time, but certainly there is no necessity for the consideration of those bills at present.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not true that as the bill passed the Senate formerly it was merely a measure increasing or readjusting salaries?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is chiefly that. There is a slight increase in salaries, but not making them equal to that of the same officers in the Army or Navy.

Mr. BURTON. As it comes back from the House it is a measure taking the place of a bill for a department of public health.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In my judgment, it does.

Mr. BURTON. It seems to me it ought to be discussed somewhat if it is a measure of such far-reaching importance.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It does not interfere with any Senator presenting those other bills if he sees fit to do so. It simply increases to a very small degree the officers in this service. Then there are some other slight matters that are of immaterial consequence. It relieves a very great injustice and hardship under which these men have been laboring for some years. After it has passed the House and been very generally agreed on by the different schools of medicine, and by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], who is very much opposed to some of these measures, but is willing to see this bill passed, after a close examination, so that all the schools of medicine which have been at variance are willing to concede this measure of justice, I sincerely hope it may be granted at this time.

Mr. BURTON. Has there been any hearing from those who advocate the department of public health?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There has been.

Mr. BURTON. On this particular bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. On the subject but not on the particular bill, but this particular bill is the outcome of those hearings, and an evolution from those various bills which have heretofore been so much discussed.

Mr. BURTON. I take it the passage of this bill would in no way prevent the taking up of a comprehensive measure along the lines suggested in the Owen bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think so.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It could not possibly interfere with that.

Mr. BURTON. I do not feel like objecting or taking time for discussion. It seems to me, however, that this measure comes before us under rather singular circumstances, and that its scope has been very much enlarged by the action of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The scope has been very much reduced.

Mr. FLETCHER. It will rather reduce it. If the Senator will allow me, I will state the effect of the bill.

The present salaries of the officers of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service are as follows:

Surgeon General	$5,000
Assistant Surgeon General	2,900
Surgeon	2,500
Passed assistant surgeon	2,000
Assistant surgeon	1,600

The proposed scale of salaries is less than that allowed officers of the Army and Navy. The bill does not increase the commutation allowed the officers. The present commutation is far less than that allowed officers of the Army and Navy.

The bill does not increase the functions of the service, but merely grants specific authority for work which is now being performed under general laws.

That is the whole scope and effect of the measure. It passed the Senate and has come back from the House and is here in regular order.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I was instrumental yesterday in having this bill passed over until to-day in order that I might look more carefully into its provisions.

The bill as it passed the Senate was simply a bill to increase the salaries of the surgeons in the medical service, to which I had no objection whatever. As it came from the House it has certain provisions relating to the authority of the bureau, some of which are objectionable to me, but I concluded after an examination of the bill that I would not oppose a concurrence in the amendments of the House under the circumstances.

I am, as the Senate knows, very earnestly opposed to the passage of what is known as the Owen bill. This bill has one or two provisions in substance the same as those contained in the Owen bill, but they are not of a serious character, and I think they are practically providing by law doing what the department is actually doing at the present time.

Certainly, Mr. President, I have no disposition to cripple the service in any way whatever, and I did not oppose the Owen bill upon such grounds as that, but I did oppose it on the ground that it was making such extensions of the service as I thought were unreasonable and unnecessary and in violation of the rights of some of the people of this country. This measure I do not regard as trespassing upon those rights and therefore I have consented without further objection to allow the action to be taken as proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida moves that the Senate agree to the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

THE POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the unanimous-consent agreement will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Tuesday, August 13, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and that not later than 4 o'clock p. m., on said day, the Senate will proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered, except that anyone offering an amendment shall be allowed five minutes to explain the same, and the chairman of the committee or any Senator shall have a like time to discuss such amendment, and upon the bill itself—through the regular parliamentary stages—to its final disposition.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], which was under consideration on yesterday, will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, in the committee amendment, amend the part proposed to be stricken out by adding after the word "employees," on line 25, the words:

Not affiliated with outside organizations.

So that, if amended, it will read:

Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees not affiliated with outside organizations having for its objects, among other things, improvements in the condition of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leave of absence, by any person or groups of persons in said postal service, or the presenting by any such person or groups of persons of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss this, only to say one word. I do not believe it is within the province or the right of the United States Senate or any other legislative body, because of the employment of an American citizen, to attempt by legislation to restrict his rights. I believe that a postal employee has as much right, as an American citizen, to join what he pleases and act as he pleases as any Senator on this floor. He has a right to join the Masons; he has a right to join the Knights of Pythias; he has a right to join any organization. Because we desire certain service of certain individuals, why should we restrict their rights as American citizens and say that they can not join a certain labor organization?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. There is no objection, as I understand it, from any source for a postal employee to join any organization if the membership of that organization does not affect undesirably his service as a Government officer. I can not understand why objection should be made to an order of the department prohibiting an officer of the department from belonging to an association if the belonging to that association is detrimental to the public service.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We might as well say what church he shall belong to if the tenets of that church affects him, in our judgment, adversely.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is an entirely different proposition, and if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is different in name, but not in principle.

Mr. BRISTOW. One is whether or not he shall belong to an organization and affiliate with an organization if such affiliation will result in detriment to the public service and thereby lessen his value as a public servant.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, I reply to the Senator from Kansas, you should legislate against an organization the membership of which renders any man unworthy of a position in the Government of the United States.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, it is not desired here to legislate against any organization whatever, but to leave the department officials free to enforce proper discipline in the public service. That is all that is desired.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Who will be the judge of that, I will ask?

Mr. BRISTOW. The department officials charged with the responsibility of administering the affairs of this Government are to be the judges, and not a Member of Congress, because it is not his function to interfere with the executive departments, unless they do an unlawful thing, and then he has a lawful remedy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to Senators that under the unanimous-consent agreement the five-minute rule is in operation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will remember that in yielding, because they lose their time when they yield to another Senator. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] this question: Is this not an indirect way of saying that membership in certain labor organizations is dangerous to governmental affairs?

Mr. BRISTOW. It is not.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then why would you preclude them from membership in such organizations?

Mr. BRISTOW. I would not preclude them unless that membership and their relation to the organization interferes with the public service. Neither, as I understand it, will any Post Office Department official; and if he does he goes beyond his authority or beyond proper administration; and because some departmental official may have done that does not justify the enactment of a law which might bother or interfere with the service at some other time when a departmental official is undertaking to do his duty in the protection of the public service.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Just one sentence, and I shall have nothing further to say. It seems to me a subterfuge and an indirection to lay restrictions on one class of public servants that we do not lay on every citizen of the United States when it comes to a question of a man's rights as a citizen. I, for one, shall not vote for any measure that insinuates that we are incompetent to deal with the subject directly, but must go indirectly to do that thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will permit the Chair, the Chair desires to make a correction in the statement he just made. Upon examining the terms of the unanimous-consent agreement it appears that the five-minute rule does not apply until the hour of 4 o'clock has been reached. The Senator from South Carolina will proceed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not care to go into any fuller discussion of the question. Every fair-minded Senator on this floor knows that the only criterion by which we are to measure public service is efficiency. We can promote and demote on that basis, but it comes with a sinister meaning to me when the Senate of the United States and the lawmaking bodies of this country begin to lay legal restrictions upon the rights of the individual citizens. We have no right to inject that here.

If we believe that certain labor organizations are beginning to menace this country and to have a bad influence upon its citizenship, then it is our duty to ferret that out and prohibit the organizations that threaten the welfare of this country and not to be cowardly enough to say to certain officials of the Government, "You shall not affiliate with these men or with these organizations." Give them the full liberty of all institutions, of all societies in this country, and then promote or demote them according to their personal efficiency or deficiency.

I would prefer to see all reference to membership in any society stricken from any bill that we are seriously to discuss. My position would be that according to the employee's efficiency should he be promoted and according to his inefficiency should he be demoted. I for one, so long as these organizations exist, so long as they are struggling against what they consider the inequalities amongst men, so long as they organize for self-protection, shall not stand here and by indirection inveigh against these organizations.

It is cowardly to do so. If we believe they are detrimental to the best interests of the American Government let us come out in the open and say so and pass legislation to dissolve their organizations. But as they are not detrimental to the Government I for one shall not stand upon this floor and by indirection say that the employees of the United States Government must come out from amongst them, that the members of these labor organizations are not worthy to have in their midst employees of the American Government. And you dare not say it. But that is what you are saying in this bill. I do not propose to sit quietly and see this injustice done. We are practically saying that in order to keep our Government pure and uncontaminated from these organizations, we will not allow an employee of the Government to belong to them. It is a shame on the United States Senate; it is cowardice and it is a subterfuge.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I desire merely to say a few words. I am informed, and I think very reliably so, that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is entirely acceptable to the employees of the Government. I do not think that my information is incorrect. They believe that this does not restrict their liberties in any way whatever in the line suggested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I shall, therefore, take pleasure in voting for the amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, may I ask that the amendment be again stated? I did not undertsand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, line 25, after the words "postal employees," it is proposed to insert the words "not affiliated with any outside organization," so that it will read:

That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees not affiliated with any outside organization having for its objects, among other things, improvements in the condition of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leave of absence, by any person or groups of persons in said postal service, or the presenting by any such person or groups of persons of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall vote against all this legislation, because I do not think it ought to come in on an appropriation bill. This is brought in just as was brought in on an appropriation bill the effort to change the term of service of civil-service clerks. The relation of the Government to our civil-service employees, if it is to be modified, should be modified by broad legislation, carefully prepared and applicable to all the departments. This effort to put in a little dab here and another little dab there with reference to employees of particular departments is utterly demoralizing to our general civil-service law. We ought not to have put anything in another appropriation bill about the tenure of office of civil-service clerks; and we ought not to have anything in this bill about the civil-service relations of the Post Office Department other than such provisions as would be applicable to all the departments. If we would leave these subjects out of the appropriation bills and broadly undertake to amend and perfect our civil-service law through one bill on that subject, we might hope to have intelligent, useful, and valuable legislation; but so long as we seek by these little specks here and there to interfere with the civil service, we will not improve it and we are likely to injure it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Before the vote is taken I should like to say, in this connection, that if some other Senator does not do so, I shall draft an amendment to this provision prohibiting the heads of departments from discriminating against or punishing any employee who exercises his right as a citizen to petition Congress or any Member of Congress, and that upon testimony to the effect that he has exercised such right as an employee he shall not suffer any evil consequences therefrom at the hands of the head of any department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHILTON. Before the vote is taken, I should like to have the amendment again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BRYAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his named was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. As I observe he is not in the Chamber I shall refrain from voting; otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). I should like to inquire whether the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MASSEY] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. SWANSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Nevada. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is not present. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE. I will transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN. I am requested to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. I understand that he has not voted. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (after having voted in the negative). I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN]. I ask to have this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is detained from the Senate on important business.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is unavoidably absent. I think I can state from his conversation with me that, if present, he would vote "nay" upon this amendment.

Mr. STONE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS];

The Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY];

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER]; and

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER].

I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bourne	Burton	Jones	Root
Bradley	Crawford	Nelson	Sanders
Brandegee	Dillingham	Oliver	Smoot

So the amendment of Mr. JONES was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the amendment of the committee to strike out.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment recommended by the National Civil Service Reform League of New York. I will state, for the information of Senators, that in the study of the House bill, I, as chairman of the committee, subpœnaed to appear before the committee Mr. Edward J. Cantwell, secretary of the National Association of Letter Carriers, purporting to represent a membership of 28,200. I also subpœnaed to appear before the committee Mr. Frank T. Rogers, president of the United National Association of Post Office Clerks, representing a membership of 22,000. The reason for subpœnaing these gentlemen was that an Executive order prohibits them from communicating with Members of Congress regarding legislative matters, and I desire to give them an opportunity of appearing before the committee and submitting to the committee any complaints or suggestions that they might have to make in reference to the administration of the Post Office Department. I submitted to both these gentlemen the proposed amendment recommended by the National Civil Service Reform League, and they both stated that in their opinion the amendment would be perfectly satisfactory to the members of their associations.

Mr. President, I do not think any Member of Congress is a better friend of labor than I am. There may be far abler Members, but I believe thoroughly in organized labor, just as I believe in the permissive organization of capital; but I believe that those organizations should be responsible to the police force of the Government. I do not believe, however, that any American citizen should put any organization ahead of his duty and fealty to the Government itself.

In all organized society, in my opinion, there are three great forces struggling for supremacy—the religious force, the commercial force, and the police force of the Government. In my opinion, to be curative and successful, society must be the coordination of these three forces, with the police force of the Government supreme and superior to the other two forces.

I send to the desk the amendment referred to and will ask that the Secretary read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, line 23, it is proposed to change the proviso so as to read:

That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization, composed of postal employees only, which is not secret nor affiliated with any outside organization and which may have for its objects, among other things, improvements in the conditions of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor, and leaves of absence, or the presenting of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof, by any person or groups of persons employed in the postal service, shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation, or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, it seems to me that the action of the Senate upon the proposed amendment will in effect be a declaration either that persons employed in the public service of the United States have authority to strike against the Government, or that they shall not have that authority. I can give no other construction to the amendment which is proposed to the bill as it came from the House as compared with the amendment now proposed by the chairman of the Senate committee.

The Senator from South Carolina I think is mistaken in the idea that to forbid postal employees to become members of any general association which involves in its rules and order of discipline or obligation to respond to the conclusions of the whole body by striking is equivalent to a condemnation of such an organization. It may well be that an association formed for the purpose of purging and bringing about improvement in the conditions of labor men in their relations of contracts with other citizens, natural or corporate persons, may be praiseworthy, may be entitled to commendation; and I think that such organizations are entitled to commendation, and at the same time we can not permit the same rules, the same discipline, the same obligations to be applied to the bringing of coercion upon the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ROOT. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then the Senator proposes by his line of argument that the Government shall recognize another government within this Government, and in order to avoid a conflict with that government that it shall prohibit its employees by law from membership in that other government. Do we not go upon the assumption that all Government employees have the same relation to the Government regardless of what society or organization they are affiliated with, and whenever and wherever they shall be inefficient we deal with them as a Government against a citizen. Therefore if a strike should come we would just remove the strikers from their places, if necessary, and move along, as the Government is the supreme authority.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, this proposed legislation recognizes the existing facts. I propose simply that we should not close our eyes to what the facts are and to the real meaning of the legislation. The facts are that there are great and powerful organizations among the wage earners of the country which have accomplished and are accomplishing beneficent effects through the discipline that is established for the direction and the guidance of their members in their relations with the contracting employers of labor. The fact is that we can not permit that same discipline to be turned against the public service of the United States.

Why, sir, here will be the greatest of all labor organizations, the people of the United States and we should not permit men who assume a public duty toward all the people, when they accept employment under the statutes that we enact, to assume an obligation that imposes upon them the duty to turn against their country the forces of coercion. They are at liberty when in private employment to turn against their contracting employers.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from New York allow me to ask him one question, which seems to be a logical deduction from his line of argument? His argument leads inevitably to the logical conclusion that he looks upon certain labor organizations as very dangerous to this Government, and a member thereof is not worthy to be a Government employee, and by legislation of Congress would forbid him membership therein.

Now, if that be true, would it not be more in keeping with the spirit that should govern here to enact such legislation as to prohibit such organizations in this country, rather than to go at it indirectly and forbid employees of the Government from joining such an organization?

I take it that the right of a citizen or a number of citizens to band themselves together for the purpose of bettering their condition is an inherent right. If the wages the Government pays its employees are not sufficient, they would not necessarily strike against the Government, but would petition this body for a redress of their grievances. Even now the heads of departments are denying these employees, individually and collectively, to appear before their Congressmen and their Senators to lay their grievances before them. They can not do it now if the testimony before our committee is to be taken as true for fear that the executive or the administrative heads of departments shall denote them or turn them out incontinently.

I say that the right of petition, the right to petition for redress of wrongs, the right to lay imaginary or actual grievances before this body is a right that is now guaranteed to every citizen.

Further than that, I believe if we have an organization in this country that menaces the welfare of the private citizen or the private business it menaces the Government as well. They each and all are subject to the Government in a political sense.

We have no right to stand here and say by indirection that certain organizations are so pernicious in their influence, in their by-laws and rules and regulations that a governmental employee can not become a member of them without menacing the welfare of the Government.

In conclusion I want to say, Mr. President, that if the practice of our departments had been such that each individual employee had the right to go when he suffers for redress without let or hindrance and have a full and fair hearing given we would not have been called upon for this legislation.

The difference between organized capital and organized labor is that organized capital uses dollars, organized labor makes use of labor. Strikers have no right to burn or to commit murder.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether he is now referring to postal employees?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am referring to postal employees.

Mr. ROOT. Does the Senator say that they have a right to do the things that he is now describing?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not. I say that no member of a labor organization has that right. But I say that, without the right proposed in this bill, or by some such legislation as is now proposed, he is liable to suffer an injustice. When an employee of the Government believes he is not treated fairly and goes to the legislative department or to his Congressman or Senator and asks that his case be heard and that righteousness and justice shall be meted to him, for that employee to be summarily dismissed from the service for exercising this right is an outrage. Is that American? Is that a republican form of government? When denied this right, what is there left for him?

Take your labor organizations. When they come and plead that they are not receiving sufficient for the labor that they are expending upon work and ask for a raise of wages, history is full of the fact that they are arbitrarily turned down. Their requests have not been heard. Strikes have followed. Blood has been shed. Yet all the sins have been visited upon the defenseless head of those who did not have money sufficient to buy position and power. You know that is true and I know that it is true. I would rather arbitrate and let justice and equity prevail. If you do not do this, it will work itself out in disaster. If you incorporate a false principle in this law, it will work itself out in disaster.

Mr. ROOT. The Senator from South Carolina argues with his customary eloquence and earnestness upon the features in which these two propositions agree and he passes over with scant reference the matter of difference between the two. The amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee affords to these postal employees full opportunity to organize, full opportunity to petition Congress, full opportunity to inform Members of Congress of all the wrongs and all the causes of complaint that they have. The difference between the two propositions is that one gives to them these rights that are adequate, ample, complete for the redress of all the wrongs that may be done in their relation to the Government, and the other adds the right to ally themselves with labor organizations or organize for the purpose of dealing with private contracts and to put themselves under a discipline that involves and implies the right to strike against the Government, and by striking to paralyze the operations of the Government. That is the difference.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. ROOT. And we can not vote against this proposal of the chairman of the committee without voting that the postal employees of this Government shall have a right to stop the mails and to coerce the Government of the United States by obeying the discipline of a great labor organization ordered for the purpose of compelling an improvement of conditions by striking.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if he considers the privilege of striking illegal?

Mr. ROOT. I consider that striking is not a privilege, but a right as between citizens, a right by laborers against corporations, a right on the part of an employee against an employer, but there is no right as between an employee who has assumed duty to the public and the Government of his country. It will be a sorry day when the Senate of the United States puts upon the statute book a virtual assertion that there is such a right.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have but one word to say and then I am through with this discussion. We as a legislative body can punish any infraction of the law both as to corporations and individuals. If any individual employee or any organized body of employees of the Government should break the law, we are preeminently the body to meet that issue. It is the right of the individual to quit work when he does not think he has sufficient pay, providing his contract does not preclude the possibility of that right. This is a fundamental principle of our law. When they have made a contract we can hold them by that contract, but we have no right to say to them, "In the exercise of your relationship to the Government you shall not join any and every organization in this country that is legal."

Mr, ROOT. Mr. President, I should like to put a direct question to the Senator from South Carolina. Does the Senator think that the postal employees of the United States may have the right to strike against the Government?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I believe the postal employees of the United States Government, unless they shall enter into a contract with the Government so that they shall relinquish certain rights, if they do not think they are getting sufficient compensation, can quit when they please, but I do not say they have a right to menace the Government.

Mr. ROOT. Then the Senator believes that they have a right to strike?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I believe they have the right, if that is a strike, yes.

Mr. ROOT. The Senator believes they should have a right to strike. Then, Mr. President, we are meeting squarely the question, Shall these postal employees of the United States have a right to strike against the Government? Next the question will be, Shall the naval employees and the military employees of the United States have the right to strike against the Government, and next the question will be, Have we a Government?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I make this qualification: The employees of the Government differ in their relation to the Government from Army and Navy. One is under civil law, the others under military law. The civil employee has the right to resign or quit when he chooses. I am not denying him that right, nor would the Senator from New York, either.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator says, as I understand, very emphatically that he thinks the postal employees of this country have the right to strike.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; understand me——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me finish my question, because the Senator undoubtedly said the postal employees of the country have a right to strike. He now proposes to retain in the bill a provision which amounts to an invitation to these organized employees of the Government to affiliate themselves with the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator can not put that in my mouth, nor was it my statement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That it might authorize them to do that, then.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; but that does not invite. Stick to the text.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think myself it amounts to an invitation to do it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator states what he thinks and not what I think.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator proposes to leave in this bill a provision which, I think, constitutes a direct invitation to organizations of the postal employees to affiliate themselves with the American Federation of Labor, a great and powerful organization. One of the great weapons which that organization and all labor organizations use—and I am not complaining about that in their contests with their employers—is the sympathetic strike. A strike is inaugurated, for example, upon a railroad for higher wages and affiliated organizations are invited to strike against their employers in order to bring pressure upon the railroad company to increase the wages or to accede to the demands of its employees.

Now, does the Senator from South Carolina think that we ought to pass legislation here which will enable the American Federation of Labor to call upon the postal employees of this Government, as an affiliated organization with them, to engage in a sympathetic strike against the Government of the United States in order to bring pressure to bear upon private employers to accede to the demands of their employees?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will ask the Senator from Utah a question. The Federation of Labor is organized under the laws of the United States, is it not?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the Senator answer my question and I will answer his.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am answering the Senator's question by asking a question that is an explanatory exegesis of it. As the Senator from Utah, by indirection, by logical deduction, says that there is an organization in America in which membership unfits a man for Government employment. Does not the Senator say that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from South Carolina can not put those words into my mouth.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, why does the Senator want to prohibit them?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not say anything of the kind, and the Senator knows I did not mean anything of the kind.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, why prohibit membership in that organization?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would not prohibit it. I have no objection to postal employees affiliating themselves with private labor organizations, if I may use the expression, if they be not subject to the calls of those private labor organizations to engage in a sympathetic strike against the Government.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. For what reason?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. For the reason I state.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Very good. Then the logical sequence is that membership in these organizations, organized and chartered under the laws of the United States, is detrimental to the Government.

Now, just a final word. Why do we not, then, pass a law prohibiting the pernicious feature of the strike? Why do we not eliminate by national legislation those things, both on the side of capital and on the side of labor, that bring about the pernicious influence? Why do we not guarantee by law to every citizen, whether he be a capitalist or whether he be a laborer, the full right of every other citizen, without attempting to come here and by indirection say: "You can not belong to the Knights of Labor; you can not belong to the American Federation of Labor"?

I am not standing here asking that there shall be an open door to rapine, to plunder, and to murder, but I am pleading for the right of every American citizen.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator from South Carolina will pardon me, he is talking about something that none of us disagree with him about. The question I submitted to the Senator from South Carolina was whether he thought the Government of the United States ought to authorize associations of postal employees to affiliate themselves with the great private labor organizations of the country in such way that they might be called upon to engage in a sympathetic strike against the Government of the United States. Does the Senator think we ought to do that?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I tell you what I do say: You have the question to the exact point that we have been striving to elucidate. Do not forbid them membership, but hold them directly to their contract with the Government, and if at any time any member or body of them see fit to petition us and come and ask redress they shall have that right to have that redress.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not object to that. Does the Senator know what happened in France very recently when the Government employees by a strike brought the Government to a standstill?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do happen to know——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator think that was a fortunate condition for the French Government?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not care to compare America and American citizens with the effervescent spirit of the French people nor with their traditions.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Have I the floor or have these Senators?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call Senators' attention to the fact that under the rule no Senator can speak more than twice on the same subject on the same day without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I just want to make an explanation while I am on my feet, Mr. President. I said what might perhaps be misunderstood, and that was to the query of the Senator from New York [Mr. Root]. I said that I believed that the employees of the Government have the right to strike. Now, my modification of that I want to emphasize. They have the right, if they do not think they are getting just compensation, under the terms of their contract, to quit work and appeal for higher wages, or for redress of grievances, if they think they suffer them; but I am not standing here to be put in a position that it is attempted to put me in—that I believe in violence in strikes. I believe in the right of individuals to assert their individuality.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This permission to join other labor organizations, if we adopt it, has no exceptions to it. They might become members of the American Federation of Labor, or they might become members of the Industrial Workers of the World, or they might become members of the Structural Iron Association. They might join Hayward's miners union. They might come under the influence which does exist in some quarters and in some organizations that these contests are nothing more nor less than war. They openly state that it is war and that the taking of human life in it is justified because it is war; that the blowing up of bridges, the destruction of great buildings, the blowing of human lives into human atoms, is justified because it is war. Now, are we to have no discipline? In great organizations of the Government, in operative forces like the Railway Mail Service, are we to have no discipline?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CRAWFORD. If men in these organizations who may have good records as far as the performance of their particular duties is concerned are nevertheless affiliated with influences outside that may have the effect of arousing a spirit of mischief, making a rebellion all along the line, is the head of the department to have no power of discipline? Does the Senator want to break down and put into chaos everything like discipline in these forces?

It seems to me, if the Senator please, we come right down to the clean-cut issue under the amendment offered as to whether or not the Senator wants to be frank and come out and say that he favors giving these men the right to join any forces and make any alliances and participate in meetings sympathetic or otherwise. We might as well face the real issue in the controversy. I have no hesitation in saying that I shall refuse by any vote of mine to put the Government into such a position as that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator who has just taken his seat has reiterated and drawn sharply the issue again that labor organizations are unfitted to become the recipients of membership from Government employees.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator is not fair in any such statement as that. I called attention to the particular things that are matters of common knowledge, and we play the part of a coward if we do not look them squarely in the face and admit that they do exist. I do not say that they are not noble organizations, valuable organizations, with rights that are protected, and that we are glad they exist. But these others exist also.

I said in the start that we make no distinction between the one and the other—whether it is the Industrial Workers of the World or men who use dynamite or your legitimate, lawful, and useful organizations. If they can join one, they can join the other, and the department can not question their right to do it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then the Senator will agree with me, I hope, that rather than go by this indirection let us take the organization that he mentions as being so corrupt and dangerous and prohibit such organizations under the law of the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. My contention is that instead of our undertaking to individualize and specialize by legislation here each one of them we should leave some power, some discretion, some authority in the executive departments and the heads of the executive departments to pass upon the question whether or not the affiliation of these operating forces in the Government with certain outside organizations are or are not in the interest of the public. We should not take away all discretion and apparently, by our affirmative action here, invite these men to join any organization of whatsoever kind that they may decide is promotive of the best interests of their order.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have not made any assertion to lead any Senator to believe that if there is an organization whose by-laws, rules, and constitution are detrimental to the interests of the individual and the body politic, that there should not be adequate legislation to eradicate it, but so long as such organizations are legalized, so long as they are looked upon as legal organizations, we have no right to restrict the membership of any American citizen if he sees fit to join them. I have not stood, nor do I stand here to plead that the heads of the departments should not have the power to execute and administer the law as we pass it. What I am saying is that we have no right to give the power into the hands of any one man or the head of any department to say that a man shall be demoted if he complains, or that he shall be turned out of office if he joins legal organizations, and to give an official the discretionary power to say which are pernicious and which are not pernicious. Let us by law say which are pernicious and which are not; let us by law say what shall be organized and what shall have the right and sanction of the law and what shall not, and not leave it to the head of a department to say to what organization I may belong and what shall determine by fitness or my unfitness, without my having the right to go before a competent jury and place my case, and prove or fail to prove my contention. I shall not be put in a false position. I say that if there exist in this country organizations that are a menace to our Government, a menace to the character and morals of our people, we should stamp them out, and then as to those that do exist and are legalized under our law, we should give every American citizen the right to become a member thereof without the interference of the heads of the departments.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think some of us are getting blood in our heads without reason. To begin with, if I understand the situation, there is no such organization, central and representative or direct, as has been described here in part in this debate; that is to say, there is no rule among labor organizations requiring them to indulge in sympathetic strikes. There is no obligation taken by any member of any labor organization that I know of that requires the members of that organization to respond to a call for a strike, unless that call comes from the head of their own organization, to settle grievances that exist in their own craft or calling.

I will state it again, in order that there may be no misunderstanding. As I understand, if there is such an organization as the Carpenters' Union, the members may be required to obey the mandate of their own officers in order to obtain a redress for grievances they suffer; but if the bricklayers have a trouble, a disturbance, a grievance, there is no obligation upon the carpenters to join the bricklayers in their strike. That is done at times, but it is done not because of the existence of any obligation but because the members of one organization sympathize with the members of another and come to their assistance voluntarily.

Another word by way of preliminary. There may be in this country anarchists and lawbreakers who have organized and call themselves by some labor appellation, but they are not labor organizations, they are anarchistic organizations, and you have no more right to charge them up to legitimate labor organizations than you have the right to charge to the Christian religion the enormities which are sometimes perpetrated by a society of cranks or criminals who have adopted the name of a religious organization. That is not the right way to argue this question.

The great labor organizations of the country are composed of law-abiding citizens. They are engaged in a great work for the upbuilding and the protection of their members; they settle thousands of difficulties where they strike once; and every year they are becoming more conservative and less inclined to violence. That is the plain cold truth of the matter.

When we come to employees in the postal service of the Government, it requires a wide stretch of the imagination to believe that they will ever engage in the kind of conduct which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] characterizes so vigorously; and I think the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], with all his great learning and ability——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. In a moment—was inclined to take an extreme view of the situation; and yet I agree with him that it would be absolutely intolerable if the people of the United States were some morning to find all of the postal facilities of the Government paralyzed and business at a standstill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. REED. Will the Senator let me conclude just this thought, and then I will gladly yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well. I have no desire to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. REED. I will yield to the Senator in a moment.

This bill is applicable only to postal employees; and we are told here this morning that, if it should pass, an unspeakable condition would exist. The bill arises out of the fact that certain orders were issued by the heads of the Post Office Department. Those orders were very stringent, and, I think, very arbitrary. The fact is, however, that in many other departments of governmental employment the men have no such restrictions upon them. The printers in the Government Printing Office are nearly all of them members of the Typographical Union; the pressmen are nearly all of them members of the Pressmen's Union; and the mechanics in our navy yards are many of them members of the unions which control in the branch of mechanics in which they are employed. There has never been any interference with them; and hence they have never asked any legislative relief. There has never been any strike or any lockout or any disturbance, either direct of sympathetic, and the horrible picture that has been painted here, if it were a real impending danger, would have been realized as a fact long ago if these men were the kind of men who would indulge in a senseless and useless warfare upon the Government that has always stood ready to treat them fairly.

Now, I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to say, Mr. President, that the Senator himself has offered a substitute to the section which I can most heartily and cordially support. So far as the organization of railway employees is concerned and their right to come to Congress with their grievances and have a hearing, I think there is no difference in the attitude of Senators on this floor; but I ask, when the proposal is made that all of these things shall be absolutely secure, and when it comes freely as a communication from these employees themselves that that is all they ask, why should we go so far here as to take away all power, discretion, and authority from the heads of the departments to pass upon the question at any time as to whether or not affiliation with an outside organization may not be detrimental to good government and to discipline in the service?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, what I said was merely by way of attempting, so far as I could in my weak manner, to clear up some of the statements that have been made and get at the real situation. I do not believe that the danger exists which some Senators see looming big before us; but, lest the danger may exist, and in order that there may be no question as to the right of these men to organize, and in order to obviate the dangers which the Senator from New York and others think are impending if Government employees are permitted to organize, I have prepared an amendment which I propose to submit as a substitute for the one proposed by the Senator who has charge of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it be read now.

Mr. REED. If I am allowed at this time to offer it—and I think under the parliamentary situation I am—I desire to offer it as a substitute for the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A Senator has offered a substitute for the text of the bill and another substitute would not now be in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator can have it read.

Mr. BOURNE. I should like to have the amendment read.

Mr. REED. I will read it. I wish Senators would take the bill and follow the reading to see if there is any objection to the language. I begin at the word "provided," in line 23, of the House provision.

Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees, not affiliated with any outside organization imposing an obligation or duty upon them to engage in any strike against the United States, having for its objects—

And so forth. In order that Senators may get it, I will read it again. I propose to make the clause read:

Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees—

Thus far I follow the text of the House provision. At that point I add these words:

not affiliated with any outside organization imposing an obligation or duty upon them to engage in any strike against the United States.

I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will not accept that in lieu of his amendment?

Mr. BOURNE. Will the Senator kindly read the last part? I did not quite catch it.

Mr. REED. "Not affiliated with any outside organization imposing an obligation or duty upon them to engage in any strike against the United States."

Mr. MASSEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BOURNE. The last I heard was "imposing an obligation or duty." What follows that?

Mr. REED. "Upon them to engage in any strike against the United States."

That amendment, Mr. President, eliminates the one objection that has been urged, as I understand. It permits these men to organize as they see fit in their own way, provided they shall not tie themselves up to an outside organization which imposes or may impose an obligation or duty to strike and to tie up the business of the United States.

Mr. MASSEY, Mr. BOURNE, and Mr. SUTHERLAND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada first addressed the Chair. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. REED. For the moment I will yield to the chairman of the committee, and afterwards to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I was going to ask the Senator from Missouri whether he did not think it would be better to make a direct prohibition against striking against the United States? Would not that cure everything?

Mr. REED. At the present time the department has assumed a right to prohibit certain organizations, and it claims it can do so as a disciplinary right. I apprehend, unless it is denied to the department by law, it will continue to do so. This amendment proposes to give the employees permission to organize, provided they do not associate themselves with organizations which require them to strike.

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator will permit me, I have not the slightest objection to the employees belonging to any organization they see fit, provided legislative action is taken prohibiting striking against the United States or interfering with the operations of the Government. I want to give the greatest possible protection to the personal liberty of every citizen, but I do hold and contend that it is absolutely necessary, in order that every citizen may have the protection of the Government, that the Government's strong arm should be held up in every way. It is simply that that I am trying to bring about.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I know the Senator in charge of the bill is not one of the men who ever would want to curtail human liberty. I think the amendment I have suggested fully meets the objection, and I submit it for what it is worth. I now yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MASSEY. Mr. President, I desire to say that I do not believe the language of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] meets the objection that has been raised to the amendment now pending before the Senate. I apprehend there is not in existence any labor organization that imposes an obligation upon the part of its members to strike against the United States; but the limitation in the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri does not meet a condition that actually exists under labor conditions in this country. I apprehend that, so far as the several organizations are concerned, it has never been necessary, and is not necessary now, to incorporate either into their constitutions or other instruments which define their rights or the rights of their several members an obligation not to strike against the United States, because they have not been employed as an organization, and, as an organization, have no employment, contractual or otherwise, with the United States. Strikes may arise in different organizations against employers which might possibly involve other organizations carrying a membership of employees of the Government.

Mr. President, I want at this time to say that we are getting a little bit heated over this discussion; that we are disposed to talk about the rights of the citizen and the rights of the Congress to legislate as though the rights of the citizen and the rights of Congress under the Constitution were not in harmony. I apprehend there can be no controversy about the proposition that there are certain things Congress can not do. It can not take my property without giving me an opportunity to be heard in a court of justice; it can not take from me my liberty without a hearing and a trial.

There are certain inalienable rights carried into the Constitution that this Congress can not dispose of; but we must not lose sight of the additional fact that the Government of the United States, within the scope and function of legalized government, can do anything in the way of legislation for the purpose of carrying out successfully the functions of government; in other words, the Constitution of the United States provides for a postal establishment; and this Congress, with the approval of the President of the United States, can pass legislation that will efficiently and successfully control the postal department, even though in that legislation it might be necessary to exclude from the employment of the Post Office Department a person who belongs to a union. Although their rights and the rights of the Government are mutual, this Government can not surrender any of its sovereignty or its functions of government to anybody.

In this connection I desire to say, Mr. President, that, so far as labor unions are concerned, people have a right to organize in unions, to unite in unions for the purpose of uplifting themselves in their employment, for the purpose of securing better hours, for the purpose of securing higher wages, for the purpose of higher development, and for many other purposes; but no organization has a right to carry into its organization or into its obligations anything that would cripple the administration of the Government in any of the lines provided for by the Constitution, either in a navy yard, in the Navy Department, in the Post Office Department, or in any of the other departments of the Government; and whenever this Congress recognizes the right by legislation, directly or indirectly, of an individual or a collection of individuals, by concerted action, to interfere with or to disturb the administration of governmental affairs such as are directly provided for by the Constitution and must exist if we are to have government at all, they have recognized the right of revolution, and it means revolution.

I want to say to the Senate that I am quite willing that there shall be crystallized into legislation by the Senate the right of all or any of the employees in any branch of the Government service to organize for their mutual interest, benefit, and protection within the lines of their employment under the Government. I want to say further that I am quite willing that there shall be written into the law of this country a provision securing the right of every citizen, no matter what his occupation may be, whether he be an employee of the Government or whether he be an humble citizen without employment, to come to Congress with his grievances; but a right to be heard by Congress for any alleged wrong, a right to be heard by Congress upon any matter involving his uplift, is a constitutional right that need not to be carried into the laws of this country. They can come here in twos or threes or hundreds if they desire and we have to hear them, and if they have a wrong it ought to be remedied.

Believing this, I shall vote against any measure that would extend, except with limitations so as to protect the Government in the administration of its affairs, the right of employees to belong to unions or organizations which might—not which shall, but which might—involve the administration of any one of the departments of the Government; but I shall be willing to extend to the employees of this Government the right to organize, the right to maintain organizations for the purpose of uplifting, benefiting, and helping them in their vocation in life and in all matters in which they are interested so far as home life and individual life may be concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take the liberty of stating that the Chair understood the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to offer a complete substitute for the House provision. Upon further examination, however, the Chair has discovered that the Senator's amendment is to perfect the House provision, and hence is in order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a word. I would have been through long ago, but I have yielded to other Senators. I think this amendment covers the very difficulty which has been suggested. Nobody has proposed that these men engaged in the Government service should not be allowed to organize, but a fear has been expressed that they may affiliate their organization with some outside organization, and that that outside organization might require a strike. The amendment simply permits them to organize, but says in effect that they must not affiliate themselves with an outside organization which may call upon them to strike. I think the amendment cures the difficulty, and I move its adoption.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the orders of the department which have been read seem to have given rise to this argument for the legislation that is proposed. The law as it is now does not prohibit any Federal employee from belonging to any association that he desires to join. He is as free as any other citizen, and I think he ought to be as free as any other citizen as far as the law is concerned.

The department officers during recent years have believed that the membership of certain organizations on the part of postal employees would be detrimental to the public service. They may have been right. They may have been wrong. If they were right, there is no occasion for this legislation. If they were wrong, it is an administrative mistake that will be cured with the passing of the officials who made it.

It seems to me that it is unwise because some departmental official may have imposed a hardship upon some Government employee, because he may have exercised in an improper way an authority which it is necessary that he should have, does not justify the taking from him of that authority. The exercise of this authority improperly is a reflection upon that official, and he suffers from it.

The section as reported from the Senate committee makes ample provision to protect the subordinate officer in the future from such mistakes as have been presented here. It has been said that railway postal clerks have been removed improperly and not given a proper hearing. I am inclined to think that in some instances that is true, but that can not be repeated, because provision is made here, and they will have ample hearings in the future. No departmental official hereafter will have the authority to commit the wrong that is alleged to have been committed in the past, because the subordinate official by this bill is given a means of redress.

But it is proposed now to go a step further and to incorporate in the law a provision which forbids the departmental official from exercising any discipline whatever under certain circumstances. It might be that postal employees may belong to all the labor organizations in the country and no harm come from it. And it might happen that very grave harm would come from it. Why not leave the law as it is? They have the right now to belong to labor organizations. If evil should result to the public service by virtue of such connection with a labor organization let the executive department remedy the evil when it occurs, if evil there be, and not take from them the power to remedy it if it should occur. There has been a great deal of discussion here in regard to labor organizations. I do not think there is a Senator here who will not concede that organized labor is necessary for the promotion of the welfare of the industrial workers in this and every other country. It is absolutely essential. It has resulted in a great improvement to the workers in our great industries. It is absolutely and essentially a fundamental right that all laborers have and nobody would take it from them.

But let me submit an illustration. Suppose that a controversy should come up between some great industry and its employees and they should strike. Do Senators think that it would be a proper function for a Government officer to be a member of or affiliated with the striking organization any more than to be a member of the industrial concern and exercise the power of the Government to suppress the strike? Should not the Government official be absolutely independent of that controversy, whether he is a policeman, a soldier, or a postal official? He handles the mail of the striking employees as well as the employer, and should he be connected with either organization? He is a Government official performing the functions of the Government and should be absolutely independent of both.

In my opinion, the very welfare of our country depends in the future upon such an impartial administration of our affairs between these contending forces. Personally I believe that there should be laws provided for the settlement of all industrial controversies without strikes. We have to have some system of administration of arbitration by which these industrial quarrels may be settled equitably to the men themselves as well as the employers. A strike is a wasteful and revolutionary process. It imposes a tremendous expense and burden on the strikers, paralyzes the industries, and injures thousands and tens of thousands of innocent people. The interests of the country and of every citizen demand that such controversies should be eliminated from our industrial affairs, and that must be done by the Government itself, in my opinion.

It seems to me that the Senate committee amendment which strikes out all this provision in regard to officials belonging to these various organizations should prevail, leaving the rights of the individual citizen as they are now.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. JONES. The Senate committee has not only stricken out the provision with reference to the forming of organizations, but has also stricken out the clause allowing the members, either individually or by clubs, to present their grievances to Congress. Does the Senator think there ought to be any objection to adopting some provision like that with reference to the presentation of grievances?

Mr. BRISTOW. I have not the slightest objection to it, but I think it is unnecessary. I think they have that right now, and that to refuse them that right is an unwarranted and arbitrary exercise of Executive authority which can not be justified and should not be justified.

Mr. JONES. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is taking from them a right which they have, and no Executive can do it without suffering discredit throughout the entire country.

Mr. JONES. I think that is the right so far as the right to petition, yet there have been Executive orders issued that practically take it away, and in practical effect they do not have that right. I think they ought to have it, and I think we ought to declare by law that they shall have it. I understand that that is the real proposition those representing the Government employees ask for

Mr. BRISTOW The Senator from Washington is correct as to that. The postal employees do ask that they have this right, which they think has been taken from them.

No one can criticize more severely than I an Executive order that would take from a man what is his fundamental constitutional right as a citizen of the United States. That can not be defended, and merits nothing but condemnation. If the Senate thinks it is necessary in order to protect Federal employees for some Executive authority to incorporate such a provision as that, I shall not object to it, but I do not think it is necessary. I think that abuses occasionally occur.

Mr. JONES. We have had an order similar to that in effect for seven or eight years.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have no objection to correcting that at all.

Mr. JONES. I think we ought by legislation to make that impossible. I agree with the Senator from Kansas with reference to this other provision; I believe we ought to cut all that out, but I do believe that we ought to substitute that part of the House provision allowing these grievances to be presented. Then I think that these employees will be reasonably well satisfied with the other part of the section adopted by the Senate committee and the House provision.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say in closing that I resent the insinuation by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] that anyone who opposes or who favors the Senate committee amendment is reflecting upon the character of labor organizations. It is an unwarranted insinuation that is not justified by anything that has been said on this floor. As far as I am concerned, neither the Senator from South Carolina nor anyone else would go any further to help the wage earners than I would to relieve them from the burdens of life or to make life more enjoyable for them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall only in a word speak of the entire difference between the question of an employee of the Government and an employee of any private corporation or private body of men.

No one or very few to-day question the propriety of the organizations of laboring men and of trade-unions. Where the relation is that between private citizens or corporations and employees, contests for advancement by the employees involve matters of private contract, and we may view with deep interest and without legal interference the struggle between the two.

When, however, it comes to the proposition of a Government employee, his employment is fixed by law, his rights are established by statute. As to the Government employees in the post office, even their compensation, their hours of labor, their entire status is established by acts of Congress. If they should organize a strike, they would be organizing an effort to overthrow law. They would be acting in utter disregard of those provisions for Government service that may have been established by law.

We do not question their right to come to Congress by petition and ask for a change of law, but they occupy an utterly different relation to their positions from employees holding private employment. The very Government depends upon the service of those employed by the Government, and any kind of patriotism requires that changes of their rights shall come solely through modification of law.

I do not see how we could tolerate for a moment the idea that one employee in the Government civil service any more than an employee in the military or naval service of the Government should become a part of an organization the object of which was by quitting work or by any other course, except by petition to the lawmaking powers of the Government, to interfere with existing conditions.

Any effort to change existing conditions except by a change of law is revolutionary. The difference between the two relations is so unmistakable that the warmest friends of the laboring man and the labor-union man who sympathizes frequently with the strikers that they may conduct, to obtain for them by contract fairer treatment, turns to the relation of the employee of the Government and recognizes that the employee of the Government has his right to go to an impartial tribunal, the representatives of the whole people, who will determine, by legislation, what shall be his rights. I feel sure that no Senator would for a moment countenance any organization or movement that would tolerate the thought of organizing a strike by Government employees.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, as we are touching now rather a fundamental proposition I ask for the reading of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute for the amendment proposed by the committee, strike out pages 48 and 49 in the House text and insert:

Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization composed of postal employees only, which is not secret nor affiliated with any outside organization and which may have for its objects, among other things, improvements in the conditions of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leaves of absence, or the presenting of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof by any person or groups of persons employed in the postal service, shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, when the discussion upon this subject closed Saturday evening I was disposed to think that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] would meet the difficulty, and that the right of free appeal to Congress and to Members of Congress might restore to these employees all the privileges which American citizens are entitled to exercise; but since the question has been definitely raised, since we are called upon apparently to decide whether the Government employees shall be permitted to organize themselves into associations, and inasmuch as now to accept the amendment proposed as a substitute for the House provision would be to declare that the Postmaster General shall have the right to decide what organization his employees shall enter, there can be but one answer to that question, so far as I am concerned.

I agree that to strike—and by a strike I mean the concerted cessation of work by employees in order to accomplish a purpose which they have in view—is inadmissible so far as the Government is concerned. I agree that an organization composed of the 240,000 civil-service employees of the United States which would contain as a part of its articles of association or faith or creed that all these employees might be called upon to quit the service of the United States if full justice in a particular instance was not granted to one of them or to some of them would be little less than treason against the people of the country.

I agree that an association of postal employees which would declare as a part of its articles of organization that they would all leave the service at a given time and thus render the Government helpless unless a grievance were remedied would be intolerable, and I agree that employees ought not to be permitted to enter an organization of that sort. They ought not to be permitted to continue in the employment of the Government with an agreement of that kind. I make a distinction, as has been made here, between the service of the United States and the service of a private enterprise.

Mr. BOURNE. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BOURNE. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to state that the amendment I sent to the desk gave dictatorial powers to the Postmaster General in the way of determining in reference to the classification of these different organizations?

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not characterize the amendment of the Senator from Oregon at all. I did not attempt to construe it or interpret it. I said that inasmuch as the question had been raised whether these employees should have the right to enter organizations composed of Government employees, and inasmuch as it was proposed to deny to these employees the right to enter such an organization, if that organization proposed to affiliate with any other I could not be content with the declaration stated in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri. That is what I meant to state.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. ROOT. I think, perhaps, I do not correctly understand the precise point to which the Senator from Iowa is directing his remarks. It may be because I misunderstand the situation. Let me ask the Senator, Is it not correctly understood two things are permitted under the amendment now before the Senate by the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads; one, that the postal employees are now at liberty to form organizations among themselves for the improvement of their condition, with all the rights of representation, of petition, of expressing and explaining their grievances, that any organization can have? I understand that there is a national organization, and there are some thirty-odd State organizations; that they are organized among themselves.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I rightly understood the Senator from New York, I want to correct the statement he has just made. The Post Office Department has not only discouraged the formation of some of these organizations, but has in fact prohibited employees from joining them. The department disapproves of organizations which it does not control. The associations especially in favor with the department are those the action of which it does control. This control is effected through the officers of the organizations, who are department favorites. Through the influence of the department, easily exerted upon the membership of these associations, these favorites are elected as its officers. Through these officers the department dominates the organizations. It is the business of these officers to discourage the efforts of the employees to press their grievances upon the department. I base this statement, Mr. President, on information obtained directly from the employees of the Railway Mail Service—information based upon thousands of letters which have come to me from these men.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I can not enter into that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will permit me, furthermore the department has enforced not only the letter of the Executive orders prohibiting employees from submitting a statement of their grievances to Members of Congress, but I have hundreds of letters citing instances where these employees have been disciplined, have been barred from the advancement to which they were entitled in the service, have been reduced in rank, and have in some cases been dismissed from the service because they have dared to exercise rights which belong to them and to all men under the Constitution, whether in the public service or out of it.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I can not enter upon that field, because I have not prepared myself for it by searching for evidence. My statement did not apply to that field; it applied to the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE]. Has the Senator a copy of it?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have it. I was about to proceed to comment on it.

Mr. ROOT. I was trying to get my own mind clear on the subject, and it seemed to me there were two things which were permitted by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon—one, the organization of the postal employees for all the purposes which are proper to organization, to better their condition, and by proper means secure improvement of the terms of their contract with the Government; and the other, I understand to have been stated here without contradiction, that individual employees are not prevented from belonging to any labor organizations.

It has been stated here that men in the Printing Office are members of the Typographical Union; that whatever their callings may be, no obstacle is interposed against being members of the labor organizations of their trades and callings.

So the only thing that seems to me to be at issue here, and it is put in issue by the contrast between the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee and the House provision, and I think also the contrast between it and the proposal of the Senator from Missouri, is whether the postal organization permitted, allowed by law, with the existence of which the Postmaster General is forbidden to interfere, shall be permitted to affiliate themselves, as organizations, with the great national organizations, the chief purpose of which is to promote and make possible and successful strikes against employers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I dislike to break in upon the argument of the Senator from Iowa; but, since it is directly in point, I want to call the attention of the Senator from New York to an order issued by the department, signed by Joseph Stewart, Second Assistant Postmaster General, and addressed to railway postal clerks, which, in plain terms, prohibits an employee in that service from joining any secret lodge, union, or organization within their own ranks. I read the language:

> Referring to the reports that postal clerks at various points are forming lodges of secret organizations of railway postal clerks, I desire that steps be taken at once to acquaint all in the service that such action is regarded as inimical to the interest of the Government.

Here is a prohibition direct from the department addressed to the clerks in the Railway Mail Service against their becoming members of lodges organized within the service. It will thus be seen that the railway mail clerks are not free to form organizations even within their own ranks.

Mr. President, the real opposition to the House provision, which is so pronounced here, is directed against the American Federation of Labor. We might as well use plain terms. Some of these associations of Post Office Department employees desire to become affiliated with the Federation of Labor. There never has been an intimation that these brotherhoods or lodges of employees in the Post Office Department should affiliate with any organization other than the American Federation of Labor. And, sir, the American Federation of Labor never in the whole course of its existence has ordered a strike. It has no authority to order strikes.

I should like to take just a minute or two more, if the Senator will permit——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why should objection be made to associations or unions of railway mail clerks becoming affiliated with the Federation of Labor? No other department of the Government has raised such objection. We have regularly organized unions of employees in several of the other departments. All of these unions have for years been affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. It has never advised, it never will seek to induce a strike of Government employees. It is raising a false issue in this discussion to argue that the legislation proposed in section 6 of the House bill opens the door for strikes against the Government on the part of Government employees.

Sir, I do not want to see any language incorporated in this bill upon which at some future time may be predicated legislation against strikes in private employment. That will be the effect, if it is not the purpose, of the effort to write into this bill a provision against strikes on the part of Government employees.

Men employed in the Government Printing Office and in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving are members of the typographical, the pressmen's, bookbinders', stereotypers', and lithographers' unions. In the navy yard unions have been organized. There is also a union in the Geodetic Survey.

For years these unions of Government employees have been affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. No strike in these organizations has ever been heard of.

As I suggested yesterday, this proposed legislation is the direct result of the arbitrary and tyrannical conduct of the Post Office Department in denying the men the right to associate themselves with organizations independent of those which the department sanctions.

The chairman of the committee has called attention to the fact that he summoned before the committee Cantwell and Rogers, officers of the Letter Carriers' Association. There are certain organizations of employees in the department which are officered by men who are in high favor with the department officials. The Letter Carriers' Association is one of those organizations.

I read to the Senate yesterday a letter from a Post Office Department official seeking to control the elections in one of these organizations, and it is for that reason, Mr. President, and because they have been controlled and because the officials have been used to suppress the appeals of the members of the organization to redress grievances; it is for that reason that these other organizations of postal employees have been formed.

Mr. ROOT. May I asked the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. ROOT. Do I correctly understand the Senator as taking the position that we ought to carefully guard against having anything introduced into our legislation which might be construed hereafter as denying the right of the postal employees to strike?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no. I am not to be trapped by the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Wait a moment.

Mr. ROOT. I will not wait until I say to the Senator that he ought to withdraw that remark. He has no right to make it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I sat here in my seat and listened to the Senator from New York as he drew the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] into an admission of his position which was not justified by what he had said and which the Senator from South Carolina himself was compelled to withdraw.

Mr. President, this whole argument has proceeded upon the false basis that the effect of this House provision was to open the door to a sanctioning of strikes on the part of employees of the Government who are members of these organizations.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin——

Mr. CUMMINS. I have the floor.

Mr. ROOT. Declines to withdraw his remark?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. ROOT. I stand upon a question of personal privilege.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to be heard.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it is offensive personally to the Senator——

Mr. ROOT. It is offensive.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will modify it.

Mr. ROOT. It is offensive and unjustified.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, I will modify it, and I will let it stand with the reference which I have made to the colloquy which took place between the Senator from New York and the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, may I again put the question, then, What is the position of the Senator from Wisconsin with regard to the rights of postal employees to strike?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, inasmuch as the personal matter has passed——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to resume as soon as I can the suggestions that I was making.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just to make answer to the question of the Senator from New York. I do not believe in and I would not vote for or support any legislation which could be construed as sanctioning strikes on the part of Federal employees. I will not trespass further on the time of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, no apology is needed on the part of anyone. Little remains, however, for me to say with respect to the matter. I will return to the position I was endeavoring to state when interrupted.

I have just said that any organization of Government employees that had for its purpose a concerted strike against the Government itself would, of course, be intolerable, and no one would insist upon the privilege of such organization.

Let us see just where we are, because I entirely agree with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that there has been a false issue raised before the Senate and before the country. The issue is not whether we shall give to Government employees the privilege of striking or invite them to strike, but the question now is whether any organization to which they belong may affiliate or form any relation with any other organization. We have passed two of the difficult questions. Apparently it is now conceded that the Executive order which forbade Government employees making their wants known to their own Government or to the Members of Congress was ill advised, tyrannical, and arbitrary, and that it ought to be abrogated by legislation at the earliest possible moment. It is now also admitted that the construction that may well be given to some orders of the Post Office Department and the attitude of the department toward the organization of the employees needs correction at the hands of Congress just as completely and just as fully as does the Executive order which denied the privilege of the presentation of grievances of any kind, petitions of any kind, from the employee to the Government unless they passed through the hands of the department. That is a great step in advance, I agree.

But, let us see now what the amendment of the Senator from Oregon proposes. First, let us analyze the House provision, which is: "That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization" shall not be the occasion for dismissal or "for reduction in rank."

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon is:

> That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization, composed of postal employees only, which is not secret nor affiliated with any outside organization, etc.

That is the only difference between the House provision and the proposition now made by the chairman of the committee. They both propose that there shall be liberty of membership in an organization of employees. I mean liberty of membership in organization and the right to organize among the employees themselves, but the House provision does not forbid an organization so formed from affiliating itself with some other organization. The provision of the Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the committee, does prohibit any relation between the association of Government employees and any other association which, we will assume, is composed of other than Government employees.

Senators, as it seems to me, we can not afford to declare to the people of the United States that an association of postal employees organized for proper purposes, organized to strengthen the sympathy that ought to exist between men working for their living, organized for the purpose of bettering the condition of the men who compose it, can not sustain any relation whatsoever to any other organization having the same purposes, the same high objects for the members who belong to it. I agree that there may be such a relation between an organization of postal employees and an organization of other men that might be detrimental to the public service, but are we to declare here that there shall be no relation whatsoever with any association? That prohibition might destroy in a large measure the usefulness of the postal organization.

I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that this is directed solely toward the American Federation of Labor. If that be true, then will some one tell the Senate why it would destroy the usefulness or impair the efficiency of postal employees if an organization which they had brought together should bear some relation to the Federation of Labor or should be affiliated with it? The Federation of Labor has many high, lofty aims; it has many exalted standards of conduct; it may declare some principles in which we do not agree, but the prohibition, general, sweeping, complete, that an association of postal employees shall not be affiliated with the Federation of Labor or with any other association seems to me to deny to men the commonest privileges which free men ought to demand and ought to enjoy.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. BOURNE. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to ask the question why I introduced the amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I put the question generally. I do not ask it specifically of the Senator from Oregon. I would, however, be glad to have an answer, either now or at any appropriate time.

Mr. BOURNE. I would be glad to answer the Senator now.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well; I shall be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, as I previously stated, this was an amendment suggested by the National Civil Service Reform League. In offering the amendment, I so stated. I further said that the proposed amendment had been submitted to the officers of two of the associations—to Mr. Cantwell, secretary of the National Association of Letter Carriers, representing 28,200 members out of approximately 29,000 employees in that branch of the service, and to Mr. Frank T. Rogers, president of the United National Association of Post Office Clerks, representing some 22,000 members. I understood, in conversation with them, that this proposed amendment would, in their opinion, be perfectly satisfactory to the members of their respective organizations.

While, as I have previously stated, I believe I am as good a friend of organized labor as any man in Congress, I think it is my duty to read to the Senate from the hearings of the Committee on the Reform of the Civil Service in the House of Representatives on House bill 5970——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, would the Senator from Oregon think me discourteous if I suggested that that be put in at some time in connection with observations of his own? My remarks have already been somewhat disconnected by the remarks of others.

Mr. BOURNE. Of course the Senator from Iowa has the floor. I should not have ventured to interrupt him, but that I understood he asked me a question in reference to the proposed amendment. I was simply trying to answer that question. I shall be very glad to discontinue my remarks if they interfere in any way with the continuity of the Senator's address.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall make any remarks he desires to make, but if it is a long hearing, I do not care to make that a part of my speech; that is all.

Mr. BOURNE. It was merely two affidavits in these hearing that have a direct bearing on this subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well, I will yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. BOURNE. The first affidavit is as follows:

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS, County of Suffolk, ss:

I, A. C. Walton, being duly sworn, do hereby deposed and say that since last December it has been a matter of general conversation among the clerks of the First Division Railway Mail Service that the benefits to be derived by the Railway Mail Clerks' Association, should they unite with the American Federation of Labor, would be that in case the clerks desired to strike against the Government they would have the moral support of the federation, and that the federation would levy an assessment of 10 cents upon every member of federated labor to support the striking clerks.

These have been the only inducements that I have heard discussed among all the clerks with whom I have had a conversation about this matter. My position as president of the association has naturally brought me in contact with a large number of clerks, and there has been no other question in the minds of any, as far as I know, but what the above were the inducements given out for affiliation.

A. C. WALTON,
Railway Postal Clerk.

Subscribed and sworn to at Boston, Mass., this 4th day of May, A. D. 1911.

LAWRENCE LETHERMAN.

The other affidavit of similar purport I ask to have inserted in the RECORD without reading, so as not to further interrupt the remarks of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Permission to do so will be granted in the absence of objection. The Chair hears none.

The affidavit referred to is as follows:

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS, County of Suffolk, ss:

I, H. F. Tebbetts, being duly sworn, do hereby depose and say that on the 22d day of last March, at a called meeting between members of the Railway Mail Association of the first division and Frank H. McCarthy, organizer of the American Federation of Labor, in their hall at 987 Washington Street, Boston, Mass., the said Frank H. McCarthy stated that if the First Division Railway Mail Association became a part of the American Federation of Labor, the latter body would not at any time order the Railway Mail Association to strike, but should the Railway Mail Association desire to strike, they would receive the moral support of the American Federation of Labor, and that the American Federation of Labor would assess every member of federated labor in the United States 10 cents each, the amount collected to be turned over to the Railway Mail Association to aid them in their strike.

He stated, also, that in comparison with the American Federation of Labor the Railway Mail Association was very small, and, consequently, their political influence was small in proportion, and in view of an Executive order prohibiting political activity on the part of the Railway Mail Association they (the Railway Mail Association) were prevented from working in their own interests, either with Congress or its individual Members, but should they affiliate with the American Federation of Labor, with its 2,000,000 members and its vast political machine, measures could be put through Congress in which the Railway Mail Association were vitally interested.

H. F. TEBBETTS.

Subscribed and sworn to at Boston, Mass., this 4th day of May, A. D. 1911.

C. E. JENNINGS, Post-office Inspector.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; I thought the Senator had concluded. I beg his pardon.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from New Jersey might well think that, for I have been on my feet so little of the time since I began my speech.

Mr. President, there is but one reply to the affidavit just read by the Senator from Oregon, and that is a very conclusive reply. If any organization of postal employees does not desire to affiliate with any other organization, there is nothing to compel it to do so. It requires a vote of a majority, I assume, of all the members of an association to enable it to affiliate with any other association, and if a majority of the postal employees do not desire the affiliation, it would not take place, just as it is true with the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, one of the most notable, one of the best, one of the most efficient labor organizations in the country. It does not affiliate with the American Federation of Labor; but if anyone were to say to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, "You shall not affiliate with the American Federation of Labor," I believe there would be that instant rebellion which arises naturally in the heart of every American when an unjust command is put upon him.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BOURNE. I simply desire to ask a question of the Senator from Iowa. Is it his opinion that it would require a vote of a majority of any organization for a single individual member of that organization to join any other organization he saw fit?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon is now passing to another ground. We are not dealing here with the individual membership of the postal employees in other organizations. I say that no single individual can join the American Federation of Labor. It is not an association composed of individuals; it is an association composed of organizations. Admittance to it, as I have been informed and believe, comes solely through the official action of other organizations. Of course, a postal employee might apply for membership in some other labor organization, but he could not apply for individual membership in the American Federation of Labor, if I correctly understand its organization. But we have here a provision which, according to common consent, applies only to postal associations; and the sole question is whether we should put a prohibition upon the association to which an employee may belong, and forbid it from forming any relation with an outside organization. I do not believe that to do so is the exercise of power in a discriminating way. There may be some organizations with which we ought not to permit a postal society any affiliation or association, but nothing of that kind is contemplated, and I do not know how such relation could be brought about; but to declare positively, without qualification, that there can be no relation between an association of Government employees and any other association is, in my opinion, not only in the last degree unwise, but I believe it goes beyond the governmental power.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him whether he would favor a direct prohibition against postal employees striking against the Government or interfering in any way, to the detriment of the general welfare, with the handling of the mail?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I answer, with frankness, that there could be no prohibition against an individual striking, because when an individual strikes, it is merely a retirement from the service. There can be no strike in the proper sense of the word save through concert and cooperation. If the Senator means to ask if I believe that a postal association, with a provision in its rules that all members should strike upon the command or direction of its officers, after having gone through a certain procedure to ascertain the wishes of its members, I say I am not in favor of allowing an association of that sort among Government employees, because I do not believe that the strike is the remedy for Government employees. I believe if they can not secure justice from their Government for any grievance or any wrong done to them, then the Government is a failure, and we need not look beyond that disaster.

Mr. BOURNE. Well, if the Senator will permit me, the idea has occurred to my mind of the possibility, though not the probability, if there were, for instance, 28,000 mail carriers; if they were receiving on an average $1,069 a year, and they wanted to have their salaries increased to an average of $1,200 or $1,300, or $1,400 a year, would it be conducive to good government or to the welfare of the citizens, as a whole, that the employees should have a right to consult with each other and notify the individual in charge of the particular department that they would as a body walk out unless they received the additional compensation, no matter how just the demand might be?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the question of the Senator from Oregon is plainly divisible. The same answer could not be made to both divisions. It would be clearly inimical to the public service to permit an association of those employees that had for part of its plan of procedure the concert of action, to which the Senator refers, and through which its members would leave the Government employment in a body. That is my answer to the first division.

The second division of the Senator's question is answered in this way: I do not believe that the thousands of employees ought to concert together, even if they have no association prior to the concert, for the purpose of making a united demand upon the Government for an increase in salary, accompanied with a threat that unless the demand be granted they would leave the service in a body. I think that such concert of action, carried to such results, is not in accordance with their relations to their Government and their duty to the people whom they serve.

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator will permit me just one more question, suppose there were no threats, but actions, and they all resigned?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, Mr. President, if they all resigned because they were led to do that believing that it was for their individual interests, no one could complain, for the individual has the right, I think, above any power of the Government, to leave the civil service at any time he desires so to do.

The rule of the civil service is not the rule of the Army or the Navy. The two services are founded upon entirely different bases, as I believe, and I think there is no obligation upon the part of an individual—that is, no obligation that can be enforced—to remain in the civil service of his Government if he desires to leave it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I expressed my views on this question largely some days ago, but I desire to say again that I shall oppose these amendments, for, in my judgment, they trench upon human rights. I believe the postal service can not suffer by passing this measure as it came from the House.

I want to say that I feel that it is a most gross assumption upon the part of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] when, in his address, he gave expression to the opinion that this would tend to induce postal employees to turn against the country. I insist that experience is to the contrary. The employees of our Government and our labor organizations are quite as ready to maintain and defend the glory and honor of this country as any other class of citizens, and, as I asserted the other day, the statement that they might band together simply for purposes that would be a menace to the Government is most ungenerous and unfair.

I want to impress upon my fellow Senators that these men simply because they are in the postal employ, have not ceased to be American citizens. They are as much American citizens to-day as we are; they are just as loyal and just as patriotic as we are. They have the same promptings and the same desires, the same hopes and the same anticipations; and I feel that it is unjust and ungenerous to debar these men from the privilege of aligning themselves with such societies or organizations as in their own judgment and manhood they may see fit to join to best advance their interests.

Moreover, for a hundred years we have gone on fairly well in advancing postal matters and will continue to advance. The door has been open to them, except for the comparative recent interference on the part of the heads of the Post Office Department, to join such societies as they may desire. We are to-day as safe and free from disorder in such lines as we ever were; and I hold there is no reason in the world for pressing this measure any further.

I am not afraid of the postal employees. I would as quickly trust them with my money or my life as I would any other class of citizens. I know hundreds of them, and have known them for 25 years. I will say that, while I have not been in the employ of the Government, it has been my good fortune to have been exceedingly close with the railway postal organization ever since I was 21 years old. I voice their claims, not for mean and selfish ends, but because, as I said a day or two ago, I believe that organization tends to make them better men, better citizens, better farmers, better officers, and that the country will be better advanced by maintaining them; and this eternal attempt to hold them up to ridicule and to the horror of our fellow citizens I say is unjust, ungenerous, and unfair.

What is the proposition that has produced so much discussion and so much debate here? I can not imagine any fair-minded man in the land opposing it. Just let us read the provision of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. It is as follows:

Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees having for its objects, among other things, improvements in the condition of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor and leave of absence, by any person or groups of persons in said postal service, or the presenting by any such person or groups of persons of any grievance or grievances to the Congress or any Member thereof shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service.

In heaven's name, what is there in that provision that we need cavil over? To deny them that would be to deny that they should be good citizens, that they should exercise their own conscience and their own judgment in their affiliations. We have had no evil from them, nor do I think we shall have.

I shall vote against the original amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] and the substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and I shall vote to sustain the provision as it came from the House. I can see no evil in it; I can see it only advancement and good to the general welfare of the employee, and so feeling, I am willing to be recorded in that way.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I want to simply say a word. It seems to me that this debate has taken a very wide range, and a great deal of time has been spent in discussing matters which, from the makeup of American citizenship, are not probable and not even possible. No one would deprecate the thought of a strike against the Government more than I would, but I shall vote against every amendment to the House provision, because, as I construe this provision, in the light of our experience with the postal employees, there is no suggestion of a strike; and that idea is only suggested for the purpose of injecting into this discussion something that ought not to be in the discussion at all. Nor will I permit any man to define for me my attitude toward the strike because of my attitude toward these amendments.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate, nor do I feel it incumbent upon me, to pay a tribute to the employees of the Post Office Department. The railway mail clerks are a class of men who daily take their lives in their hands; they have contributed to building up an efficiency in that department that is the marvel of the age; and I will not vote for any amendment that carries with it the suggestion that, under any circumstances, the employees of this Government would strike against the Government. There is absolutely nothing in the history of the various departments in the relation of the employees in those departments to their service that warrants any such suggestion. So, without for one moment recognizing that we could ever tolerate the thought of a strike against the Government, I shall vote against every amendment which seeks to brand the employees of this Government as having within their purpose the possibility under any circumstances of striking against their Government.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in view of the affidavit read by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE], I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to modify the amendment which I submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the Senator's right.

Mr. REED. I desire to add, after the word "strike," the words "or proposing to assist them in any strike," so that the amendment will read as follows:

Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees not affiliated with any outside organization imposing an obligation or duty upon them to engage in any strike, or proposing to assist them in any strike against the United States.

And so forth.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I know of nothing in the nature of our institutions that makes a man who enters into the civil service of the United States a slave. I know of nothing that can bind him to involuntary servitude; I know of nothing that exempts him from the operation of the rules of the Constitution in favor of the freedom of assembly and the freedom of petition. All citizens are guaranteed the right peaceably to assemble and to address the Government, to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. That means, I take it, any part of the Government except, perhaps, the judiciary, whose functions are totally out of line with that sort of thing. A man can not address a petition to the Government of the United States; it would have to be addressed to the President or to a department or to Congress or to some particular Senator or some particular Representative.

I think we are making a good deal of a mountain out of a molehill. There is no danger of any civil employees of the Federal Government striking. They are getting about from 30 to 40 per cent more than they could get for like work anywhere else; they are not fools, and they know that as well as you do. They will use their rights if they are left uninfringed—I do not believe that Congress could infringe them; I believe that the courts would hold that whatever Congress did in that connection was invalid; but even if Congress could infringe them they would hold their rights uninfringed, subject to their own common sense. When they are receiving from 30 to 40 or 50 per cent more than they would get for like work in private employment, getting shorter hours, getting 30 days' sick leave whether they are sick or not, and 30 days more in addition to the sick leave, they "know a good thing when they see it," and they are not going to strike; but if they wanted to strike they have as much right to strike against the Government of the United States—which in that sense is not a Government at all, but simply an employer—as have any other employees. They have just exactly the same rights with regard to the Government when the Government is an employer that they have with regard to me or to you.

Some analogy has been sought to be drawn between the civil employees and those in the naval or military service. There can be no such analogy for a very simple reason. The civil employees of the Government are subject to the civil law, while men who have enlisted in the Army or the Navy are subject to martial law, and a direct exception has been made in the Constitution with regard to those who are subject to martial law. It seems to me that the freer we leave these people, the better. In fact, it is my idea that the freer we leave everybody, the better. These men have the right to form associations if they wish to do so; they have the right to affiliate with other associations if they so wish; they have the right peaceably to assemble if they so wish; they have the right, if they wish to do so, to petition me for redress of grievances, or to petition you or anybody else, or any part of the Government, and I do not see why Congress should be "putting its finger in the pie."

If 10,000 of these employees did conclude to quit work at any time, then, after they had quit, the rights of sovereignty would come into bearing. If they undertook to intimidate other people to prevent them from accepting employment, then the Government would have the right to speak, and to speak in thunder tones, and it would speak in thunder tones, if necessary with Cavalry and Infantry and Artillery. But that is a different proposition.

This proposition is simply the proposition of their having the right to quit work, either 1 of them by himself, or 3 of them after a previous conversation, or 10,000 of them after a previous meeting and resolution. That, as I understand and as I take it, is their constitutional right; and if we pass a law to prevent it, in my opinion, it would not be worth the paper it is written on; but if we had the power to pass it, I would be opposed to passing it because it would be a useless infringement of liberty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] as modified. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the text of the House bill, on page 48, line 25, after the word "employees," by inserting "not affiliated with any outside organization imposing an obligation or duty upon them to engage in any strike or proposing to assist them in any strike against the United States," so that if amended it will read:

Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization of postal employees not affiliated with any outside organization imposing an obligation or duty upon them to engage in any strike or proposing to assist them in any strike against the United States having for its objects, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina has demanded the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER], who is not in the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I will announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and vote "yea." My pair is the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. On account of his absence, I refrain from voting.

Mr. OVERMAN (when Mr. THORNTON's name was called). I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] are unavoidably detained from the Senate. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SANDERS] and vote "yea."

Mr. LIPPITT. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], which I transfer to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]. I vote "yea." I will also state that my colleague [Mr. WETMORE] is necessarily absent.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CRANE] is absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence from the city of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. He is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. If the Senator from Wisconsin were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I will state that he is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. CULBERSON. In view of my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], I withhold my vote.

Mr. BRYAN. I am paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I announce that my colleague [Mr. ASHURST] is detained from the Chamber on important business.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 7, as follows:

YEAS—49.

Bacon	Fletcher	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Bourne	Gallinger	Newlands	Smith, Ga.

So Mr. REED's amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE].

Mr. REED. I offer the following amendment, to follow the provision of the House which is proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, line 9, after the word "service," insert:

> The right of persons employed in the civil service of the United States, either individually or collectively, to petition Congress or any Member thereof, or to furnish information to any House of Congress or to any committee or Member thereof, shall not be denied or interfered with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is now upon the amendment in the nature of a substitute submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken from the bill by the committee insert the following words:

> Provided, however, That membership in any society, association, club, or other form of organization composed of postal employees only, which is not secret nor affiliated with any outside organization and which may have for its objects, among other things, improvements in the conditions of labor of its members, including hours of labor and compensation therefor, and leaves of absence, or the presenting of any grievance or grievances to Congress, or any Member thereof, by any person or groups of persons employed in the postal service, shall not constitute or be cause for reduction in rank or compensation or removal of such person or groups of persons from said service.

Mr. BOURNE. In view of the perfection made by the Senator from Missouri to the House provision, I will ask consent to withdraw the suggested substitute which has just been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the substitute is withdrawn.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If it is not too late, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. As I understand the amendment, it has the effect of striking out of the bill altogether the House provision allowing the right of employees to organize.

Mr. LODGE. Not at all.

Mr. REED. The Senator is mistaken. It is an addition to the House provision.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The printed amendment which I have here says to insert in lieu of the words stricken out.

Mr. REED. That is not the way it was offered. I offered it to go in at the end of the House provision.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Missouri withdrew that amendment and offered it to the text.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well. I was going by the printed amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out the provision of the House bill as reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] The noes have it, and the motion is not agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to move to reconsider that portion of the bill adopted in Committee of the Whole known as the parcel post so that we may have the opportunity to discuss it. A number of Members desire to make some inquiries and to present some views upon it. It seems to me that it would be better to do it at this time. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Before leaving section 6 I wish to offer a further amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will only take a moment to reconsider and give us a chance for discussion.

Mr. JONES. I shall not discuss it. I simply wish to offer this amendment. In line 9 I move to strike out the words "in the postal service," so as to make the provision apply to all members of the classified service as well as of the postal service.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I understand the effect of the amendment last adopted, offered by the Senator from Missouri, it covers exactly that. It broadens the whole provision.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri would cover the whole service.

Mr. JONES. The first part of this section relates to the removal of members from the classified service, and by the language of the bill it applies only to those in the postal service. The last amendment does not cover that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not yield the floor further to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that section 6 having been under consideration it is proper first to consider amendments to that section. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, line 4, strike out the words "in said postal service."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. It will be necessary, in view of the adoption of that amendment, to reconsider the amendment striking out in the bill, lines 18 and 19, the words "officer making the removal" and inserting "the Postmaster General." I move to reconsider that.

Mr. BOURNE. Will the Secretary kindly read the clause so that we can have the information as to the proposed amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 48 the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, has already agreed to an amendment, in line 15, striking out the words "officer making the removal," and inserted in lieu the words "the Postmaster General," so that it reads:

> But no examination of witnesses nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the Postmaster General.

Mr. JONES. With a view of extending this to the classified service, we should not accept that amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The object was to give to the head of the department.

Mr. BAILEY. The officer making the removal.

Mr. LODGE. It ought to be limited to the heads of departments.

Mr. JONES. I am willing to accept that.

Mr. BOURNE. I think as it is in the bill it necessarily must be the head of the department.

Mr. LODGE. I think it ought to be the head of the department.

Mr. BAILEY. If only the head of the department can remove, then this covers it. If anybody else can remove, then it ought to be a limitation on him just the same.

Mr. JONES. I ask to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the amendment recommended by the committee, and that the amendment of the committee be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This restores the House bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move to reconsider the action of the Senate in reference to the parcel post, so that we may have an opportunity as in Committee of the Whole to discuss it. It is the most important legislation, perhaps, in the entire bill.

We passed it without a word, and I think it ought to be brought before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hope that motion will prevail. I was out of the Chamber yesterday morning with other Senators to attend a meeting of the Judiciary Committee, and I think a number of other Senators were also absent on conference committees and duties of that kind. I was never more surprised in my life when I came back into the Chamber after a short absence and was told that this important matter had been passed in the Senate without a word, except a short speech of a few minutes by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and without a roll call or anything else.

I really want the matter brought again before the Senate because I want the information myself. Here is a committee that has been two or three months considering this question, hearing testimony and discussing it, and it comes in and hangs up that map, a map which I have been looking at for two or three weeks past with the greatest curiosity and anticipation, expecting the day to come when that Chinese puzzle would be solved for us and we would know something about it. I speak for myself, and I presume other Senators are in the same position on this most important piece of legislation. I supposed Senators would be called on to say something about it and to explain it.

The Senator's report, of course, is very elaborate and all that, but that does not give the information which one gets in a discussion in the Senate where there is an interchange of views. I hope that this matter may be taken up and that other matters which are in the bill which may not be of so much importance may be given the go-by, at least until this parcel-post matter shall be brought before the Senate and some little explanation given of it. There has been no information given to those who did not have the opportunity which the committee had of hearing testimony on it and considering it for the past month. We have only two hours left and I think at least one hour ought to be given to this question.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, about a year has been devoted to the study of the problem presented by the proposed enlargement of our present parcel-post system as represented by the fourth-class mail privilege. In order to show that ill-advised action has not been taken, I shall explain at length what action has been taken on the part of the Senate and its Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with a view to securing satisfactory information upon which to base legislation.

Mr. OVERMAN. The explanation of this part of the bill is fully set out in the report?

Mr. BOURNE. Fully. If the Senator will permit me, I will go on to explain to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] that every Member of the Senate has had full opportunity to get all the information the Senate committee had after its study of the subject.

On the 16th of June, 1911, the Senate adopted Senate resolution No. 56, a copy of which I will ask to be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to inquire into and report to the Senate at the earliest date practicable what changes are necessary or desirable in the postal system of the United States or in laws relating to the postal service, and particularly with reference to the establishment of a parcel post, and for this purpose they are authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress, at such times and places as they may deem desirable or practicable; to send for persons and papers; to administer oaths; to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses; to conduct hearings, and have reports of same printed for use; and to employ such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as shall be necessary, and any expense in connection with such inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BOURNE. Under authority and direction of that resolution the following subcommittee was appointed: Senator BOURNE, chairman; Senators PENROSE, BRIGGS, BRISTOW, BANKHEAD, SWANSON, and BRYAN.

On the 18th of August, 1911, I directed to the Secretary of State a letter reading as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS,
August 18, 1911.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I inclose herewith copy of Senate resolution 56, adopted by the Senate June 16, 1911. Under authority of same I am taking preliminary steps for the collation of obtainable data in re parcel post as it is now in operation in foreign countries. I would respectfully request your cooperation in this matter and would ask you to kindly instruct the diplomatic representatives of the United States in countries operating a parcel or package post to obtain from the several countries to which they are accredited the fullest possible information with respect to such parcel or package post. Such information should consist chiefly of an abstract of the law and the rules and regulations governing the operation of the parcel post; the weight limit of parcels; the rate or rates of postage; the greatest dimensions of parcels accepted for mailing; whether delivery of parcels is made to the residence of the addressee or to some intermediate point, such as the nearest post office or railway station, and if to an intermediate point, what are the particulars concerning the rate of postage, and what means are used to notify the addressee that a package awaits him at such intermediate point; a statement of the revenue and expenditure and the amount of parcel-post business transacted during a term of 10 years; a statement showing the additional postal equipment, if any, made necessary by the establishment of a parcel post; a statement showing in what particulars the transportation of parcels differs from the handling of letter mail, and whether the operation of the parcel post has caused any delay or difficulty in the prompt and satisfactory treatment of letter mail; a schedule of the articles which may or which may not be sent by parcel post; a statement describing any opposition which may have been manifested before or since the establishment of the parcel post; information as to whether any common carriers exist similar in any way to the American express companies, and, if so, a brief of their nature and their relation to the Government; whether the Government operates the railroads in whole or in part and, where it does, full information showing the bearing which this fact has on the operation of the parcel post; a statement showing the attitude of the people with reference to the parcel post, and what benefits, if any, have resulted from its operation to the people at large; where two or more rates exist dependent on speed of transportation, such as I understand exist in France, full information is desired; specific information as to whether shopkeepers in small towns claim that the parcel post militates against them and in favor of the large departmental or city stores.

I would appreciate it greatly if you would cause this information to be procured with the greatest possible dispatch and could give me some indication as to approximately when it will be available.

Yours, very sincerely,

JONATHAN BOURNE, JR., Chairman.

Replies were received from 43 countries, giving quite fully the information desired.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. It is whether the Senator understood that the motion to reconsider had prevailed and that the matter is now before the Senate.

Mr. BOURNE. I did not so understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion has not been put to the Senate.

Mr. BOURNE. The motion has not been put. I was simply replying to the Senator from Georgia in reference to the inferential criticism that hasty action had been taken on the part of the Senate. I was trying to demonstrate to the Senator from Georgia that no hasty action had been taken, but, on the contrary, that the Senate and the country pretty generally have been advised as to the information the Senate committee had obtained bearing upon the subject.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not realize whether the Senator was arguing the question on the theory that it had been reconsidered or whether he was leading up to opposing the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BOURNE. I was addressing myself particularly to the Senator from Georgia, in answer to his expression of wonder at the action that had been taken upon the subject.

As a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President, I would ask if there is any necessity for the reconsideration of the vote by which the Senate amendment was adopted in the Committee of the Whole? As I understand, at any time prior to the hour of 4 any Senator has the right to address the Senate upon any subject contained in the bill, and after the hour of 4 any Senator has a right to offer any amendment that he sees fit to the bill or any portion of the bill and to address the Senate for a period of five minutes, and any Member of the Senate has a right to occupy a similar length of time in support or opposition to an amendment or any provision in the bill. Am I correct in such an understanding?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct, and yet the Chair feels constrained to put the motion to reconsider, it having been made. That is the proper parliamentary motion.

Mr. BOURNE. Then am I to understand I am out of order in my attempted explanation to the Senator from Georgia?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; not at all. The Senator can discuss the question. The motion to reconsider is a debatable question.

Mr. BOURNE. As I said, Mr. President, replies were received from 43 countries having a parcel-post service. A report was prepared, under my direction as chairman of the subcommittee, giving the information obtained regarding the practical operation of these parcel-post systems. Copies of that report and of a comparative statistical chart were sent to every Member of the Senate. I hold in my hand a copy of the parcel-post chart. The book that I have here presents the reports obtained from all foreign countries having a parcel post, secured, as I explained, through the assistance of the Department of State. Hearings were held during the months of November and December, 1911, and January, February, and March, 1912. All parties interested in the subject were, upon application, given an opportunity to be heard.

Among the organizations that were represented at the hearings were the National Association of Retail Grocers, National Hardware Association, United Order of Commercial Travelers of America, National Federation of Retail Merchants, National Wholesale Dry Goods Association, National Retail Hardware Association, Tri-State Vehicle and Implement Dealers' Association, State Business Men's Association of Connecticut, Baltimore Credit Men's Association, Wholesale Clothiers' Board of Trade, National Association of Retail Druggists, Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists, Farmers' National Committee on Postal Reform and the Postal Express Federation, Connecticut State Grange, Postal Progress League, American Library Association, New England Educational Association, Legislative Committee of the National Grange, State Grange of Michigan, Retail Dry Goods Association of New York, American Poultry Association, Knights of Labor, Associated Retailers of St. Louis, Mo., Women's Trade-Union League, Farmers' National Congress, National Dairy Union, and Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America. These organizations represent practically every interest that would be affected by parcel-post legislation.

The result of these hearings was printed in four volumes, which I hold in my hand, making an aggregate of 1,159 pages. Copies were sent to every Member of the Senate, and were furnished to the public upon application.

On May 16, in order to get a concrete plan before the Senate, I introduced a bill (S. 6850) presenting a plan based upon the information gathered during the months of investigation and study, and upon the information received from other countries having a parcel post in operation. I wish also to state that during the constructive work on the parcel-post bill the Post Office Department rendered all the assistance in their power to the subcommittee in its study.

After the introduction of the bill referred to, the committee requested the Post Office Department to give its views relative to the purposes and provisions of the bill. On May 18 the chairman of the committee received the following letter from the Postmaster General:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 18, 1912.

Hon. JONATHAN BOURNE, Jr.,
Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your letter of the 16th instant, with which you inclose a copy of Senate bill 6850, entitled "A bill to establish a parcel-post system and to fix rates of postage on certain classes of mail," I have to inform you that the bill has been carefully considered, and its contents, scope, and purpose are approved by this department.

The bill has four distinctive features which, in my judgment, should commend it not only to Congress but to the public as well, namely, (1) the consolidation of the fourth and the third classes of mail matter; (2) the establishment of a cheap and simple rural route and city delivery parcel post; (3) the division of the United States and its possessions into six appropriate postal zones, based upon a quarter of the area formed by the intersection of parallels of latitude and meridians of longitude; and (4) the fixing for delivery within these zones of a graduated scale of postage rates based upon the cost of handling and transportation.

The consolidation of the fourth and the third classes of mail matter will greatly facilitate the administration of the postal service by simplifying the schedule of postage rates and lessening the labor of classification, weighing, and distribution.

The delivery of parcels to the limit of 11 pounds on all rural routes and within the delivery limits of free carrier offices will effect both an economy and a public convenience, as it will enable the inhabitants of the rural sections to use the mails for the transportation of the various small products of the farm, garden, and orchard, and at the same time to have delivered to them many of the smaller articles of necessity purchased in the towns without the time and expense incident to a trip of several miles for a trifling purchase.

The establishment of units of area of invariable dimensions on the basis of latitude and longitude will give a fixed starting point from which may be reckoned the distance of transportation and the rates of postage to be charged for the service performed. Representations of these areas upon appropriate maps, supplied by the Government, showing the location of the post offices and the limits of the several zones, will enable the postmasters to determine the necessary postage charges and to make proper dispatch of the mails.

The various scales of charges fixed for the several zones are based upon the actual cost of handling and transportation, and will enable the public to send through the mails parcels to the limit of 11 pounds at the cost of the service rendered. This will be a great improvement upon the present system which fixes similar rates for all distances. The effect of this measure will be not only to lessen the cost of transportation but to stimulate the general trade in small wares, and also to increase the postal revenue and pave the way for other postal reforms.

In my judgment the proposed measure will benefit all classes of the people except those carriers now engaged in the business of transporting small wares. While the patronage of these will be lessened, it will have the effect to limit their business to the more weighty freight, which is distinctly the business of such carriers.

I trust that this measure may have early consideration by the Congress and be speedily enacted into law.

Yours, very truly,
FRANK H. HITCHCOCK,
Postmaster General.

Mr. President, the bill thus favorably reported upon by the Post Office Department was taken as the basis of action on the part of the committee. To my mind, one of the strongest features in the bill, from a standpoint of desirability rather than of necessity, was the consolidation of the third and fourth class mail matter. Under existing law the third-class mail rate is 1 cent for each 2 ounces; on the fourth-class the rate is 1 cent an ounce. The bill I have referred to proposed a consolidation of the third and fourth classes of mail matter with a general flat rate of 1 cent an ounce up to 4 ounces and pound rates on parcels above 4 ounces, the rates varying under a zone system according to distance.

A tremendous protest arose on the part of many citizens of the country against the consolidation of the third and fourth classes of mail matter because of the proposed increase of the rate on printed matter. There would be an apparent doubling of the rate on circular and other printed matter, as the proposed rate was 1 cent an ounce instead of 1 cent for 2 ounces.

In view of this opposition and because the committee did not believe that the consolidation was vital, although highly desirable, we eliminated from the bill the consolidation of the third and fourth class, and in the bill as recommended to the Senate as a substitute for the House provision only fourth-class matter is affected.

In the study of the question before the committee two general propositions presented themselves to our minds, namely, that the postal service is in a way distinct and separate from any private service, and that there are two activities, one conducted entirely by the postal employee and the other assisted in by private enterprise. One is the handling service and the other the transportation service.

The committee believed, therefore, that if they could obtain information that would enable them to reach a conclusion as to what the cost to the Government is for these two activities they could then construct and frame a scientific bill.

There are two charges, one a handling charge and the other a transportation charge. By the handling charge I mean the pick-up or collection and the delivery. The cost is the same to the Government if the pick-up of the letter or parcel is made in Washington and the delivery made in Georgetown or Baltimore or Philadelphia or San Francisco, because that activity is performed solely by the governmental employee.

The First Assistant Postmaster General, Dr. Grandfield, upon request of the chairman of the committee, stated to the committee that the cost of handling a pound of fourth-class matter in the way of the pick-up and delivery, eliminating the transportation cost, other than the screen-wagon service and the transportation performed by the Government employee himself, is a fraction under 3 cents a pound. There is but very little additional expense in picking up and delivering a 2-pound package or a 3-pound package or a 4-pound package over a 1-pound package, up to the limit of the carrying capacity of the carrier or conveyance.

In the hearings before the subcommittee Mr. John L. Newbold was called. He is the president of the Merchants' Transfer & Storage Co. here in Washington. He said that he would be very glad to enter into a contract with the Government to handle all parcel-post or fourth-class mail matter and deliver it here in the city of Washington, within a radial distance of 7 miles, at 5 cents a package up to 25 pounds weight.

In view of the figures presented by the First Assistant Postmaster General as to the estimated cost of handling 1 pound of fourth-class matter, the pick-up and delivery cost being 3 cents, and in view of Mr. Newbold's statement before the committee and further evidence received from New York that it would cost in New York, within 25 miles of radial distance a little over 5 cents a package, with a 25-pound weight limit, the committee believed they were perfectly safe in fixing upon a handling charge of 5 cents for the first pound and an addition of 1 cent for each additional pound up to 11 pounds. A 5-cent charge is 66 per cent above what the department estimates it costs for that service to-day. Therefore, to be safe, we started with a charge of 5 cents for the first pound and 1 cent for each additional pound, and adopted that handling charge in framing the bill that I introduced on the 16th of May.

On rural routes and in the city delivery the handling charge covers the transportation charge, according to the committee's idea, because the governmental employee must perform the whole service. He collects the packages and delivers them. Hence the committee felt justified in making the rate for all rural routes, and in all city deliveries outside of rural routes, 5 cents for the first pound and 1 cent for each additional pound.

When we started in on the study of the subject, it seemed perfectly simple to me to work out a plan by which the cost could be determined, a cost sheet provided and worked out on the basis of the distance traveled. There are some 60,000 post offices in the United States. The first thought that came to my mind was to take a map and draw a circle around each post office, representing a distance of 50 miles or 100 miles or any number of miles that might be desired, but on investigation I soon discovered the impracticability of the idea, for the reason that to make such a presentation a map 10 feet long and 10 feet wide, with 60,000 post offices printed on it, would be like engraving the Lord's prayer on the head of a pin.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BOURNE. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It seems to me that this discussion is entitled to the consideration of the Senate, and I therefore ask for a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Clapp	McCumber	Shively
Bacon	Cullom	McLean	Simmons
Bailey	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Curtis	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Dillingham	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.
Bourne	Gallinger	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Bradley	Hitchcock	Overman	Smoot
Brandegee	Johnson, Me.	Page	Sutherland
Briggs	Jones	Perkins	Tillman
Bristow	Kenyon	Pomerene	Townsend
Bryan	La Follette	Reed	Warren
Burton	Lippitt	Root	Williams
Chamberlain	Lodge	Sanders

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BOURNE. I do.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am obliged to be absent for a little while. I have received a number of telegrams, and I desire to present them and ask that they be entered in the RECORD. They are telegrams protesting against the so-called "blue tag" in postal matters.

I desire to say that I am in hearty accord with the proposition set forth in the Bourne parcel-post proposition, and at the same time that I am opposed to any semblance of a "blue-tag" system as to our mail matters.

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator from New Jersey concludes, I will suggest that I presume the Senator simply wants the telegrams noted; that he does not want them printed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I simply want them noted, giving the substance and the signatures of the telegrams. I want the signers to know that I have not been derelict in presenting them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegrams will be noted.

The telegrams referred to, protesting against doubling the rates on transportation of publications by mail and what is known as "the blue-tag system," from publishers in different sections of the country, were signed as follows:

The New Idea Publishing Co., publishers of Woman's Magazine, of New York; The Hide and Leather Journal, Chicago, Ill.; The Cosmopolitan Magazine, The Good Housekeeping Magazine, Hearst's Magazine, Motor, and Motor Boating, of New York City; The Motor Age, of Chicago, Ill.; The American Lumberman, of Chicago, Ill.; The Standard Fashion Co., publishers of The Designer, of New York City; The Office Appliance Co., of Chicago, Ill.; The Butterick Publishing Co., publishers of The Delineator, of New York City; The Dowst Bros. Co., publishers of National Cleanser and Dyers, of Chicago, Ill.; of E. R. Shaw, of Chicago, Ill.; and of the Porter Hodgson Co., of Chicago, Ill.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, the next idea that came to my mind as a plan of ascertainment of rates to be charged on distance transported was to make each State a unit; but on realization that the State of Texas, with two hundred and sixty thousand and odd square miles, and Massachusetts, with eight thousand and odd square miles, would have the same rate within the respective units, I could readily see that injustice would be done to the citizens of the smaller State, because the citizen of the State of Texas could, under such a plan, have a package carried for him ten times the distance that the citizen of Massachusetts could. Furthermore, another objection was the possibility of the changing of State lines.

The next consideration was that of making each county a unit. The same objection applies to counties that applies to States. The next idea was the use of the degrees of latitude and longitude, which are fixed, never changing. This plan was most attractive; but on working it over we met the difficulty that if we made degrees the unit of ascertainment of rates to be charged on distance traveled, a citizen living just outside the degree, just over the line, if you please, would have to pay a greater rate than the citizen living inside the degree, but sending a distance of over 80 miles diagonally across the degree.

Here was a knotty problem to be overcome. Mr. J. H. Robinson, of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General's Office, suggested that he could solve that difficulty. Upon inquiry as to how it could be done he said, "Divide the degrees into quadrangles 30 minutes each way and give to the citizen in each quadrangle the right to send to any other citizen in the same quadrangle or any adjacent quadrangle at the lowest rate." That suggestion was sound, and, in accordance with my request, a chart of the United States was prepared dividing the United States into quadrangles of a quarter of a degree—that is, 30 minutes east and west and 30 minutes north and south, giving to nine of these quadrangles a radial distance of about 50 miles. The chart referred to is here at the rear of the Senate Chamber. These subdivisions [indicating] are all numbered. Each represents a quarter of a degree, and every post office in each one of these quadrangles has the same index number. For instance, here in the State of Pennsylvania, in quadrangle numbered 4968, as I remember, there are some 252 post offices, that being the quadrangle that has the greatest number of post offices of any, I believe, in the United States. A number here [indicating] are crossed off, which indicates that at the present time there are no post offices within these quadrangles, but under this general plan it is immaterial how many post offices may be abolished or how many new ones created, they always fit into the general plan.

In conjunction with this chart the idea occurred to me to prepare a directory, like a telephone directory, if you please; to have the States arranged in alphabetical order, with thumb indices; then under each State to have the post offices arranged in their alphabetical order, and opposite each post office the index number of the quadrangle in which the post office is located, so that the citizen coming into the post office with his package, with the name of the addressee on it, showing the State and post office, as it must do, the postmaster could, in less time than 20 seconds, quote to the citizen the rate that he would have to pay under this plan, if adopted. The postmaster would turn with the thumb index to the State; he would run down the State list to the post office; he would see the index number of the post office; and would note it immediately on his index chart, which he would have before him, showing which zone the office is in, and he would know the rates in that zone.

In the bill as I introduced it on the 16th of May I provided for six zones and seven rates. In the bill as recommended by the committee, which is now before the Senate, there are eight zones and nine rates. The chart now before the Senate was based on the bill that I introduced on the 16th of May; but, for the purpose of illustration, I think I can make as clear to the Members of the Senate the purpose of the chart and the method of the operation of this system, if put into law, as I could if the chart had been drawn according to the eight zones provided for in the bill recommended by the committee.

First, take a town in Kansas. This quadrangle [indicating] is No. 2721. Take that as a unit. Any citizen has the right to send at the first-zone rate a package to any post office in that quadrangle, or to any office in any adjacent quadrangle, at the lowest zone rate, but he has not the right to send farther than an adjacent quadrangle at that rate.

Beyond the first zone, which is composed of the central quadrangle and the eight adjacent quadrangles, the other zones are indicated by lines following quadrangle boundaries and approximately at given distances from the central quadrangle.

The department estimates that it costs to haul 1 pound 50 miles 2.58 mills. In my bill (S. 6850) for the first zone of 50 miles I took 5 cents for the overhead or handling charge, allowing under the estimate furnished by the Government therein a profit to the Government of 66⅔ per cent. I added a cent per pound for the transportation charge, although that gives the Government about 300 per cent profit over the amount that it costs the Government to haul that 1 pound 50 miles.

Mr. President, it was the desire of the committee and of myself to establish a system that we were satisfied would be absolutely self-supporting, and at the same time believing in the principle of giving our citizens increased facilities over those they now enjoy under the fourth-class mail privilege of sending 4 pounds anywhere in the United States at an expense of 1 cent an ounce. So we recommended that rate in the bill to which I have referred.

In the hearings we had, and from numerous letters and telegrams received, it was found that the country merchants, the traveling men's associations, the city merchants, and all the affiliated organizations were very much opposed to the enlargement of the parcel-post system as represented under the fourth-class mail privilege. None of their representatives who appeared before the committee were able to substantiate by concrete demonstrations or illustrations how they would be injured. To my mind it was simply evidence of the timidity of humanity and the disinclination of anybody willingly to assent to a change unless he is convinced that that change is going to benefit him directly or unless he is convinced that in surrendering something he now has he is going to receive in his participation in the general welfare incident to the change more than he gives up.

To minimize this opposition the committee increased the rate 9 cents on 11 pounds for the 50-mile zone, making the rate 35 cents for 11 pounds, instead of 26 cents as in the bill introduced on the 16th of May, the rate being for the first pound 5 cents, and then 3 cents for every additional pound. It was believed that this increase would make a higher barrier, if you please, and minimize the possibility of the mail-order house breaking into the territory of the country merchant within the 50-mile zone.

I call the attention of Senators to another point, which I will ask them to bear in mind. It is desirable to make 12 cents a pound the maximum charge for any distance, that being the charge at which any resident of this country can send 11 pounds to any point in other countries—and the committee was of the opinion that we would not be justified in charging for sending parcels within our own country more than we charge for sending to other countries. We then have a latitude of only 7 cents between the 5 cents taken as the handling or pick-up charge. Consequently, we can divide the country scientifically into only seven zones, providing we add an additional charge for every additional zone distance traveled, because you can not deal with fractions of a cent.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would the Senator object to giving me a practical illustration of how it would work in that zone? Take the quadrangle No. 2, between the States of North and South Carolina.

Mr. BOURNE. That is in Virginia.

Mr. OVERMAN. Virginia and North Carolina.

Mr. BOURNE. Any citizen at any post office in this quadrangle [indicating on the map]—I do not know how many post offices there are in that quadrangle, but assume for the sake of the argument there are 50——

Mr. OVERMAN. What would it cost to send an 11-pound package in that quadrangle?

Mr. BOURNE. It would cost, under the bill as recommended by the Senate committee, 15 cents to send 11 pounds to any citizen on a rural route; it would cost 15 cents to send the 11 pounds to any citizen within the city, providing the package initiated and ended in the city; and it would cost 35 cents to send to any post office within the radial distance of 50 miles.

Mr. OVERMAN. Take Raleigh, N. C., and Richmond, Va. What would it cost to send a package between those cities?

Mr. BOURNE. I can not tell the Senator—this map was prepared for a particular quadrangle.

Mr. OVERMAN. North Carolina is in zone No. 2, and so is Richmond, Va.

Mr. BOURNE. I will state, for the information of the Senator, that this general plan, so far as dividing the country into 3,500 units is concerned, is the same for every post office in every quadrangle.

Mr. OVERMAN. Take 11 pounds from Richmond——

Mr. BOURNE. If the Senator will permit me, I think I can make clear to his mind the working of this plan. Each unit or each one of these index quadrangles will have an index chart of its own, drawn for and applied to the post offices within that quadrangle. For instance, the 252 post offices here [indicating] would all have exactly the same rate and exactly the same index card.

Mr. OVERMAN. I see in zone No. 2 there is only one quadrangle. What does that mean? Outside of that quadrangle there are a great many post offices.

Mr. BOURNE. I was going on to explain. This chart was prepared, as I said, for the bill that I introduced on May 16, which provided zones of 50 miles, 200 miles, 500 miles, 1,000 miles, 2,000 miles, and all over that were in the sixth zone. All post offices here [indicating] would have the 50-mile rate, which, according to my bill, was 5 cents for the first pound, 1 cent for each additional pound for the overhead charge, and then the addition of a cent per pound for transportation, which would be 26 cents for the 50 miles. Then from any post office here [indicating] to this distance [indicating]—which is a radial distance of approximately 200 miles—from any point in this quadrangle the overhead charge would be 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for every additional pound.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that; but from the center of that quadrangle it is 200 miles to the limit of the quadrangle.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BOURNE. I do.

Mr. BAILEY. I merely wanted to ask if it takes the Senator from Oregon this long to explain it to the Senator from North Carolina, how long would it take the average postmaster to explain it to the average customer?

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will allow me, I can answer that very quickly.

Mr. BAILEY. He will have to do better, then, than he has with the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BOURNE. What the citizen wants to know when he brings his package in is what he has got to pay. With the use of this plan any man who has intelligence enough to be postmaster and intelligence enough to make and sign his reports can give the information in less than 20 seconds.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BOURNE. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I understand the Senator correctly, each post office will have a separate chart, and there will be as many different charts as there are post offices?

Mr. BOURNE. That is right.

Mr. McCUMBER. Each post office will have a chart with that post office in the center, or nearly in the center, of the quadrangle, and that will be surrounded with the circles which constitute the zone?

Mr. BOURNE. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. By some such lines as appear on that chart on the wall. So, all that would be necessary would be to know where the place was and look to see in which zone it was located.

Mr. BOURNE. All the postmaster would have to do would be, as I have explained, to simply look for the State in his directory, which has a thumb index and is alphabetically arranged, and find the name of the post office and its index number. Then he refers to his chart and finds the zone that the addressee's post office is in, and his rate down here in the left-hand corner [indicating].

Mr. BAILEY. But if the post office happened to be closed, he would have to wait until the next morning before he could mail his package, because it would certainly require the postmaster to explain it to him and to tell him the charge.

Mr. BOURNE. Would that be, do you think, an insurmountable objection in view of the fact that he would have a reduction in rate of from 25 per cent to 88 per cent over the charges that he now has to pay?

Mr. BAILEY. No; but I think when we come to depend upon the Government for everything we want done we will get used to waiting. The inevitable result of this governmental dependency is patience that unfits the people for the real work of life.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator speaks of the patrons turning to the directory. Does the Government furnish a directory for each post office?

Mr. BOURNE. I will state in that connection, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire, that I had estimates and bids secured. It will cost the Government $41,000 to secure 300,000 copies of the directory giving the name of every post office and its index number, and 300,000 copies of index charts, all the same so far as the quadrangles are concerned, but different so far as the zone arrangements are concerned applicable to each quadrangle, each quadrangle having a different zone arrangement. The assumption is that there will be two index charts, one inside the post office in the postmaster's room or at the stamp window and one outside for the citizen to himself examine and confirm the information that might be given him at the window.

The presumption is that a good many citizens using the package or fourth-class mail privilege extensively will buy from the Government, at a profit if you please, the index chart and the directory, so that they could make up their packages under the charges established by law and send them assembled to the post office.

I will say that at my request about a dozen railroad and express company representatives came to see me in order that I might explain to them the operation of this plan, and they said that no express company or railroad company anywhere in the world to their knowledge had ever evolved such a scientific and practical working plan for rate ascertainments on the distance traveled as this plan proposes. At the present time it often takes the tariff experts of the express companies, in the ascertainment of rates to some out-of-the-way point, five minutes to quote the rate to a patron. I again state that any man having intelligence enough to be postmaster can, in my opinion, quote a rate to any citizen under this plan in less than 20 seconds.

This distance [indicating] is 50 miles from this square here [indicating], this is 200, and this 500, then 1,000, and then 2,000. The rates are constructed scientifically for the first four zones on the basis of the cost to the Government, the handling charge first ascertained and then the transportation cost added to it. Beyond that the rates are not scientifically applied, because we are not justified in charging more for domestic service than we charge for domestic and foreign combined. Consequently, under the adoption of this plan, in the last two zones the Government would lose slightly on the business handled; but on the last two zones, according to the data submitted by the Second Assistant Postmaster General, less than 13 per cent of the fourth-class mail business is now handled, and over 53 per cent of the business is handled within the first three zones, which gives a decided profit to the Government.

Mr. President, as I stated, we recommended the rate of 5 cents for the first pound and 1 cent for every additional pound on rural routes and city deliveries, on the theory that this handling charge covered the transportation charge, because the Government employee did both the transportation and the handling.

We have to-day in the United States some forty-two thousand three hundred and odd rural routes. According to the information submitted by the department, there are about 100 of these that are carrying the full loads or working at the peak of their capacity. The remainder are carrying an average of 24 pounds each. The department reports that in their judgment, upon a conservative estimate, the rural carrier could carry 150 pounds.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have observed recently in the Rural Free Delivery News, I believe it is, which comes to me regularly, that a great many of the rural carriers are now using motor cycles. Could they carry any such amount in weight as that on one of those motor cycles? I think not. Judging from what that trade paper says, if we may call it a trade paper, the use of motor cycles in certain sections of the country is becoming very common, and the use of motor cycles of various kinds is becoming very common on the post routes.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, replying to the inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire, I would state that, so far as weight is concerned, unquestionably they could carry 150 pounds; but so far as volume is concerned, that would depend entirely upon the material sent, and probably they could not carry it.

Mr. GALLINGER. My inquiry related both to weight and volume, of course.

Mr. BOURNE. But the contract made with the rural carrier is not on the use of a motor cycle, but upon the performance of the work up to his capacity. If the business was greater than he could carry on a motor cycle, then he would have to secure a vehicle.

There is an apparent waste of 84 per cent in the carrying capacity on the part of the rural carrier to-day.

Under the international parcel post, which has 11-pound maximum weight limit, and under the British parcel post, having a maximum 11-pound weight limit, it is found that the average of the packets is from 3 to 4 pounds.

I think it is perfectly safe to assume that the average, if we increase our weight limit to 11 pounds, would be between 3 and 4 pounds, because I can not see any difference, in the way of population and density, ownership of railroads, postal facilities, that would change the percentage. Thus we could have the rural carrier carrying 32 packages more than he does at an average rate of 8 cents, assuming the weight would be of an average between 3 and 4 pounds. The Government would then receive $37,000,000 more in receipts than it does receive to-day, without the additional expense of a single cent in the way of increased vehicle or additional carrier.

Understand, I do not claim that each individual carrier will be furnished parcels to transport equal to his carrying capacity, but I do say that there is a waste capacity of $37,000,000 that the Government will utilize in part, at least, under the adoption of this plan and at these rates.

The bill introduced May 16 last had a second zone for 200 miles.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BOURNE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not make the inquiry to embarrass the Senator. I do not know how long the Senator intends to keep on his feet, but the criticism is made, and made with a good deal of force, that the rates prescribed by the committee are in excess of the express rates. I understand that the Senator has not touched on that subject. Necessarily I have been absent from the Chamber some moments. I would suggest that a good many Senators desire to have that phase of the question discussed, if it suits the convenience of the Senator.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, every Senator has been furnished with a copy of the committee report, Report No. 955, in which, from page 5 to page 18, is given an explanation as to the methods and reasons for the construction of the bill and the changes made by the committee. In my opinion the rates for the first two zones, as recommended by the committee, are greater than what the cost will be to the Government, but it was believed in the adoption of these rates that a protection would be given to the locality, to the country merchant, so that his field, if you please, would not be invaded, he having strongly in his mind the idea that the parcel post was going to be a special privilege for the mail-order house.

I have no claim for the committee or myself that this is a perfect bill in any way. I do claim that it is the most scientifically and practically constructed plan, based on cost and a simplified method of ascertainment of charges, ever devised. I do claim that it is a decided improvement over the present flat-rate plan, and that it proposes a reduction in postage charges of from 25 per cent to 88 per cent over the existing cost to the citizen.

Mr. CLAPP. On a short haul?

Mr. BOURNE. On the average; yes, on all hauls. Under the bill as recommended by the Senate committee 5 pounds transported on a rural route would cost the patron at the present rate of 16 cents per pound, or 1 cent an ounce, 80 cents. Five pounds would cost on the rural route, at the parcel-post rate, 9 cents, a reduction of 71 cents, or 88 per cent over the present cost.

On the 50-mile zone the cost now would be 80 cents. The cost under the proposed bill would be 17 cents, a reduction of 63 cents, or a reduction of 79 per cent.

On the 150-mile zone the citizen now has to pay 80 cents to have 5 pounds transported. Under the proposed bill the citizen would pay 22 cents, a reduction of 58 cents, or a reduction of 72 per cent.

On the 300-mile zone the citizen now would have to pay 80 cents to have 5 pounds transported. In the proposed bill he would pay 27 cents, a saving of 53 cents, or a saving in percentage of 66 per cent.

On the 600-mile zone the citizen now has to pay 80 cents for 5 pounds. Under the proposed bill he would have to pay only 32 cents, or a saving to the citizen on that distance of 48 cents and in percentage a saving of 60 per cent.

On a 1,000-mile zone 80 cents he has to pay to-day. Under the proposed bill 37 cents is all it would cost him, or a saving of 43 cents.

Upon a 1,400-mile zone he pays 80 cents to-day. Under the proposed bill he would pay 46 cents, or a saving of 34 cents.

On the 1,800-mile zone 80 cents he has to pay to-day. Under the proposed bill it would be 51 cents, or a saving of 29 cents; and over 1,800 miles 80 cents he has to pay to-day, and under the proposed bill 60 cents, a saving of 20 cents, or a 25 per cent reduction.

Mr. REED. Would it interfere with the Senator's elucidation of the bill to also tell us now how the rates compare with express rates?

Mr. BOURNE. Every Senator has before him or can get a copy of Report No. 955, in which that comparison is given; but it must be remembered that the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has been three years in their study of this question, have quoted tentative rates, the adoption of which they recommend. They have set the 9th of October for a hearing. It does not necessarily mean that the rates are going into effect.

The rates that I have quoted are much less than the present express rates. For instance, on the 50-mile zone the parcel-post rate is 5 cents for 1 pound, and from that to 35 cents for 11 pounds. The express rate is 25 cents for 1 pound, and 30 cents for 11 pounds. So the proposed parcel-post rate on the 50-mile zone is greater for the last 2 pounds than the present express rate. The parcel-post proposed rate up to 6 pounds, inclusive, is much less than the present express rate or the proposed express rate.

But suppose, Mr. President, that the express rate in some cases is lower than the proposed parcel-post rate, what difference does it make to the citizen? He is getting the benefit of the lower rate whichever way it comes, whether through the express company or through the Post Office Department. The general welfare is benefited in the reduction of rates; it is immaterial whether reduced under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the part of the express companies or under legislation on the part of Congress relative to the postal service.

The comparative table, to which I have referred, is here inserted in the RECORD. Senators should bear in mind that the express rates quoted are on shipments out of New York, where the rates are the lowest in the country. The rate is very materially higher on shipments from western cities, and particularly between two small towns, especially if the shipment be over two lines.

In the study of the parcel-post problem we have given consideration to every plan of parcel post that has been submitted. There are three general plans advocated—first, the flat rate per pound, regardless of distance; second, the zone system, in which the rate varies according to distance; third, Government ownership of the express companies.

I believe the flat-rate system unscientific, inequitable, and impracticable as applied to packages such as we expect to transport under parcel post. It is unscientific because it disregards distance. In the transportation of letters, where the individual pieces are small, distance is of little consequence; but this is not true of packages of merchandise. It is inequitable because it charges the shipper for short distances an excessive rate in order to counterbalance the low rate for the shipper for long distances. It is impracticable because the high rate for the short distance will practically prohibit the use of the service for transportation of goods of low value.

Government ownership of express companies I deem unwise and unnecessary. It tends toward paternalism and bureaucracy. In my opinion governmental ownership should only be adopted as a dernier resort, where regulation has been demonstrated to be a failure.

Private competition must result in vitalization of governmental operations. Governmental competition with private enterprise must also result in decreased cost to the public whenever the Government can operate as cheaply and efficiently as a private individual.

Government ownership is unnecessary because the Government already has a more complete organization for distribution than is possessed by all the express companies in the United States combined. We can develop and extend our present organization with the growth of the service as experience shows it is needed. Government acquisition of the express companies is unwise because it would involve the purchase of a large amount of property for which we have no practical use and would necessitate payment of a considerable sum for the good will of the express companies, which, so far as the Government is concerned, has no monetary value. It is also unwise because the Government at the present time should undertake only the handling of moderate-sized packages, leaving the larger packages to be handled by express companies or by freight. I see no advantage that could be gained from the enactment of a Government-ownership law that will not be gained by the enactment of the parcel-post measure I have offered.

Excessive express charges can and should be corrected by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It has power to regulate express as well as other transportation rates. For the last 20 months the Interstate Commerce Commission has been investigating the express companies, at an expense to the Government of about $200,000. Presumably their report will be completed and published within the next few months.

Many protests have been received from country and city merchants, jobbers, and traveling men on the theory that the parcel post would militate against their business and specially benefit what are known as the catalogue and mail-order houses.

At the hearings it was testified by the representative of one of the largest mail-order houses of the United States that in point of value 82 per cent of the catalogue business is shipped by freight, 10 per cent by express, and 8 per cent by mail. In other words, though they get their orders by mail, they ship the goods chiefly by freight. There can never be a mail or express rate competitive with the freight rate, hence it is apparent that only the 10 per cent of the business of the mail-order and catalogue houses which is now carried by express would be carried by mail and thus brought into closer competition with the business of the local merchants. In Chicago, which is credited with being the largest mail-order city in the United States, the total business of the mail-order houses was $140,000,000 last year. Only the goods to the value of $14,000,000, now shipped by express could come into closer competition with the retail merchants. This business the local merchants must already compete with, for it is now being shipped by express.

If the city merchant is sound in his argument against parcel post on the ground that it will enlarge his competition with the mail-order houses, then he would also have just cause for complaint if the Interstate Commerce Commission should order a lowering of express rates. In my opinion, the city merchant has no right to complain if there be established a parcel-post rate sufficient to cover the actual cost to the Government, and varying with the distance of transportation.

Although the rates proposed in the Senate committee's substitute are on some weights and zones somewhat higher than the express rates proposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, it should be remembered that the service rendered by the postal system is much more extensive than the service rendered by the express companies. For instance, the charge made by an express company for a 200-mile haul covers the transportation of a package only from one town to another, without any rural service and with a limited city delivery service. On the other hand, the Government, under this proposed parcel-post system, will take a parcel from a farmer's home on a rural route, carry it to town, transport it 200 miles over rail routes, and then, if desired, deliver it to another farmer out on another route. In other words, when parcel-post rates are compared with express rates there should also be a comparison of the character of service rendered. We believe that, with all elements duly considered, the parcel-post charges will compare favorably with express charges, present or proposed.

For 40 years the American people have been demanding a parcel post, having in mind an extension of the postal service to cover the handling of small parcels at rates which will enable the purchaser and consumer to deal directly, where so desired. Under a flat-rate system the rate must be so high as to be prohibitive of much of the short-distance traffic that should be accommodated. Such a rate has not been contemplated by the public in its discussion of this subject. Neither has the public had in mind Government ownership of express companies nor the absorption of the heavy transportation business handled by express companies at the present time. We have endeavored to provide the service, for which there has been a general demand.

We do not submit this substitute as being perfect in all its provisions, but believe that it is approximately scientific in its plan and that a committee appointed at the beginning of the summer vacation, while a political campaign is in progress, would not, in the four months allotted for the work, add anything of material importance to the information already gathered by a subcommittee of this committee in the investigation which has been conducted during a period of over 11 months, or that such a committee would be able to devise a better plan than that which we respectfully submit.

Objection is made to this substitute because it does not expressly enumerate articles of farm produce which shall be mailable by parcel post. As will be seen by reference to the language of the measure, this service will provide for the transportation of all commodities not now carried as first, second, or third class mail, within the weight and size limit and not injurious to the mails or postal employees.

Other criticisms of the bill are that it provides an 11-pound limit, that it does not include a collect-on-delivery system as to both postage charges and price of the article shipped, that it does not provide for insurance or indemnification, that the rates are higher than the indicated cost of the service requires, that the administrative branch should be given authority to change rates and zones, that the present compensation of railroads for transportation of the mails is excessive, which excess must be a burden on the parcel-post service.

As already stated, the committee fully realizes that this substitute is not perfect, and we believe that some of the additional features suggested should be and later will be incorporated in the parcel-post service. We believe, however, that in thus extending the postal service we should not undertake so many innovations as to embarrass the Post Office Department. The matter of compensation of the railroads if of great importance, and the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has directed the introduction of a bill providing a new basis of payment designed to cover the actual cost to the railroads, with a reasonable profit. This subject is too complicated to dispose of at this session, but it is expected the bill will be before Congress for action at the session beginning in December.

When the parcel-post service has once been inaugurated, details such as insurance, collect on delivery, reduction of rates, increased weight limit, etc., can be rapidly added as experience indicates the character of new service that should be provided. The Post Office Department is satisfied as to the practicability of the parcel-post system recommended by the committee, and will lend every effort to make it a success.

Advocates of Government ownership of express companies look at the advantages that are to be gained by Government operation of these enterprises but overlook some of the adverse circumstances which are of great importance. It is true that under Government operation much of the work of accounting and auditing would be eliminated. On the other hand, the investigations of the Interstate Commerce Commission show that the average compensation of employees of the express companies is from $40 to $50 per month, this compensation being paid to clerks and drivers, who are required to have sufficient ability to ascertain and quote express rates under the complicated system now in use. This work requires as high order of ability as the mere delivery of letters. I do not hesitate to say that if these employees were taken over by the Post Office Department their compensation would be increased to an average of $90 per month, or approximately double what it is at the present time. There are no exact statistics as to the present number of express employees, but a special report of the Census Bureau in 1907 shows that there were at that time 79,284, of which number, it is estimated by statisticians in the Interstate Commerce Commission, 50,000 were in the exclusive employ of express companies and the remainder jointly employed by railroads and express companies.

The large increase in the expense of operating express companies under Government ownership is mentioned as an incident that should be taken into consideration by those who anticipate a tremendous reduction in rates by Government ownership of the express companies. In view of the fact that practically all service performed for the Government costs more than service performed for private enterprises, it is doubtful whether Government ownership would, on the whole, result in any lower cost of service. In our opinion the best service in point of both efficiency and cost would be obtained through the regulation of express rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the correlation of an efficient parcel post.

Whatever a man's views as to the desirability of Government ownership of express companies, there should not be in that respect any reason why he should oppose the extension of our present postal service in the handling of fourth-class matter. The total routes covered by the express companies aggregate approximately 258,000 miles, while the mail routes cover 435,000 miles, not including over 1,000,000 miles of rural routes. If the express companies were taken over to-day and their operation continued under the present organization until the system could be amalgamated with the Post Office Department, there would still be 177,000 miles of post routes without the parcel service.

We believe that a perfect parcel-post system must be the result of development determined by experience resultant from general adoption, and that it is highly important to establish at once a foundation for such a system by enacting at this session of Congress a parcel-post provision based upon rates varying with distance and sufficiently high to be safely self-supporting.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BOURNE. With pleasure.

Mr. BRISTOW. I would suggest that the express rates as compared there are the express rates from New York, and the express rates between interior points of the country, between the small towns, are in many cases very much higher than the express rate there. It is universal application of these rates that will result in the reduction of express rates between the small communities throughout the entire country, and is more practical than the transfer from one railroad to another.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BOURNE. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I understand that the Interstate Commerce Commission divides the country into different zones, and the one zone including the State of New York includes practically all of the territory east of the Mississippi River.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will excuse me, I was not speaking of the proposed rate by the Interstate Commerce Commission, but the rates that now prevail. The Senator will remember that these proposed rates have not gone into effect, and we do not know when they will.

Mr. POMERENE. We have pretty good reason to believe that they will go into effect.

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course, that is for the future. If the rate is lower than the Government can afford to carry, the people will get the benefit of it as the Senator has stated.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will permit me, the rates contained in the present Bourne bill for the 11-pound package are very largely in excess of the rates now prevailing of the express companies.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think the Senator is entirely mistaken about that. In some instances it is; in others it is not.

Mr. POMERENE. The table contained in the Bourne report to the Senate shows it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I was calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that if he compares the express rates out of New York it would be much cheaper than it would be between the smaller towns in the States outside.

If the Senator will excuse me, I have an engagement soon on a conference committee, and I wish to explain the chart.

Mr. POMERENE. I shall have something to say on the subject later.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will explain how it works. The chairman of the committee has very kindly had a map prepared here. The center of that zone is Salina, Kans. Under the rates in this bill an 11-pound package delivered from the Salina office to any citizen of the city by carrier or to any patron of the office on a rural route will be 15 cents for 11 pounds, 5 cents for 1 pound, and 1 cent for each additional pound, making 7 cents for 3 pounds, and so forth. It is a service which the people do not now have. There is no way by which a local merchant can send by mail without paying 16 cents a pound or a cent an ounce to get out to his customers either in town or on a rural route. If he sends a package weighing 11 pounds now under the present conditions to a patron on a rural route it would cost $1.76, while 11 pounds under the Bourne bill will cost 15 cents.

The first zone now is the 50-mile zone. Lincoln, Kans., is in this [indicating] quadrangle, 35 miles from Salina. The merchant at Lincoln, Kans., has this 15-cent rate out of his town on a rural route—15 cents for 11 pounds. If the merchant at Salina desires to send a package to Lincoln or to a customer on a rural route out of Lincoln, it will cost him 5 cents for the first pound and 3 cents for each additional pound, or 35 cents for the 11 pounds It would cost him 20 cents more than it costs the merchant in Lincoln, because the merchant at Salina deposits his package in the mail; it is taken to the railroad and put on the rail, and there taken to Lincoln over the railroad. At Lincoln it is taken out on the rural route, and for this additional service the bill charges him 20 cents additional over what is the charge on the local route.

Under the present rate, when a merchant in the city sends a package on the rural route out of Lincoln he has to pay $1.76 for that 11 pounds; this bill gives him that service for 35 cents. So he gets for 35 cents that which under the present law would cost him $1.76. This is a great reduction.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know what the express charge would be?

Mr. BRISTOW. From Salina, Kans., to Lincoln, 35 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. It is just the same?

Mr BRISTOW. It is just the same; but the Government takes the package and delivers it in the country, probably 20 miles, to a customer, which the express company can not do.

Now, you must consider that it is an expense to maintain that delivery system. This Government undertakes to give the people a service which they do not have, which is given without infringing on anybody's rights.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if the bill confers plenary power upon the Postmaster General in his discretion to reduce the rates at any time?

Mr. BRISTOW. It does not.

Mr. ASHURST. Why not?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not think that that should be placed in the hands of the Postmaster General. I think the power should be retained in Congress, and I think the postal rates should be fixed by Congress and not by executive officers.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Kansas possesses a vast fund of information on this question, but it occurs to me, in view of the fact that we are establishing these zones and about 3,500 quadrangles, it would be almost impossible, or at least impracticable, for Congress by a hard and fast law to fix rates that shall be charged and thus leave no discretion upon the Postmaster General to prevent inequality or injustice.

I expect to vote for this bill. I think it would be a radical change in favor of this section if discretion should be vested with the Postmaster General or with the Interstate Commerce Commission to reduce rates and increase weights.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think it better for us to adopt the present plan, which has been worked out with a great deal of care. The chairman of the committee has been working on it now for a year certainly, and it is very desirable service, and if the rates are too high Congress can reduce them later. I think it is much better to start with them too high than too low, for they can be much more easily reduced than raised.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will indulge me long enough, I will say that no one appreciates more than I do the assiduous labor of this committee, and in making the statement I do not intend in any way to deprecate its great work, but it appeals to me with some force that the suggestion which I have made should be followed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Now, continuing, take the merchant at Salina, Kans., sending a package to Lincoln. He will pay 35 cents or 20 cents more for 11 pounds than the Lincoln merchant would pay.

Topeka is in the second zone, which is a zone covering a radius of 150 miles. If the merchant at Topeka city would send a package to Salina to a customer there he would pay 6 cents for the first pound and 4 cents for each additional pound, or 46 cents for 11 pounds, 31 cents more than the charge made to the local merchant for delivery on the rural route. If the Topeka merchant sought to send a package to Lincoln, Kans., it would cost him 46 cents, Lincoln being in the second zone from Topeka, and it would cost the Salina merchant 35 cents. That is, the Topeka merchant would pay 11 cents more than the Salina merchant, because the Government gives him more service, and for that additional service 11 cents additional is charged.

So the citizens of Salina, in the territory adjacent to their city, have an advantage over the merchant at the distant city, which they ought to have, because the Government gives the merchant at the distant city larger service.

Kansas City is in the third zone. The rate to Lincoln would be 57 cents, or 22 cents more than from Salina, or 11 cents more than from Topeka.

Chicago is in the fourth zone. The Chicago rate would be 8 cents for the first pound and 6 cents for each additional pound, or 68 cents. The merchant or any citizen of Kansas City would get into Salina or into Lincoln for 57 cents. From Chicago it would be 68 cents.

Kansas City in competing in her territory with Chicago has the advantage there because of her proximity to the people living in that vicinity.

That explains the relation of the rates in the bill to the business of the small merchant in the small town to his large competitor in the large commercial center. The charges are based upon the service that is rendered. Every man is charged by the Government for the service that the Government gives him in an equitable and reasonable proportion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will just excuse me I will be glad to answer him in a few moments. Now, what does the citizen get? As the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE] has explained, the citizen who lives on a rural route out of Lincoln gets a service he does not now have. He can send a package into town weighing 11 pounds for 15 cents, 1 pound for 5 cents, 2 pounds for 6 cents, 3 pounds for 7 cents, and so forth. It would now cost him $1.76 for the 11 pounds, or 16 cents a pound.

That is a prohibitory rate, and this is a very desirable facility for him to have.

The merchant at Salina in getting into this surrounding territory within 50 miles has a rate of 35 cents for 11 pounds as against $1.76 which he now would have to pay for merchandise aggregating that weight. At Kansas City the rate is 46 cents, or $1.30 less than he now has to pay. From Chicago it is 68 cents, or $1.08 less than the citizen would now have to pay for the same service under the present law. So that these rates are worked out so as to equitably proportion the charges as between the merchants in the various communities, and also giving the people a facility which they do not now have and at a very reasonable cost.

Now, something has been said in regard to the increased charges on the large packages by mail over what is charged by the express companies. On small packages that is not true—the 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 pound packages. Within these short zones the express company, of course, does not handle the business and can not handle the business at the rate which the Government can, but when you get to the large packages, heavy express, the facilities of the Government are not such as to conveniently handle the heavy packages, because it overloads the mail wagons, and you would congest a lot of freight into a mail wagon, which, in my judgment, would interfere with the mails.

There are some who advocate taking charge of the express companies, the condemnation and absorbing of the express companies, and doing the express business. I am not ready to advocate that policy.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Is it true, as some have suggested, that under the bill the long haul may be thrown upon the Government and the short and more lucrative hauls taken advantage of by the express companies?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; that can not be under this bill. That would be the case under what is known as the flat rate. There has been a proposal before Congress to make a flat rate—that is, 8 cents a pound for the parcel post. That would be 8 cents a pound from Salina to Lincoln, or 88 cents for an 11-pound package; the same from New York to Lincoln—88 cents. I do not think there is anything that justifies that system of rate making an express business.

When you are handling letters at 1 cent or 2 cents, of course you have got to have the flat rate, because you can not divide a cent and segregate the charge; it is not practicable. But when you get into the express business it seems to me you may charge for handling packages and this freight in proportion to the service rendered. Then, if the Senate will pardon me in taking so much time, it costs the Government about a cent for 250 miles to haul a pound. That is, we pay the railroad company about a cent for hauling a pound 250 miles, and if you have 8 cents a pound for a flat rate, after you get out a certain distance you are hauling everything at a loss. Of course the Government would get all of that hauled at a loss and very little for the short haul, where it was done at a profit.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On a very long haul it would lose; on a short haul it would not lose at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. In my investigation of the rates I have come to the same conclusion nearly as the Senator from Kansas, and that is that on packages up to 6 pounds the express rates and the rates provided in the bill are about equal, but under 6 cents a pound the bill provides rates very much less, and over 6 pounds when it reaches the second or third or fourth zone they are considerably higher.

Mr. BOURNE. That is the proposed rate; they have not gone into effect.

Mr. SMOOT. I mean the present rate.

Mr. BOURNE. The present express rate.

Mr. SMOOT. The present express rate—for instance, take the present express rates from Chicago to Salina. The present rate is a little less than 68 cents, as provided in the bill, on 11 pounds.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is right.

Mr. SMOOT. If it were 5 pounds or anything less than 5 pounds, then the rate provided in the bill is very much less than the present express rate.

Mr. BRISTOW. Just a minute, and then I will yield the floor. That is true where you have got a direct haul on the main line; but here is Lincoln—here is the little town of Gypsum, within a radius of 50 miles of Salina. They are on two different railroads. The rate on 11 pounds from Lincoln to Gypsum is about 50 cents, because of the transfer. That is the express rate. Under this system the postal rate will be 35 cents, because the Government will handle it, and there will not be that extra charge for transfer. It is all one with the Government, and the people in these small communities will receive a very great advantage in their communication with each other by having a very much reduced rate not only on small packages but large packages as well.

Mr. SMOOT. That is perfectly correct. The Senator will remember I said in the second and third and fourth zones, but in this zone it is not the case—that is, within the zone itself—but when it reaches beyond the zone then packages at 6 cents a pound are cheaper by express than by the rates provided.

Mr. BRISTOW. I now yield the floor. I have taken more time than I intended.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I dislike very much to be put in the attitude of opposing the bill as it has been presented. The Senator from Oregon frankly and candidly does not claim for his bill perfection, and I trust I may be pardoned for trying to point out a few of the imperfections contained in the bill as I see them.

There have been two propositions before Congress. One is the parcel post, so called, as it is contained in the bill. In the other branch of Congress they have been considering a parcel post and an express post. I am free to say that when the thought of an express post was first suggested to my mind it did not meet with very much approval, but I believe it is worthy of very great consideration. In view of the fact that this is new legislation so far as the United States is concerned, and in view of the fact that it has not been perfected, as I feel Senators themselves who are supporting this measure will concede, and in view of the fact that there is certainly merit enough in the express-post bill to justify its further investigation, and in view of the further fact that, as I understand by the provisions of this bill, it is not going into effect until January 1, it seems to me that the Congress ought to make haste slowly upon this proposition and get all the information that is available, in order that we may ascertain what the respective merits of the two systems are and whether either system which may be adopted can be improved.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. BOURNE. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio what additional information he thinks could be obtained, other than that which has already been obtained by the committee, other than the information incident to the adoption and the demonstration of results?

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will pardon me, as I go along I think I will point out some of the particulars in which I think this matter can be improved upon.

In the first instance, just a word on the subject of the express post. We know, for instance, that the contracts between the express companies and the railroad companies provide that about 47.53 per cent of the rates which are collected by the express company must go to the railroad. I believe that to be excessive. That affects the rates which must necessarily be charged by the express companies in order that they may do a living business. Investigations in the other House show further that the ton-mile rate now charged the Government for its mail is 13.2 cents, while the express companies' cost is only 7 cents a ton-mile. I refer to these facts simply to show the necessity of investigating further into this subject.

It is not going to cost very much to condemn the express companies. It is estimated that it will cost only $15,000,000. We already have a limited express in the way of our rural routes and our star routes. It seems to me that these different elements can be so combined with the express company properties as to form an effective instrumentality which will lead to the cheapening of rates.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why should we condemn the express companies if we put this post express into effect? Why may we not run it ourselves without condemning any other property?

Mr. POMERENE. We could. I am not prepared to say definitely what should be done; but I submit that we are simply considering this question in its infancy. Under the proposed rate for the larger weights we will be charged more under the parcel-post bill which is now under consideration than we are being charged by the express companies themselves.

While upon the subject I want to call the attention of the Senate to a table which I have prepared, and I have taken the figures from Report No. 955, submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE]. They are taken from the table on page 19 and the exhibit thereto attached.

The table shows that the charges for the transportation of an 11-pound package from New York City, under the present express rate, is for the most part smaller than it will be under the Bourne bill. The charges under the schedule of rates which has been prepared by the Interstate Commerce Commission is a substantial reduction of the present express rates. The charges contained in the present Bourne bill under consideration are greatly in excess of the rates which were contained in the original Bourne bill submitted. If Senators care to refer to that report they will find that for an 11-pound package, carried a distance of 100 miles from New York, the present express rate is 40 cents; the proposed express rate, or rather the rate fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, will be 26 cents, a difference of 14 cents; while the original Bourne rate was 37 cents.

The pending Bourne bill makes that rate 46 cents, or, in other words, the present Bourne bill rate is 6 cents higher than the present express rate and 20 cents higher than the rate fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Take an 11-pound package which is shipped a distance of 150 miles; under this table the express rate from New York is 45 cents, the Interstate Commerce Commission rate is 28 cents; the original Bourne bill rate is 37 cents; and the pending Bourne bill rate is 46 cents. An 11-pound package shipped 200 miles from New York under the present law costs 55 cents.

The interstate-commerce rate is 29 cents; the original Bourne bill rate is 37 cents; and the pending bill rate is 57 cents; in other words, the Interstate Commerce Commission reduced the express rate 26 cents, because it thought the present express rate excessive. The pending Bourne bill increased the rate over the original Bourne bill 20 cents, and made it 2 cents in excess of the present express rate, which is held by the Interstate Commerce Commission to be 26 cents excessive.

Mr. President, I do not care to take up the time to analyze this entire report, but I ask permission to print as a part of my remarks the table which I have prepared and which is taken from the exhibits which are attached to the Bourne report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order will be made.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. POMERENE. The table shows, for instance——

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Just a moment. The table shows in column 1 the present express rate; in column 2 the express rate which has been fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission; in column 3 the rates in the original Bourne bill; and in column 4 the rates in the present Bourne bill. Now I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BOURNE. I was going to ask the Senator from Ohio if he has considered the fact that the citizen is benefited? What difference does it make to the citizen whether his goods are carried by the express company or the Post Office Department, provided he gets a lower rate? He is benefited to the extent of the reduction in the rate and the increased efficiency of the service, is he not?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the limited time which I have will not permit going into details, but, as I understand it, for the first few miles the rates which are suggested in the bill under consideration are less than the express rates, but when we go to these longer distances of 100 miles or 150 miles or 200 miles the rates are in excess of the present express rates. I do not understand, that being so, how the citizen can be benefited by being charged by the Government a greater rate than he is obliged to pay to the express company at the present time.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. BOURNE. If that is so, he would simply use the express company instead of using the Post Office Department.

If the Senator will please permit me for a moment further, I wish to say that the bill has been built upon the basis of the cost to the Government under the best obtainable data, in the opinion of the committee, of leaving a profit to the Government, so that the enlargement would not show a loss to the Post Office Department at the end of the year. The bill does give a reduction of from 25 per cent to 88 per cent over existing rates, and it furnishes for small packages a much better and increased activity than the Government now gives the citizen.

Mr. POMERENE. I concede that the reduction in rates is very considerable when it comes to shorter distances; but that is not true when it is applied to longer distances.

Mr. BOURNE. It gives a 25 per cent reduction. Is not that pretty good?

Mr. POMERENE. Not on the longer distances.

Mr. BOURNE. Absolutely.

Mr. POMERENE. Not for the small-weight packages.

Mr. BOURNE. For packages of any weight. It gives 25 per cent reduction over the present existing rates on the fourth-class mail matter—12 cents a pound as against 16.

Mr. POMERENE. I think if the Senator will examine his own figures, contained in his own table, he will find my position is right; and I say that with all due respect.

Mr. BOURNE. The Senator from Ohio is certainly mistaken. I say that the proposed rate of 12 cents a pound on the long distance is a reduction of 25 per cent over the present rate of 16 cents a pound, or 1 cent an ounce.

Mr. POMERENE. Is the Senator from Oregon now speaking of the post-office rates?

Mr. BOURNE. I am speaking of a reduction of the proposed rates over the existing post-office rates.

Mr. POMERENE. It is possible, when the Senator and I understand each other, that we do not differ.

Mr. BOURNE. Well, I do not think we do.

Mr. POMERENE. In comparing the proposed postal rates with the express rates, the Senator is trying to defend his present measure by showing that it is preferable to the present post-office rates. When I say that, I want to yield all deference and all honor to the Senator for the very great work that he has been doing and the very good work which he has done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. POMERENE. I will.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask unanimous consent, if the bill under consideration is completed before 6.30 p. m., that at that hour, or earlier, the Senate will take a recess until 8.30 p. m., the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Regular order, Mr. President. We can not spare any time just now from this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Georgia, who desires to ask me a question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the Senator from Ohio if he understands the position of the chairman of the committee to be—I am stating it as I understand it—that the committee did not fix the rates just as they wanted to fix them; but they undertook to ascertain how much certain hauls cost the Government for certain weights, and they undertook to fix the rates based upon what it is now costing the Government for transportation, and to give the public, therefore, the benefit of a low rate wherever the present cost to the Government would justify it, and where the cost to the Government would not justify it, to let them look out and find cheaper transportation somewhere else. I believe I state it correctly.

Mr. POMERENE. I think I understand the Senator's position; but, while we are dealing with this subject, it seems to me we ought to present a better bill to Congress on the subject, and pass a bill which, with our present knowledge upon the subject, will be as perfect as human intellect can make it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. When you knew what it was costing the Government for the haul, would you fix a rate which you knew would involve a loss?

Mr. POMERENE. No. However, I do not know that I am prepared to go into all the details of this matter now; but I do feel that the present rates which the Government pays to the railroad companies are excessive, and I think that matter ought to be investigated further than it has been.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. BOURNE. A bill has been introduced under the direction of the committee to take up that particular question. That has, however, nothing to do with the present subject of the parcel post. That is a matter of railway pay and transportation. As I understand, a commission, administrative in character, if my memory serves me rightly, has been about six years working on that question and trying to evolve a better plan of determination as to railway mail pay than the one now in existence. It was the opinion of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, who informed me that he was a member of that commission, that by the adoption of the plan proposed there would probably be a saving to the Government of some $9,000,000 in pay. The Government now pays in round numbers about $50,000,000. It is the purpose of the committee to take up that question. The purpose of introducing the bill was to get the subject before the country and before the people in interest, so that they could prepare themselves at the next session of Congress to go on with the consideration of that particular phase of the matter.

Mr. POMERENE. I am admonished that the time is extremely short, and for that reason I am going to be much briefer than I had anticipated.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to a table showing the comparisons of cost between the express rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the rates provided for in the present Bourne bill, which is to be found on page 4 of Senate Document 895, and which has been prepared by Mr. George P. Hampton, secretary of the Farmers' National Committee on Postal Reform. I ask permission to insert this table with the explanatory notes accompanying it. It is as follows:

This table shows that—

For 8-pound packages, 50 miles distance, the Bourne rate is 26 cents and the express rate 23 cents.

For 11-pound packages, same distance, the Bourne rate is 35 cents, express rate 24 cents.

For a 6-pound package, distance 150 miles, Bourne rate is 26 cents, express rate 24 cents.

For the 11-pound package, same distance, the Bourne rate is 46 cents, the express rate 26 cents.

For a 5-pound package, 300 miles, the Bourne rate is 27 cents, the express rate 25 cents.

For an 11-pound package, same distance, the Bourne rate is 57 cents, express rate 30 cents.

For the 5-pound package, distance of 600 miles, the Bourne rate is 32 cents, the express rate 27 cents.

For 11-pound package, same distance, the Bourne rate is 68 cents, the express rate 35 cents.

For a 4-pound package, distance of 1,000 miles, the Bourne rate is 30 cents, the express rate 28 cents.

For an 11-pound package, distance 1,000 miles, the Bourne rate is 79 cents; express rate, 41 cents.

For a 4-pound package, distance 1,400 miles, Bourne rate is 37 cents; express rate, 32 cents.

For an 11-pound package, same distance, Bourne rate is 100 cents; express rate, 53 cents.

For a 4-pound package, 1,800 miles, the Bourne rate is 41 cents; express rate, 38 cents.

For an 11-pound package, same distance, the Bourne rate is 111 cents; express rate, 69 cents.

For a 4-pound package, 1,800 miles and over, the Bourne rate is 48 cents; express rate, 45 cents.

For an 11-pound package, 1,800 miles and over, the Bourne rate is 132 cents; express rate, 89 cents.

For all packages of intermediate weights between the figures I have given, the Bourne rates are greater than the express rates in substantially the same proportion as the figures just given.

The comparisons referred to are as follows:

Column 1, Bourne bill rate.
Column 2, express rate on the average.
Express-rate zone No. 1 includes all territory east of the Mississippi River north of Washington, D. C., the southern boundary of Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, except Michigan north of Grand Rapids, Wisconsin north of Milwaukee, and Minnesota.
All the Bourne rates below the line dividing the table into two parts are higher than the express rates, making competition with the express companies impossible.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in view of the fact that for exceedingly small packages the rates provided in the pending bill are very much higher than the express rates, I do not see how the farmers and the public generally are to be benefited by these particular rates, though I concede that they are benefited by the rates provided for smaller packages than 5 pounds and for the shorter distances.

Mr. President, the parcel-post proposition was first advocated in behalf of the farmers. They are the men particularly whom we seek to benefit, and this provision ought to be put in such shape that the Government would be inviting the use of the parcel post by the people of the country rather than to estrange them from it.

For this reason it occurs to me further that this provision ought to be amended so as to provide, first, for the transportation of larger packages. I am advised that the German Government transports packages up to 110 pounds. If we are to give the farmer the opportunity to market the produce of his farm it is not giving to him very much advantage to send a 4 or 5 pound package; it is the transportation of the larger weights, 10, 12, 15, and 25 pounds, which would be a benefit to him.

Again, in nearly all of the countries of the world, I think, except England, there is a provision for "collect on delivery" for the charges and for the price of the goods which are transported. It seems to me something should be provided along that line and that there should also be a plan for the insurance of the safety of the packages.

Another proposition: There is evidently, as has been disclosed by this debate, a very great uncertainty as to what are proper charges for this service. We are without experience in that behalf in this country. This bill provides a hard-and-fast rate, which can neither be increased nor decreased by the Post Office Department. It is my belief that it will be much better to fix certain maximum rates and give the Post Office Department the right to change them so as to make the service self-supporting, but not a source of revenue above that mark.

I desire to ask the chairman of the committee does he understand that this bill provides for the shipment of farm produce?

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, if the Senator will read the bill he will find that it provides for everything not carried in the first, second, or third class mail.

Mr. POMERENE. I remember the language of the bill. It, in effect, provides that mailable matter which is not included in the first three classes may be sent by parcel post; but I understand also that the department has placed a construction upon that, and a reference to the Postal Guide will show that perhaps there are not more than two or three farm products which have ever been regarded as mailable matter. I do not say that the Senator may not be justified in placing the construction upon this bill which he does, and which he intended, because he has so said; but, at the same time, as casting a doubt upon the construction which he places upon it, I am admonished by the other fact that the committee have stricken out of the House measure an express provision for the transportation of farm products.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, the bill provides:

SEC. 8. That hereafter fourth-class mail matter shall embrace all matter not now embraced by law in either the first, second, or third class, not exceeding 11 pounds in weight, nor greater in size than 72 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form or kind likely to injure the person of any postal employee or damage the mail equipment or other mail matter, and not of a character perishable within a period reasonably required for transportation and delivery.

In all the conferences which I have held—and they have been quite numerous—with the four Assistant Postmasters General, we frequently talked in reference to the benefits that would accrue to the farmers on account of the improved transportation facilities for the carrying of garden produce and things of that kind—eggs, poultry, asparagus, celery, lettuce, and so forth. It was certainly my expectation that, under the provisions of the bill, all those products of the farm under the weight limit would be carried at the prices charged.

If the Senator will permit me just one moment further, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD, in connection with the remarks I have previously made, portions of the report on the Post Office appropriation bill, Calendar No. 837, in order to perfect, so far as the record goes, the report on this particular subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there is another branch of this subject which I intended to discuss, but the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] desires to speak, and I yield to him. I owe him an apology for occupying as much time as I have.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the House bill provides that fourth-class matter shall be charged 12 cents a pound, except where the reduced rate is given for the rural-route service. Now, then, if we adopt that measure we have a flat 12 cents a pound rate for the entire United States.

Let us see what the effect would be upon short distances. For a distance of 50 miles under the House provision 5 pounds would cost 60 cents. Eleven pounds would cost $1.32. The distances in which the farmer is principally interested, the distances in which the great majority of the people are principally interested, are the 50 miles and the 150 miles distances. It is the opportunity for the farmer to reach the near-by small city as well as his county-seat town with the smaller products raised on the farm that will benefit him. This will furnish the opportunity for the sale of the diversified products of the farm. Where does he buy most of the small articles that he uses? Either in his town which his rural route will reach or in some neighboring city 50 and 150 miles off.

I believe the distances of haul which will serve the people, the farmer, the merchant, and the public generally are the short distances. I believe they are more concerned and will derive more benefit from the facilities to be had from rural routes from a 50-mile radius and from a 150-mile radius than they will from the great distances. This House provision with a flat rate loads down the short haul so that the service can not be used.

There has been an effort made to create the impression with many people that the flat-rate system is the wise rate and is one which they should advocate. Investigation has satisfied me that a flat-rate system would be utterly destructive of the service and of no value to the masses of the people. If you make this flat rate high enough to cover the average expense which the Government has in the haul, you must make it something like 12 cents a pound, the rate fixed by the House, and putting it at such a rate it is prohibitive for all short distances. If you make it low enough only to pay the cost to the Government for the short distances, then the long haul will be had at very enormous loss, and the Treasury of the Government will almost be exhausted. There are two elements of cost in the mail service, one the handling element, the other the transportation element. When the weight is slight, the handling element becomes the main feature of cost. As the weight increases, the transportation element becomes the main feature of cost. You can haul a letter weighing only an ounce all over the country for a small cost, the weight is so little that the handling cost is the principal element of expense. The average weight of a letter is the third of an ounce. That would be 48 to a pound. It would be 528 to an 11-pound package. So in an 11-pound package the element of weight is 528 times as important as in the average letter. Therefore the transportation cost is 528 times of as much importance in an 11-pound package as it is in the average letter.

The large element of cost when the package is of substantial weight is the transportation, depending upon distance. The Government now pays something like a cent a pound for 200 miles. When you go into the weight of a substantial character you must differentiate on account of distance or else you will furnish service at too high a cost to the short distances or the short distances being placed low enough your long distances will be so fixed that you will be doing this at a frightful loss.

So, Mr. President and Senators, it seems to me that in any plan for a parcel post where you allow 11 pounds hauled you must fix your rates according to distances. You can not afford to haul everywhere for the same price, for the cost to the Government of the long haul is very much greater than it is for the short haul.

In the effort to work out the system of rates I am sure the chairman of the committee gave great labor and great thought and consulted freely those interested in the matter to aid him in reaching rates. He was unable to fix them arbitrarily. It was essential that he should consider the rates the Government is paying for transportation and make our parcel-post rates conform to the cost to the Government of the particular haul, so that if possible the service might be rendered to the public without a loss to the Government. With experts the chairman sought to work out a system which would give a fair charge for handling and practically the exact charge to the Government for the increased cost of transportation. So the original figures of the chairman were fixed. The committee worked them over, amended them, and increased them.

Now I am going to ask the Senate to amend two of the rates laid down on page 61, first in line 7 and second in line 10. The rates fixed for 50 miles are, first, 5 cents as a charge for the first pound and then 3 cents for each additional pound. I think 2 cents for each additional pound is sufficient. I am satisfied that the cost to the Government will be covered by that increase. For 150 miles the increase is 4 cents for every additional pound after the first pound. I am going to ask that it be made 3 cents per extra pound. These were the figures in the original bill of the chairman of the committee. Our investigation satisfied us, and the views of the Post Office Department satisfied me, that for those rates we can afford to give the service.

Mr. BRISTOW. I certainly can not, because I believe it would result in the Government carrying express matter at a loss. I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to this fact, that since the committee agreed unanimously on the rates now contained in the bill the Senate has added $8,000,000 practically in one item to the expenditures of the Government in the delivering of mail on rural routes. When you fix the rates below what is safe, you run the risk of being confronted in the future with the handling of these packages at a dead loss, and you will have another proposition more detrimental to the service than that confronting us now in handling second-class mail, where we have been handling it at much less than cost. We can not raise rates when they are once established. I beg the Senator from Georgia not to take the chance of putting the rates below what might be the cost. It is easy to reduce them some other year, when we know from practical experience what the cost is going to be.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have said what I wanted to say, and I shall not detain the Senate longer. I desire to withdraw my motion to reconsider. My object in making it was to provoke discussion. I felt that the chairman of the committee ought to discuss this subject, and I knew that other Senators desired to do so, and I wanted the RECORD to contain their views.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the further consideration of the bill will be under the five-minute rule. The first amendment passed over will be reported.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment of the committee passed over is on page 12, line 16, after the word "pay." At the end of the line the committee proposed to insert:

And for payment of services in excess of eight hours.

So that the paragraph will read:

Substitutes for clerks and employees absent without pay and for payment of services in excess of eight hours.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, that is the provision which authorizes overtime. I think that overtime would be a very expensive and a very dangerous experiment for us to undertake at present. Overtime is not permitted by the carrier service, and I do not think we ought to change the system now, because it will lead inevitably to the piling up of great overtime bills. The Government some time ago was overcharged over three and a half million dollars for overtime in a period of a little over three years until the policy of permitting overtime was abolished.

Mr. SMOOT. In addition to what the Senator from Kansas has already said, which I agree to heartily, not only will there be in the future claims against the Government, but millions of dollars of claims will be brought here by employees claiming that they have already served overtime.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, if the second paragraph of section 5 in the bill remains in then it is important that the italicized portion of the Senate amendment just read, "for pay of services in excess of eight hours," goes in.

I trust the motion of the Senator from Kansas to strike that out will not be agreed to. It is supplemental to the second paragraph of section 5. That was agreed to yesterday as in Committee of the Whole, although, of course, it is subject to amendment or change now or when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator would rather we would pass on that paragraph first, I will move to strike that out of the bill so that we may get a vote on it.

Mr. BOURNE. This is drawn upon some of the legislative features in the bill. I think it would facilitate the time of the Senate and be a more intelligent way of acting if, by unanimous consent, we pass to section 5, because we can not act on some of these supplemental matters intelligently until action is taken either that we approve the Senate agreement to the House provision or else that we amend it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that section 5 has already been agreed to.

Mr. BOURNE. That is what I said; and it is open, as I understand it, to amendment when it comes into the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BOURNE. So I would ask the Senator if he would simply file the objection and let us adopt the Senate amendment just read by the Secretary, because that is absolutely necessary if section 5 of the second paragraph remains in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I just want to call attention to the fact that in the hearings before the committee it was brought out that if we allow overtime it would make for the more efficient service, greater expedition on account of the men who have charge now knowing more how to meet the exigencies of the case than to ask an outsider; that while it might cost less it would be a detriment to the service.

It was also brought out if we provide an eight-hour law it is absolutely ineffective and rendered null and void if there is not a penalty attached to any overtime that might accrue. So, unless there is provision made for the payment of overtime, the eight-hour law will amount absolutely to nothing.

I have here some decisions of the Supreme Court, but it is sufficient for me to call attention to the fact that it has already been decided. For that reason the Post Office Committee of the Senate, when they adopted the eight-hour law, made a provision that the present employees might work overtime and receive compensation.

Before I take my seat I should like to say the main objection was that these men would avoid carrying out their full time in order to get the overtime. I do not think that that is any argument at all, for the reason that the rule for efficiency for promotion and demotion is in operation. A man who does not render efficient service renders himself liable to discharge from the service for inefficiency.

So I hope the provision as it is now in the bill will remain there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the vote be taken again.

Mr. BRISTOW. If it would be agreeable to the chairman of the committee, why not reconsider informally the vote by which section 5 was adopted? Then I will move to strike out the paragraph that relates to overtime, and we can adjust it. If it is left in, this amendment can follow along.

Mr. BOURNE. That course is agreeable to me.

Mr. LODGE. There was no vote on the clause which the Senator proposes to strike out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the vote whereby certain amendments in section 5 was agreed to be reconsidered. Without objection——

Mr. REED. What is that amendment?

Mr. BRISTOW. I will explain it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate, on reconsidering that vote, did not act upon the section as a section. The Senator can offer an amendment to that section at the present time.

Mr. BRISTOW. I move that lines 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, on page 47, be stricken out.

The SECRETARY. On page 47, strike out lines 17 to 21, inclusive, which read:

That in cases of emergency, or if the needs of the service require, letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks in first and second class post offices can be required to work in excess of eight hours a day, and for such additional services they shall be paid extra in proportion to their salaries as fixed by law.

Mr. BRISTOW. The purpose of this amendment is to prevent overtime employment in the postal service. There is at present no overtime permitted. There is an eight-hour law that relates to carriers in the city service, and it has been in operation for many, many years, but carriers are not allowed to work overtime, because when they were allowed to work overtime they became a very great burden to the department, there being time from 10 minutes to an hour a day that was charged up as overtime. Disputes arose between the carriers and the department; it went into the court; and finally, after years, the Government paid something over $3,000,000 to cover the overtime controversies, the carriers in the courts enforcing the payment. They have a right to extra pay if they work overtime. This provision simply permits overtime. If the carriers or the clerks are not permitted to work overtime, then the substitutes who are on the list waiting for appointment when vacancies occur are called upon to perform the service when it is in excess of what the regular employees can do in the limited eight-hour service.

I think it is much better for the service to have the substitute employed during the overtime than to have the regular carriers work the overtime. There will be a desire, of course, on the part of the carriers to get more pay and to work overtime, but the policy of the eight-hour day is an eight-hour day and not a nine or ten hour day. It is eight hours' work for eight hours' pay and to prevent overtime. I do not think the Government ought to go into the overtime business or recognize overtime as a legitimate part of the eight-hour system.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why does the Senator think it better to employ these substitutes than to have the regular men finish out whatever extra work the emergency may call for?

Mr. BRISTOW. In my opinion it would be cheaper in the end, and then it makes the position of substitute more desirable. So when one who wants to enter the service gets on the substitute list he is given occasional employment. It is like the street railway service. There are substitute motormen and substitute conductors. They get some work occasionally. It makes the position of substitute more desirable and they get a better class of men waiting for final appointment. I think it is better for the service. That is my judgment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Who decides, under the language of this bill, "that in cases of emergency, or if the needs of the service require, letter carriers in the City Delivery Service," and so forth, may work overtime? Who decides whether an emergency exists or not?

Mr. BRISTOW. The postmaster or the department. The postmaster would have to decide it, doubtless.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I assume he is the man who is best qualified to know whether an emergency does exist or not. If, in his judgment, it does exist, and if the service requires it, why should not the letter carrier be allowed to perform the needed service for the benefit of the service?

Mr. BRISTOW. The experience of the department when they permitted that was that it was very expensive and became very troublesome. Then there is the man on the substitute list never getting anything to do. In this case it becomes a desirable position to hold. When the service is congested with heavy mail the substitutes can be called upon, as they ought to be called upon, to do this extra work. The postmaster, instead of permitting overtime in the eight hours, will simply call on the substitute.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the Senator if when they work overtime they are allowed to receive pay for it?

Mr. BRISTOW. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The business is being conducted successfully without overtime?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And economically?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The substitutes are used to advantage?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is it so that whenever an emergency, which implies an unexpected condition of things, exists there is some substitute at hand?

Mr. BRISTOW. There are substitutes on every list of letter carriers, and the postmaster now calls upon the substitutes under our eight-hour system. The postmaster draws on the substitute list to do this extra work.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course I suppose if there is such a thing as a substitute list the substitutes ought to be given a chance, but my question is if there is any unanticipated emergency suddenly arising which requires him to work 10 or 15 minutes or half an hour overtime, if the service is required in the opinion of the postmaster, the regular men should not be allowed to go on and finish it and get pay without summoning any extra men to do that work.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will permit me, the postmaster now calls on the substitute to do this additional work. That is the way it is conducted now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Kansas has expired. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I shall oppose by my vote the motion made by the Senator from Kansas for this reason: The first paragraph of section 5 provides for the 8 hours out of 10. Gen. Grandfield, First Assistant Postmaster General, was at the committee hearing when we had this subject under discussion. The Post Office Department itself, I think, were unanimously opposed to the adoption of the whole of section 5 and proposed a substitute for that which the committee did not see fit to adopt, but a majority of the committee approved of section 5 as in the House bill.

Yet Gen. Grandfield says that if the 8 hours out of 10 provision were included in the first paragraph of section 5, and was enacted, it would be better to have the second paragraph stay in the bill from a standpoint of service to the community.

He could not give the estimate as to what the cost to the Government would be by cutting out the second paragraph, but he did give the estimate as to what the additional cost would be to the Government by the adoption of the whole of section 5, namely, that $3,087,538 greater appropriation would have to be put in the bill than was put in the bill by the House. He thought that probably with the elimination—and the Senator from Kansas will correct me if I am wrong in my memory of the statement—of the second paragraph, which the Senator has just asked to have stricken out, we might save the Government some money, but that in his judgment it would interfere with the efficiency of the service, and he preferred if the first paragraph of section 5 was put in the bill, that the second paragraph should remain in, as making the provision more administrative.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? If these emergencies arise they have to have some one to do the work?

Mr. BOURNE. That is true.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Do you not think that those who are skilled employees could do the work quicker and better than substitutes?

Mr. BOURNE. I do.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Therefore it would, in the end, cost the Government less money. I do not think there can be any doubt that it would be economical to the Government to adopt the provision in the second paragraph of section 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment passed over will now be considered.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 16, after the word "pay" at the end of the line, insert "and for payment of services in excess of eight hours."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOURNE. On page 4, line 3, I should like to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 3, strike out the words "in the," before the words "District of Alaska," and insert in lieu thereof "in connection with the Postal Service of the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment is, on page 17, line 16——

Mr. POMERENE. The amendment proposed by the committee of the Senate, on page 12, lines 17, 18, 20, and 23, I asked to have passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those amendments were all agreed to, the Chair will suggest.

Mr. BOURNE. They were all agreed to yesterday.

Mr. POMERENE. That must have occurred while I was engaged before the Judiciary Committee. Can I have the privilege of raising the question in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will have that privilege.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, line 16, after the word "pay," at the end of the line, insert "and for payment of services in excess of eight hours."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 18, line 3, after the words "letter carriers," to insert "and for services in excess of eight hours."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the consideration of the bill, so far as the committee amendments are concerned. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I send to the Secretary's desk an amendment which I propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Arizona that this is an amendment to an amendment already agreed to as in Committee of the Whole and will not be in order until the bill goes to the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, which I suggest should come in on page 21, line 20.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 20, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the employees of the mail-bag repair shop in Washington, D. C., and Chicago, Ill., and the employees of the mail-lock repair shop in Washington, D. C., may be allowed 30 days' annual leave of absence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is upon concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to reserve some amendments. I desire to reserve, on page 21, an amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole and to offer as a substitute for that an amendment which was printed August 10.

I also desire to reserve the question on the rate to which I referred in the parcel-post debate, applicable to the 50 and 150 mile distances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be reserved.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to reserve the amendment on page 43, which was agreed to, providing for the delivery of mail on rural routes by contract.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to reserve the amendments relating to overtime, which I have just discussed. I want a roll call on those amendments.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has reserved the amendment in connection with the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole for letting the rural delivery routes under contract?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has.

Mr. SWANSON. That is an amendment which I also desire to have reserved.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to reserve the right to offer certain amendments referred to on pages 12 to 17, and also certain amendments to the parcel-post provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That provision is already reserved, and the other amendments to which the Senator refers will also be reserved.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to reserve the third paragraph of the Senate committee amendment on page 55.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I see the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is here. As to the provision of the bill for the improvement of public roads, I see no occasion for having another roll call of the Senate on it, as we had one as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from North Carolina, however, desires to offer an amendment to the provision as passed by the Senate. I will reserve that amendment to give the Senator from North Carolina an opportunity to offer his amendment to the amendment substituted by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reserved.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in addition to that reservation I want to reserve the right to move to strike out the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee providing for letting the contracts for carrying mail on the rural routes to the lowest bidder.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has already been reserved.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was not in the Chamber when it was reserved.

Mr. BOURNE. I send to the desk, and should like to have adopted, an amendment to correct a clerical error in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the word "twelve" and to substitute in lieu thereof the word "eleven," so as to read "provisions of the act of March 4, 1911."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to; and, without objection, the amendments other than those reserved, which were agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, will be concurred in in the Senate. The first reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment, reserved by Mr. BRISTOW, is on page 12, line 16, after the word "pay," where the committee reported to insert "and for payment of services in excess of eight hours"; also on pages 17 and 18 the amendments in which the same words occur.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the question will be taken jointly on the three amendments.

Mr. BRISTOW. I move to strike out the second paragraph of section 5 of the bill. If that is stricken out, then, of course, there will be no objection to striking out the other portions I have referred to. If it is in order, I move to strike out, on page 47, lines 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, and I ask for the yeas and nays on that proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The language of the bill in that regard will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 47 it is proposed to strike out all of lines 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, which read as follows:

That in cases of emergency, or if the needs of the service require, letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks in first and second class post offices can be required to work in excess of eight hours a day, and for such additional services they shall be paid extra in proportion to their salaries as fixed by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, before the calling of the roll I should like to reiterate that I shall vote against the proposition of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] to strike out the second paragraph, because, as I previously stated, I believe that it will militate against the efficiency of the service if the first paragraph in section 5 be left in and the second paragraph stricken out. I repeat, therefore, that I shall vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BRIGGS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BRYAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER], who is necessarily absent on business of the Senate, and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As he is not in the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). On account of the absence of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER], with whom I have a general pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], which I transfer to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr GAMBLE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent. As has been stated, he is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). On account of the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], with whom I am paired, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the pair of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]; the pair of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]; the pair of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; and the pair of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], but I am informed that, were he present, the Senator from Mississippi would vote the same way as I purpose to vote. So I will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bristow	Dillingham	Newlands	Shively

So Mr. BRISTOW's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Florida withhold his amendment until the reserved amendments are acted upon?

Mr. BRYAN. This applies to the provision now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 47, lines 20 and 21, it is proposed to strike out the words "paid extra in proportion to their salaries as fixed by law," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "allowed compensatory time on one of the six days, Sunday excepted, following the day on which they perform such service."

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it will be observed that in the paragraph immediately following provision is made for overtime work of employees on Sunday. Instead of allowing pay for overtime, the provision as to those employees is that they shall be given during the following week time to compensate for the overtime on Sunday. The amendment I offer would have the same effect as applied to overtime on a week day.

Mr. President, as stated by the Senator from Kansas, the principle of the eight-hour law is for the benefit of both the employer and the employee to keep the employee from working more than eight hours a day. If that be the object, certainly it is very poorly accomplished by this provision as it now stands, because you provide that if he works more than eight hours he shall be paid more money. Clerical work is different from manual labor. No business man would submit for one moment that his stenographer, who works less than eight hours on one day because business happened to be slack, should be paid the day's salary and if there was a little more business than usual the next day and that man had to stay half an hour or an hour longer that he should then be paid in proportion to his day's salary for the extra hour's work. That is this provision. At least one of the men who appeared before the committee stated that it was not the object of the men he represented to receive extra compensation. Their object was to secure 8 hours' work within 10 hours. The Senator from South Carolina says that the provision would be ineffective unless there was some penalty. Very well; if the employees do not want more pay, but want to be assured that they shall not be compelled to work beyond eight hours, a provision to protect them to the effect that if they are compelled to work beyond eight hours, because of the necessity of the service, because of the lateness of the mails at any particular day, that shall be made up to them within six days, will accommodate them, and the Government will be saved, I think, an enormous amount of claims that will come in for overtime work.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, as was stated by the Senator from Florida, all men engaged in commercial affairs know that frequently their clerical force for a day or two work over hours, and then the effort soon thereafter is made to compensate them by giving them some leisure to take the place of it. If we are going to build up the Post Office Department and enable it to do for the people of this country what we hope it may do; if we are going to build up in the Post Office Department a proper rural-route service and a parcel-post service, we must regard business principles when it comes to the expenses of conducting that department. If we will not regard them, then we ought to abandon any idea of the Post Office Department doing anything but carrying letters. If we can not apply to the methods of the department the principles that would be employed in a bank or in any mercantile house and give the employees leisure within six days, instead of paying extra compensation every time they work an hour over eight hours, we can not conduct the business in an economical manner so as to justify any enlargement of it.

I shall support the proposed amendment of the Senator from Florida because it gives us a chance through this department to serve the people who are not in office. We have somebody else to consider besides the men who hold the offices. We have the great body of the people throughout the country to consider, and if we are going to make the Post Office Department and the other departments serve the people out of office, we must have some regard to expense and fairness, and if the employees work a little more than eight hours on one day and you give them the time back within six days, then it is everything that would be asked anywhere else, and it ought to satisfy them here.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I shall vote for the suggested amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the question of overtime and the payment for overtime does not have particular reference to the time when there would be a rush of business, namely, the holidays? Under this provision you propose to give compensatory time to the individual within six days; you propose by law to make it obligatory upon the Post Office Department to give these men a compensatory time for overtime. Suppose a man should work overtime one hour on Monday, and the very next week there was an extraordinary rush and he could only work seven hours, then a substitute would have to be found for that one hour. You compensate him for his time. He takes that hour out and the service suffers by the loss. So that my idea is to pay the employees for their time and allow no compensatory time, but let the department pay for the service, because we must pay for it in the long run, anyway.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, the viewpoint which the Senator from South Carolina has just presented is well worthy of careful consideration, and, as at present advised, I shall vote for the Senator's amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say that I shall support the amendment of the Senator from Florida, because I think it meets better than the amendment that is suggested the condition that confronts the department. Monday is a very heavy day in the Post Office, because there is an accumulation of mail, and it may be necessary in handling the business for the clerks or carriers to work more than eight hours. But if they do they are entitled to that overtime, whatever it is. Sometimes during the week or on Saturday there might be a light day, and they could have time off on Saturday if they desired. So the service will be adjusted. It will not be too rigid and it will be economical and certainly satisfactory to the employees. It could not be otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reserved amendments will be stated in their order.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 16, after the word "pay," insert "and for payment of services in excess of eight hours."

Mr. BRISTOW. That amendment is unnecessary now, the Senate having adopted the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was nonconcurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On pages 17 and 18 words of the same character are inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendments will be nonconcurred in. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next reserved amendment is on page 12, relative to the transfer of clerks and carriers from one grade to a higher grade.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] reserved.

Mr. POMERENE. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment of the committee agreed to was, in line 18, to strike out "seventy-five" and in lieu insert "fifty," and in line 20, to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," on page 12. It is now proposed to restore the original words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio need not offer an amendment. The question will be taken affirmatively upon inserting "fifty," and if that is voted down it restores the original text.

Mr. POMERENE. That is before the Senate now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is before the Senate now.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the amendment be nonconcurred in for this reason: It provides for the promotion of 50 per cent of the employees from one grade to another who may be entitled thereto by reason of efficiency. The House provision provided for the promotion of 75 per cent of those who might be entitled thereto by reason of efficiency. Many injustices, I am advised, are perpetrated because of the fact that employees who may be equally entitled to this promotion will not always secure it. If, for instance, there were three who were entitled to promotion under the provision of the bill, only one of them could be promoted and the other two could not be. It seems to me that it gives an opportunity for a show of favoritism to the employee. I do not mean to say that favoritism is shown, but it seems to me that where two men are entitled to promotion, their record for efficiency being the same, they ought to be treated alike.

For this reason it seems to me if we would increase the percentage of those who might be promoted it would serve to bring about good feeling in these offices. For that reason I ask for the approval of the House provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole reducing the per cent from 75 to 50.

Mr. BOURNE. I thought the Senator from Ohio sent an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not necessary. The vote will be taken affirmatively.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope the chairman will explain to the Senate that the bill as reported to the Senate contains an increase of higher-class clerks in another part under a plan recommended by the department, and with that change in the classification of clerks it was the opinion of the department that this 50 per cent was better than the 75 per cent provided for by the House. There is an increase of grading of the clerks that really gives them as much promotion.

Mr. LODGE. Let me ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat. In one word, it distributes the promotions more equitably, does it not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was the plan of the department.

Mr. BOURNE. It holds out to the employee an opportunity by reason of demonstrated efficiency, and is strongly recommended by the department and recommended by the committee.

Mr. BRISTOW. To illustrate, the bill increases the number of clerks who receive, we will say, $1,500 a year. If there are a hundred additional clerks, I do not remember the exact number allowed, at a salary of $1,400, we will say, then the clerks who are now getting $1,300 will be promoted into the 100 additional places, leaving 100 vacancies in the $1,300 grade, and then 100 $1,200 clerks will go up, and then 100 $1,100 clerks will go up, and so on. So very many more promotions will be made under the system recommended by the Senate committee than under the bill as it came from the House. The Senate committee has liberalized these promotions and provided for the promotion of a great many more people than the House did, and it does it in a better way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, reducing the number from 75 per cent to 50 per cent.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MYERS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] was adopted a few minutes ago. The yeas and nays had been called for, and it was supposed by some Senators that they were ordered. The vote was taken when Senators were talking, and I do not think half a dozen Senators voted on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator withhold his motion until the other reserved amendments are acted on?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] also reserved three amendments, on page 17, which relate to the transfer of letter carriers from one grade to another and the total amount to be paid.

Line 18, page 17, "for the promotion of 75 per cent of the letter carriers."

The committee amendment struck out "75" and inserted "50," and, in line 20, it struck out "75" and inserted "50."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. BOURNE. The same argument and line of reasoning applies to this as to the previous amendment which the Senator from Ohio reserved.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] reserved an amendment relative to inland transportation by railroad routes to which he offers a substitute, to read as follows:

Provided, That publications admitted to the mails as second-class matter, published biweekly or less frequently, may be carried wholly or partly in fast freight trains, whenever deemed practicable by the Postmaster General, and at the option of the publishers thereof, and the transportation charges therefor may be paid out of the appropriation for transportation by railroad routes at rates not exceeding the usual freight rates; and on and after January 1, 1913, the rate of postage on such second-class mail matter as may be transported wholly or partly in fast freight trains shall be 1 cent for each pound or fraction of a pound, and the rate of postage on other second-class mail matter, published biweekly or less frequently, transported in the regular mail trains at the option of the publishers thereof, and where the transportation of the same wholly or partly in fast freight trains is deemed practicable by the Postmaster General, shall be 2 cents for each pound or fraction of a pound: Provided further, That the Postmaster General is authorized to weigh, whenever practicable, the mails diverted from the freight trains to the regular mail trains and from the regular mail trains to the freight trains for a period of not less than 30 successive working days, and ascertain the average daily weight thereof and readjust the compensation for the transportation of the mails on the railroad mail routes affected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Post Office Department undertook to provide a plan for the transportation of periodicals by fast freight. It undertook to classify them as between those that carried news and those that did not. I do not sustain the classification the Post Office Department made. It caused a good deal of friction. It was an effort, however, by the Post Office Department to save the Government some of the great loss that comes from carrying second-class mail at a cent a pound when it costs the Government several cents a pound to carry it.

The Senate committee, to rectify the wrong, abolished all transportation by fast freight and carries it all back into the mail service. It appeared that the Government was about to save through this fast freight something over $2,000,000 a year in the administration of the Post Office Department. To put it back now, with all the fast mail requiring a weekly reweighing, which costs $750,000 more, and abolishing the blue-tag system, costs the Government annually two million and a half dollars, and it would cost in addition $750,000 more.

Now, for remailing. The suggestion of this amendment is that periodicals published not more frequently than every two weeks can have their option to be sent by fast freight or to go by mail, as they see fit. If they elect to go by fast freight they will travel at a cent a pound, the present rate. If they elect to go by mail they will pay 2 cents a pound, which is still less than half of what it costs the Government to carry them by fast mail.

I desire now to send to the desk the report of the Post Office Department upon this amendment. I am not very hopeful of its adoption. I have received telegrams since I offered it and published it in the RECORD from men whom I esteem very highly urging me to abandon it; from friends of mine who own periodicals, who protest that it is wrong, who protest that they ought to have a full hearing before it is adopted. I repeat what I have heard from them in substance, because I would not conceal that in any sense from the Senate, but I think their position is unreasonable. I think if we leave them the privilege of the fast mail at about one-third of what the transportation of the fast mail costs they ought not to complain. I dislike to see this effort of the department to save over $2,000,000 a year just thrown aside. I am willing myself to stand up, even if I am alone, to commend an effort of economy by the department, though I do not think the department practices it in a very wise way.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to have the paper read?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want the letter from the Post Office Department read; it is only 2 pages.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What would be the effect in cost to the Government if that portion of the Senator's amendment which allows the periodicals to be shipped by freight were retained and no increase made in the rate of periodicals shipped by fast express?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They would all go by mail then. If you offer them two routes at the same price they would take the best route. You have got to discriminate in price because they would take the cheaper route. I am advised there are very few who are still protesting against the cheap route.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood the proposition was that the department classify the papers and require some of them to go by freight.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am satisfied that each of the departments would arbitrarily classify them. Paying the same amount of money they ought to be entitled to the same service if they want it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired, but if there is no objection, the letter sent to the desk will be read. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 9, 1912.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of the draft of the amendment you propose to offer to the pending appropriation bill for the service of the Post Office Department with respect to the transportation of certain second-class periodical publications in fast freight trains, which you handed to the Second Assistant Postmaster General, with request for an expression of the department's opinion thereon.

The amendment in question reads as follows:

"Provided, That publications admitted to the mails as second-class matter, published biweekly or less frequently, may be carried wholly or partly in fast freight trains, whenever deemed practicable by the Postmaster General, and at the option of the publishers thereof, and the transportation charges therefor may be paid out of the appropriation for transportation by railroad routes at rates not exceeding the usual freight rates; and on and after January 1, 1913, the rate of postage on such second-class mail matter as may be transported wholly or partly in fast freight trains shall be 1 cent for each pound or fraction of a pound, and the rate of postage on other second-class mail matter, published biweekly or less frequently, transported in the regular mail trains at the option of the publishers thereof and when the transportation of the same wholly or partly in fast freight trains is deemed practicable by the Postmaster General, shall be 2 cents for each pound or fraction of a pound: Provided further, That the Postmaster General is authorized to weigh, whenever practicable, the mails diverted from the freight trains to the regular mail trains and from the regular mail trains to the freight trains for a period of not less than 30 successive working days, and ascertain the average daily weight thereof, and readjust the compensation for the transportation of the mails on the railroad mail routes affected."

In the opinion of the officers of the department, this provision is entirely practicable. It provides for the transportation of periodicals published biweekly or less frequently in fast freight trains when deemed practicable by the Postmaster General, but leaves it to the option of the publisher whether he will elect to have the publication transported in that manner or in the regular mail trains. If transported in fast freight trains the rate of postage is to be 1 cent a pound or fraction of a pound. If it is practicable to transport such publication in fast freight trains and the publisher elects to have his periodical transported in regular mail trains, the rate of postage is to be 2 cents a pound or fraction of a pound. The provision authorizing payment for transportation at the regular freight rates will obviate the complicated method of adjusting pay now necessarily followed for these particular shipments. Furthermore, the provision authorizing the Postmaster General to weigh the diverted mails whenever practicable will enable him to restore to the regular mail trains periodicals which have been carried in freight trains without the necessity of reweighing all the mails on the routes affected. It will also enable him to make changes from freight to regular mail and from regular mail to freight trains as the preference of the publisher may be made known.

If this amendment becomes law it is believed that but few publishers whose periodicals are now transported in fast freight trains will elect to have them carried in the regular mail trains and pay the higher rate of postage. It is impracticable to estimate the probable weight of the publications which would be restored to the regular mail trains under these circumstances. It is believed, however, that $100,000 would cover the additional cost of transportation and weighings of the periodicals restored, and therefore that with the enactment of this provision the item for inland transportation by railroad routes as reported by the Senate committee could be reduced $2,290,000, and that the item for railway post office car service as reported by the Senate committee could be reduced $204,000. The respective amounts added by the Senate committee were intended to make provision for the cost of the restoration of the second-class matter in question to the regular mail trains. Furthermore, it should not be overlooked that should the amendment be adopted the substantial saving made by the department will be continued in the future.

Yours, very truly,

FRANK H. HITCHCOCK,
Postmaster General.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the Secretary to read the accompanying memorandum.

The Secretary read as follows:

AUGUST 10, 1912.

Memorandum of items of saving that will be effected by this provision under the amounts stated in the bill.

For additional cost of transportation of blue-tag matter (difference between cost at freight rates and cost at regular mail rates), additional cost for one year's increase in mails which must be paid if a reweighing is had, and the cost of reweighing the mails in the second and third contract sections	$2,390,000
Less (for necessary reweighings and cost of possible diverted mails under the provision suggested)	100,000
	2,290,000
Cost of additional car space	204,000
Total saving	2,494,000

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has expressed the object of the amendment, in my judgment, very clearly and very tersely. As a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I was in favor of the amendment at the time it was considered there, and for one I should like to see the amendment adopted now, for I regard it as an amendment of great advantage to the Post Office Department.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia what specific publications the amendment applies to; that is, whether weekly or biweekly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Biweekly.

Mr. JONES. Why does it not apply to the weekly publications?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They do not any of them go by fast-mail freight now. There is no system of fast freight that can handle the weekly papers, unless with very few exceptions, I understand.

Mr. JONES. Why not give those exceptions the opportunity, anyhow?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Because we have left all the weekly papers at 1 cent a pound.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not prevail, because I can not see why the Outlook should have the privileges of the mail at 1 cent a pound and the Review of Reviews be charged 2 cents a pound simply because the Outlook is printed once a week and the Review of Reviews once a month. They are publications of the same general character. It is manifestly, to my mind, unjust to penalize a publication because it is published every two weeks instead of every week.

Why should Collier's Weekly be given the mail privileges at 1 cent a pound and the Review of Reviews or some similar publication that is not printed every week or every two weeks be charged 2 cents a pound? If we are going to increase the rate on second-class mail it should apply the same to all publications. You can not make an equitable segregation, in my judgment. The Post Office Department has tried it and utterly failed. They tried to make the segregation from the standpoint of the news, declaring that a publication that had current news should go in the fast mail trains, and if it did not contain what was called current news it could go in the freight trains; and the opinion of each individual as to what was news varies in just the proportion as to the number of individuals. So the blue tag has become one of the odious things to the postal history of the United States.

In my judgment the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia would be just as impracticable. If we are going to raise the rate on second-class matter let us take hold of it and raise it on all—on the weekly, the daily, and the monthly publications all alike.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. It was shown in the hearings that a great many of the periodicals were, in fact, under the blue-tag system. This was not mentioned by the Senator from Kansas.

In regard to the discrimination, if the periodicals wish to have their editions published weekly they will have the privilege. Therefore they would be under no disadvantage.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if he can name a single publisher who is in favor of the blue-tag system. If so, I should like to have it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I refer the Senator from Kansas to the hearings which are published.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRIGGS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. I therefore withhold my vote. I will let that announcement stand for the balance of the day.

Mr. BRYAN (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] and vote. I will let this announcement stand for the afternoon. I vote "nay."

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. He is not in the Chamber, and I will withhold my vote.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). On account of the absence of my pair I am obliged to withhold my vote.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. During his absence, not knowing what his vote would be, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] and withhold my vote on account of his absence. I will not repeat this announcement, but will let it stand for any other votes to-day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and vote "yea."

Mr. LIPPITT. I again announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]. I will let that announcement stand for the day. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHIVELY. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. KERN] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I wish this announcement to stand for the rest of the day.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—29.

Bacon	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Smith, Md.

So the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment reserved is on page 37—the good roads amendment—reserved by Mr. SWANSON.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that amendment was reserved by the Senator from Virginia for me. I send to the Secretary's desk an amendment which I propose to come in after line 9, on page 40. This amendment, I desire to state, was prepared by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $1,000,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in cooperation with the Postmaster General in improving the conditions of roads to be selected by them over which rural delivery is or may hereafter be established, such improvement to be for the purpose of ascertaining the increase in the territory which could be served by each carrier as a result of such improvement, the possible increase of the number of delivery days in each year, the amount required in excess of local expenditures for the proper maintenance of such roads, and the relative saving to the Government in the operation of the Rural Delivery Service, and to the local inhabitants in the transportation of their products by reason of such improvement: Provided, That the State, or the local subdivision thereof in which such improvement is made under this provision, shall furnish an equal amount of money for the improvement of the road or roads so selected. Such improvement shall be made under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General are hereby directed to report to Congress within one year after the ratification of this act the result of their operations under this act, the number of miles of road improved, the cost of same, and such other information as they may have acquired in connection with the operation of this act, together with such recommendations as shall seem wise for providing a general plan of national aid for the improvement of postal roads in cooperation with the States and counties, and to bring about as near as possible such cooperation among the various States as will insure uniform and equitable interstate highway regulations.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senate that this is not offered as a substitute for the Senate amendment adopted on yesterday providing for the appointment of a joint committee to make inquiry into the subject of Federal aid in the construction of highways, but it is proposed as a supplemental proposition. The information which the Congress will secure through the amendment adopted on yesterday will be only such as the members of that commission, which is to be composed of Members of the House and of the Senate, will be able to gather after an examination of the highways of the country and such information as they can pick up. The amendment which I propose is for the purpose of obtaining practical experimental information, to be gathered by the Department of Agriculture and the Post Office Department, in the work of actually constructing highways here and there throughout the country in cooperation with the local communities.

Of course, it is intended that the Government officials will make their selections in various sections of the country where conditions are different. For instance, in my own State there is a great variety of conditions which affect the subject of road construction. In the mountainous country there is one condition which entails many difficulties in connection with road construction; in the Piedmont section there is another condition; and in the coastal section there is still a different condition. In order to obtain experimental knowledge it is necessary that they should construct some roadways in all three of these sections of that State.

There are different physical conditions in the West from those existing in the South with reference to this matter, and different physical conditions in the East from those which exist in the West. Therefore the amendment which I have offered authorizes them to experiment here and there in the different portions of the country so as to bring out the difficulties with reference to road construction, for the purpose of obtaining experimental information, first, as to the cost of construction; then as to the best methods for the application of Government aid; and for the further purpose of ascertaining what is the best process for cooperation between the Government and different localities concerned. Then, Mr. President, the amendment further provides that after this small sum of money—a million dollars—has been expended in this experimental way and this information is obtained, these two departments shall report to Congress, giving us the benefit of all the information they have obtained in connection with these experiments, and with the further requirement that they shall report a comprehensive plan for Government cooperation with the States, counties, and other communities in the work of improving the postal highways.

Mr. President, one further observation and I will have concluded: The Government in recent years, in undertaking any great work of national importance in connection with the functions of the Government——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say that I trust the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] may be able to finish the explanation which I was making. He can speak in his own time, and I have no doubt is ready to do so.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. The Senate yesterday by a decisive vote struck out the provision in the House bill known as the Shackleford bill and adopted a substitute, creating a joint commission for a study of this question and providing for a report to Congress at the earliest possible date. It seems to me that the amendment just offered by the Senator from North Carolina is unnecessarily premature; that no good would result commensurate with the amount of money that would be expended, and that, if it were adopted, there would be no necessity for the adoption of the committee amendment providing for the creation of a joint committee to make a study of this question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has a right to interrupt the Senator from Oregon in his own time.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has taken his seat, and I will not interrupt him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next reserved amendment is at the top of page 43, the proviso that was inserted at that point yesterday relative to the Rural Delivery Service, reserved by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Two amendments were inserted at this point, one on motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. CURTIS. I reserved the one offered by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, the following amendment was inserted on motion of Mr. BOURNE:

Provided further, That after the taking effect of this act the Postmaster General shall establish and promulgate rules and regulations for the letting of contracts for the carrying of mails on rural routes as near as may be upon the same plan of advertisement and contract now provided by law for the star-route service, no contract to provide a compensation in excess of $1,200 per annum.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be concurred in. It is surely a step backward. Any person who has had any experience with the system under which contracts are let for the carrying of the mails on star routes knows that the service provided is very poor. The present rural service is not what it should be, simply because the carriers have not had sufficient pay; but to return to the contract service would mean to give to the people poor service. I hope the amendment will not be concurred in.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, this is a renewal of the old fight we had at the beginning of the Rural Delivery Service. An effort was made at that time to provide for a contract service. There is a vast difference between a rural-delivery carrier and a star-route carrier. A star-route carrier, unless on request of the patrons, carries the mail in a sealed pouch, but the rural-delivery carrier is like a carrier in a city. He has personal control of the mail; he is intrusted with it; and if he is not a man of character, a man of standing, and a worthy man, no one wants him to handle his mail individually. If you make this a contract service it will simply result in destroying the present character of it. I have no doubt you could get the work done for less money, but who is going to pass on the character of the man who is merely the lowest bidder and, therefore, secures the contract?

It will certainly be impossible under such a system to secure the character of men in the Rural Delivery Service whom you desire to handle your mail; and I hope the Senate will refuse to concur in the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to inquire if the debate is proceeding on an amendment offered in the Senate or is it proceeding on an amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole. The question now is, Shall it be concurred in in the Senate?

Mr. BAILEY. I submit that that is not debatable.

Mr. SWANSON. It is debatable for five minutes.

Mr. BAILEY. It is not, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The unanimous-consent agreement allows five minutes' debate.

Mr. BAILEY. It is five minutes on an amendment offered, but not one minute on an amendment that comes over after having been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. That is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no objection to the discussion, but I merely thought it was not exactly right to have two Senators opposed to an amendment occupy the time, when really, under the rule, the question is not debatable at all.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am through anyway; but, if necessary, I should move to amend by striking out the last word and get five minutes more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon concurring in the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We really did not consider that amendment as in Committee of the Whole, and we can not afford to put it in the bill.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, we voted yesterday to fix the rate of compensation of rural carriers at from $600 to $1,200 per year. Now, this is wholly inconsistent with the provision which we adopted after considerable debate. The amount which we provided in the bill by our amendment was thought to be reasonable and just to all alike.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have never known a unanimous-consent agreement to be violated. I make the point of order that this matter is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order, according to the strict interpretation of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I should like to be heard upon the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can now be heard.

Mr. MCCUMBER. It is rather useless to be heard after the Chair has announced what his ruling would be, but I submit, Mr. President, the unanimous-consent agreement allowed five minutes' debate on all amendments offered, and the amendment under discussion was offered to this bill.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment was agreed to yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota is in error. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was not concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next reserved amendment is the one reserved by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the third paragraph on page 55, relative to the competitive civil-service examination for clerks in post offices transferred to the Railway Mail Service.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I shall not insist upon a yea-and-nay vote on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next reserved amendment is that reserved by Mr. SMITH of Georgia, relative to the parcel-post provision, section 8 of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to inquire if the question is on an amendment that has been adopted as in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. LODGE. Then, I submit that it is not debatable.

Mr. BAILEY. I understood the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] sent to the desk an amendment to that section some time ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, have we finished the consideration of the committee amendments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We have not as yet. The Senate is now considering one.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is an amendment to the committee amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does any Senator desire to offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have stated that I would offer an amendment to the amendment, and I offer it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, at the appropriate time, under the rule, I desire to offer an amendment to section 8 which would be in the nature of perfecting that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appropriate time will be after the Senator from Georgia has offered his amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move to amend the amendment, in line 7, page 61, by striking out the word "three," before the word "cents," and inserting the word "two."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, in the committee amendment, line 7, before the word "cents," it is proposed to strike out "three" and in lieu thereof to insert "two," so as to read:

For delivery within the first zone, except as provided in the next preceding paragraph, 5 cents for the first pound or fraction of a pound and 2 cents for each additional pound or fraction of a pound.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words after the Senator from Georgia has explained his amendment, if he desires to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the effect of this amendment is for a 50-mile distance to make the increased cost for each additional pound 2 cents instead of 3 cents. The amendment of the Senate committee charges 5 cents for the first pound and 3 cents for each additional pound. My proposed amendment makes the charge 2 cents for each additional pound. I am satisfied 2 cents will cover the cost to the Government. Two cents for each additional pound was the amount in the original Bourne bill. I think the short distance is the most important one to the majority of the people, and this will clearly cover the cost and save the criticism that has been made about the rates proposed exceeding the express rates.

Mr. LODGE. If I may ask him the question, does the Senator propose to follow up this amendment by reducing the rates throughout the zones?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I propose to make it apply to the first and second zones.

Mr. LODGE. I mean does the Senator mean to amend further so as to reduce the rate in all the other zones?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will move to amend in the second zone also—just those two zones.

Mr. LODGE. But not beyond the second?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not beyond the second. Just those two short zones, because it is in those two short zones that we seem to have exceeded the express rate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I had intended to occupy some time in opposition to this general scheme of a parcel post, but it so happened that members of the committee desired to address the Senate and I did not think it gracious to interfere with them. I must, therefore, content myself with a mere statement of the fact that I am opposed to the entire proposition, because it marks another wide departure from what I consider the fundamental principles of good government. It abolishes the distinction long recognized between mail matter and merchandise and reduces the United States to a common carrier for hire. Not only is it to be a common carrier over the railways of the country, but it is to become a drayman in the towns and cities throughout the United States.

When the Constitution authorized the Congress of the United States to establish post offices and post roads the meaning of those terms was well understood, and carrying the mails had long been accepted as a governmental function; but now, sir, we are asked to extend that service until the mail carriers of the United States will be delivering at the homes of our people hams, eggs, lard, salt, and molasses. But, sir, while this amendment makes the General Government a common carrier to only a limited extent, it is but the beginning, and we shall see it extended in the years to come. Just as the small packages now carried in our mails have been used as an argument to justify the transmission of these larger parcels, so these larger parcels will be advanced as an argument in favor of still larger ones. It will prevail, for when you abandon the distinction between mail and freight and consent to make the Government of the United States a common carrier, then the whole question henceforth resolves itself into a mere matter of detail. There is no principle which can deny the Government the right to carry the farmer's cotton to the manufacturer while asserting its right and duty to carry the manufacturer's cotton goods to the farmer.

I can not bring myself to believe that it is the office of the Government to serve the people in this capacity. I can not yield to the entreaty heard on every side that we shall render this service to the people. Sir, I believe in the old doctrine under which people rendered a certain service, and only a certain service, to the Government; and under which the Government rendered a certain service, and only a certain service, to the people. I agree that it is the duty of the Government to secure the people in their sacred and inalienable rights of life and liberty, and that it is the further duty of the Government to secure the people in their rights of property, but when that has been accomplished, then all government beyond it becomes an interference with the growth and development of the individual citizen.

I grant you that the Government can serve the people until they will come to depend upon its service; I grant you that the Government can do for the people what they ought to do for themselves until they will look to the Government instead of to themselves for what they want; but under no system like that will we ever rear a race of men and women like those who have made this country an example and an inspiration to all the world. The Government can go on serving the people until the people forget how to serve themselves. That may make life easy, but it will not make a nation great. Sir, it is the struggle of men to serve themselves that alone can make them fit to maintain a free government; and a people who day after day and year after year look to their government for assistance finally so enervate themselves, so enfeeble their character, so waste their strength, that the government under which they live can not expect them to save it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I desire to consume five minutes in reply to the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. Ben Jonson once said that Lord Bacon's speeches were nobly censorious. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is nobly censorious when he speaks, but great as is his ability, he has regarding this question proceeded upon an erroneous hypothesis.

The Senator from Texas would have the Senate and the country believe that the liberties of the American people are endangered the moment the Government begins to deliver, through the mail, packages of over 11 pounds in weight.

I once read a boy's essay entitled, "What is our Government?" In his essay the boy said:

Our Government is a sovereignty which can dig canals but can not build railroads; a sovereignty which can build warships but not peace ships; a sovereignty which can build navy yards but not stockyards; a sovereignty which can deliver mail matter but not express matter.

The Senator may regard it as somewhat presumptive on my part to differ from him, but as an eminent private citizen once said, "The humblest person when clad in the armor of a righteous cause is greater than all the hosts of error which ablest man can bring."

When the Pacific railroads were built, they were granted subsidies of various kinds by Congress. Congress was extremely liberal in aiding in the construction of these railroads and granted to them every alternate section of public land 40 miles on either side of their lines of definite location. The grants were made with the idea in view that the roads would be useful to the Government in transporting troops, munitions of war, and mail, and in the debates that attended these subsidy bills reference was made to the Constitution of the United States, which granted the power to Congress "to establish post offices and post roads." If such a strained construction could be placed upon the Constitution as to enable Congress to grant to the railroad companies vast areas of the people's land, surely the liberties of the American people will not be destroyed nor will the Constitution of the United States in any wise be impaired if the Congress should now, under that same clause of the Constitution which authorizes Congress "to establish post offices and post roads," provide for a delivery to the citizens of the United States of packages, packets, and express matter weighing from 11 to 100 pounds.

I am certain I may justly observe without the extravagance of flattery that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is an eminent constitutional lawyer, and I shall now read for his consideration a short excerpt from a book entitled "Social Reform and the Constitution," written by Dr. Goodnow, professor of administrative law at Columbia University. I read from page 234, as follows:

The United States Government is also authorized by the Constitution to adopt a policy of public ownership as a necessary and proper means for carrying into effect any power conferred upon it by the Constitution. Thus it may construct and probably operate means of transportation like wagon roads and canals. Inasmuch as Congress is the judge as to what are necessary and proper means, it is difficult to find any constitutional objection to a policy of public ownership, provided it is adopted as a means to carry into effect a power granted by the Constitution, such as the power to regulate commerce. Thus, there is no obstacle to be found in the United States Constitution to a policy of government ownership on the part of either the State or the United States Governments. (Indiana v. United States, 148 U. S., 148; Wilson v. Shaw, 204 U. S., 24; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheaton, 316.)

Even if public ownership be unauthorized by the Constitution, and I do not now discuss that, surely, in view of these decisions there can be no doubt as to the power of the Congress to enact a law permitting the delivery of packages and packets, frequently called express matter.

In the case of Ex parte Jackson (96 U. S., 727) the Supreme Court of the United States explicitly held that "the power to establish post offices and post roads * * * since the foundation of our Government has been construed to authorize not merely the routes over which mail shall be carried, but what should be carried and its weight and form."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Arizona has expired.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I regret very much that the Senator from Georgia has offered this amendment. As he knows, the committee has spent weeks and months in working out what we thought was the best possible system. The amendment as reported in the bill, as I understand it, was the unanimous action of the committee. I had not the slightest idea that the Senator from Georgia had changed his mind until he offered the amendment this afternoon.

It is admitted by all that with the present rate after the distance of 2,000 miles is reached the Government in carrying the packages carries them at a loss. In the committee I sought to have the zones increased so that there would be 12 instead of 8 and making the maximum charge 16 cents a pound instead of 12 cents a pound. But the committee refused to consider that favorably, because it was of the opinion that since the rate on foreign parcels between our country and other countries was 12 cents, we should not have any rate for domestic parcels of more than 12 cents. So we have fixed the rates, and on the long distance the packages must be carried at a loss. What the cost is of carrying the packages for the short distances can not be actually ascertained. It must be an estimate and the estimate must be based upon the expenses of the service at the present time or in the past.

Granting that the rate suggested by the Senator from Georgia would maintain the service, which I doubt seriously, the bill, as I said during the afternoon, has added to the expense of the delivery approximately $8,000,000 in a single item. In the postal service we do not increase the expense in proportion to the revenue. The increase of the expenditure of the postal department is largely a matter of political concern. We did not add $8,000,000 to the expenditures for rural delivery, because we could not get carriers for the salary that is now paid, but because the Senate wanted to pay the carriers more than they are now receiving.

Those increases are likely to occur at any time during any session of Congress, and, when these rates are once established, then you will have very great difficulty and impose very great injustice in certain cases if you increase them, because the business becomes adjusted to that rate. By the amendment that was offered by the Senator this afternoon, and which the Senate adopted, the rate on certain second-class publications is raised from 1 cent to 2 cents per pound. You are imposing a very great burden upon certain publications that, in my judgment, will destroy the profits of a number of publications and put out of business a number of publishers of magazines. It becomes then a matter of grave concern. In establishing the new service, why is it necessary to put the rates below what we know are safe and sound? Why do you take the chance of being confronted in the future with a loss in handling packages, as we are to-day, confronted with a loss in handling second-class matter? What is the occasion for it? If we find from experience and practice that the rate is too high, it can be reduced, but it is very difficult to raise a rate. A reduction confers a favor on the man whose business has been established, because it lessens his expense; but an increase imposes an additional expense for which he has not made any preparation.

I sincerely trust that this amendment, which, in my judgment, will launch the Government into an expenditure for the carrying of packages which will ultimately result in a loss, will not be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, one position taken by the Senator from Kansas is absolutely unwarranted by anything in the amendment or by anything in the course of possible argument concerning the amendment. It is the idea that any monthly magazine would be put out of business by the adoption of the amendment. The owners of the magazines have their choice under the amendment to choose whether or not they shall pay a 2-cent rate by mail or pay a cent rate and go by fast freight. So unless the proprietors of the magazines or the men who are authorized by the magazines to look out for the mail matter choose to go by fast freight they can not be forced under the amendment to go by fast freight. I will ask the Senator from Georgia if that is correct or not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amendment the Senator refers to has already been disposed of. The amendment now pending proposes to lessen somewhat the cost of the parcel post on a 50-mile distance. The Senator from Kansas brought the amendment we had already passed into this argument, and I suppose misled the Senator from Mississippi into supposing that that was still the amendment under consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Mississippi humbly confesses that he was entirely misled. It has not been the first time in his life that he was misled by the Senator from Kansas. It was not very long ago when he was misled by him. I thought from the Senator's argument that that was the matter under discussion, and I wanted to express a view of constructive statesmanship concerning it. Now I find that, much to my own humiliation, I have been discussing something in the air, which amounts to nothing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to rise to a matter of personal privilege for just a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Kansas stated that we unanimously agreed to this increase in the committee. That is true, but I do not think because I agreed to it in the committee if I subsequently concluded that it could be improved by a change it would not be proper to suggest a change in the Senate. I did agree to it there, and it was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I find myself in a most embarrassing situation. The rates proposed by the Senator from Georgia are the rates that I had in the bill I prepared and introduced on the 16th of May for the first two zones, with the exception that in my bill the second zone was 200 miles. The zone in the bill now before the Senate is 150 miles.

I attempted, and I think successfully, even at the risk of the charge of egotism, to demonstrate that those rates would be self-supporting upon the basis of the construction of the bill and the best obtainable data bearing upon the problem which in my opinion was worthy of adoption in coming to the conclusion. The committee increased the rates, as has been shown and demonstrated here before the Senate.

I am chairman of the committee. The vote was unanimous, I voting myself for the increased rate on these two zones, and I shall now vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, because I believe that it is my duty as a temporary representative here of the committee to do so. But I do not want to be put in the attitude of stating that I do so because I believe the rates suggested by the Senator from Georgia would incur a loss to the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for the yeas and nays. It is a very important matter.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair, as I have stated, but upon this vote I have been released from my pair. I vote "nay."

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. He is not in the Chamber, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. GRONNA's name was called). For the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], I desire to state that he is unavoidably absent, and that if present he would vote for this amendment.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). On account of my general pair I withhold my vote. I desire this announcement to stand for the balance of the day.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED. I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and the transfer of that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE]. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). As I said before, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent. I do not know how he would vote on this proposition, although as to the general question he is favorable to the so-called parcel-post bill. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is absent. I withhold my vote. Were he present I would vote "nay."

Mr. BRYAN. Under my pair, as transferred, I vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. GARDNER]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Ashurst	Martin, Va.	Pomerene	Smith, S. C.
Bacon	Myers	Reed	Stone
Chilton	Newlands	Shively	Swanson
Johnson, Me.	O'Gorman	Simmons	Williams
La Follette	Overman	Smith, Ariz.
Lippitt	Poindexter	Smith, Ga.

NAYS—33.

Borah	Chamberlain	Kenyon	Root
Bourne	Clapp	Lodge	Sanders
Bradley	Crawford	McLean	Smoot
Brandegee	Cullom	Massey	Townsend
Bristow	Cummins	Nelson	Warren
Bryan	Curtis	Oliver	Works
Burnham	Gallinger	Page
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Penrose
Catron	Jones	Perkins

NOT VOTING—39.

Bailey	Dixon	Heyburn	Richardson
Bankhead	du Pont	Hitchcock	Smith, Md.
Briggs	Fall	Kern	Smith, Mich.
Brown	Fletcher	Lea	Stephenson
Clark, Wyo.	Foster	McCumber	Sutherland
Clarke, Ark.	Gamble	Martine, N. J.	Thornton
Crane	Gardner	Owen	Tillman
Culberson	Gore	Paynter	Watson
Davis	Gronna	Percy	Wetmore
Dillingham	Guggenheim	Rayner

So the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I consider that vote applicable to both amendments, the same principle is involved; and I will not prolong the session further by pressing the other amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. On page 62, after line 18, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, after line 18, at the end of the section insert:

For the purpose of perfecting and extending the facilities of the parcel post hereby provided for, and for the purpose of inquiring into the advisability and propriety of adding thereto an express post, a committee of 10 persons shall be appointed, composed of five Senators, to be named by the President of the Senate, and five Representatives, to be named by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, with full power to appoint clerks, stenographers, and experts to assist them in this work. They shall review the testimony already taken on the subject of parcel post and express post by the Senate and House Committees on Post Offices and Post Roads, and take such other and additional testimony as they may deem desirable.

The Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall furnish data and otherwise render such assistance to the said committee as may be desired or available. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of said committee $25,000 is hereby appropriated out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The committee shall report to the Congress on the first Monday in December, 1912.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if any one thing has been made apparent I do not believe I overstate it when I say that the rates which have been adopted are largely a matter of experiment. There has been a good deal of conflicting evidence in the reports which have been presented by the House and by the Senate committee as to whether we should adopt a parcels post or an express post. This is a new proposition in the United States, considering it from a legislative standpoint. Our citizens are without practical experience upon the subject. The purpose of the amendment is evident. It does seem to me that we ought to have some further investigation of this subject with a view to ascertaining what we shall do with respect to additional legislation upon it. I do not care to occupy the time of the Senate further.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to make a point of order against the amendment, that it is general legislation and not contemplated either in the House provision or in the Senate amendment. It is not embodied in either of them.

Mr. BAILEY. Unless the Chair is ready to rule against the point of order, I would like to be heard a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair prefers to have the matter discussed.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, Mr. President, of course, the Senator from Massachusetts will be entitled to the first word, but as I only wish to say a word, and being on the floor, I will do that now. If we regard the substance and not the mere phraseology, the two propositions are the same, and the proposition of the Senator from Ohio is more logical than the other, because in the one case you mix the mail and the merchandise obviously to the disadvantage of both, while in the case proposed by the Senator from Ohio you perform a service as a common carrier for merchandise, and you will perform it independently of the governmental function of a mail carrier.

Now, the very necessity of the mail service compels a limitation upon the length and upon the bulk of these packages. There can be no logic in saying that the Government may carry my neighbor's mail within the limitation of 11 pounds because it is 71 inches long and shall not carry my mail, no heavier, because it happens to be 73 inches long. The matter of inches is made material only because the length interferes with a totally different service. I have no hesitation in saying that if the Government of the United States has to step down from its high place as a sovereign and become a common carrier for hire I would prefer to see it perform that service in the manner and in the character which insures the best performance of it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. If the point of order is going to lead to debate, I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order. At the same time the Chair feels that courtesy to Senators would require him to hear Senators further upon the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I withdraw my point of order in the somewhat vain hope that we may reach a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks for the yeas and nays. Is the demand seconded? [After a pause.] Not a sufficient number.

Mr. BAILEY. I demand that the other side be counted so that we can see if a fifth of those present have seconded the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those opposed to ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted or raise their hands. [After a pause.] Seven have seconded the demand for the yeas and nays and there are 39 in the negative. The yeas and nays are not ordered. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator an amendment he desires to offer to this provision?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have an amendment I desire to offer to the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, what amendment are we voting on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the parcel-post amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have refrained from taking five minutes' time in the discussion of any of the amendments in order that I might occupy a few moments on the final passage of this proposition.

Mr. President, the platform of each of the great political parties declares unequivocally in favor of a parcel-post system. When both, or all of the great political parties of this country declare for a proposition, and especially if such proposition be new, we can feel sure that the subject so declared will be crystallized into a law. The country stands pledged to-day for a parcel-post system, and a parcel-post system the country will have.

The matter then resolves itself into a question of what kind of a parcel post shall be established. The local merchants in almost every little town in the country view the subject with fear and disfavor. They fear the commission houses of the great cities with their cash system will put them with their credit system out of business. The farming element of the country on the other hand demands greater facilities and a broader field for their purchases.

As a protectionist, as one who believes in building up and sustaining our local interests, I want no law that will work disaster to the country merchants, nor do I want a law that would hamper the opportunities of the farmer. I believe that in this Bourne bill a system has been worked out that will benefit both and harm neither. This bill should provide a rate for carriage that will be equitable and just. It should provide for a rate that will vary according to the length of the haul so that each parcel will carry a charge that will approximately pay the expense of carrying for the particular distance required.

The system adopted gives the rural merchant a great advantage over the city commission house, and especially is this true in those States having no very large cities. If we are to have a parcel post, that should be the case. In this bill the rural merchant can not complain that the charges are not as just and equitable as could be devised.

On the other hand, the farmer who desires to secure his goods from a far-off city is only charged what is presumed to be the actual expense of carrying, and he can hardly ask for more than that. The advantage over the express companies, especially within the first zone of 50 miles, is very great, as will appear from the table which I here present:

	Not over 1 pound.	Not over 2 pounds.	Not over 3 pounds.	Not over 4 pounds.	Not over 5 pounds.	Not over 6 pounds.	Not over 7 pounds.	Not over 8 pounds.	Not over 9 pounds.	Not over 10 pounds.	Not over 11 pounds.
50 miles:
Present express rate from New York	$0.25	$0.25	$0.25	$0.30	$0.30	$0.35	$0.35	$0.35	$0.35	$0.35	$0.35
Proposed express rate from New York	.21	.21	.21	.22	.22	.22	.23	.23	.24	.24	.24
Original Bourne parcel-post bill	.06	.08	.10	.12	.14	.16	.18	.20	.22	.24	.26
Amended Bourne parcel-post bill	.05	.08	.11	.14	.17	.20	.23	.26	.29	.32	.35

I have made two other computations which I have reduced into the form of tables, showing what the express rates will be as proposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and what the parcel-post rates will be. I make these tables a part of my remarks that those in my own State who are desirous of obtaining the information at the present time may understand just what the comparative charges are.

One table shows the comparative rates from St. Paul to Bismarck and the other from Chicago to Bismarck. In both of these tables it will be observed that for any package below 5 pounds there is a decided advantage in favor of the parcel post, even for these long distances, while in the short distances, which take in the rural deliveries, the rates under this parcel-post bill are only a small percentage of the express rates. And it must also be remembered that the rural parcel-delivery service is a service which, up to the present time, does not exist, and that the rural service must be confined exclusively to the postal department, as the express companies can not afford to deliver in the country.

We must also remember that while on parcels above 5 pounds on the long distances the express charges are less than the parcel-post charges, in all of these cases the customer has the right to take the cheaper method of conveyance. On small packages the farmer has an advantage in using the mails on all routes and on all distances, long or short. On large packages his advantage will be best subserved by using the express on the long hauls. On the rural service he has advantages which he can not have and never has had without this bill.

The great advantage to the local merchant under this bill is in his ability to deliver to the country customer at a very small expense, and in this he has a most decided advantage over his competitor, the commission house of the great city.

This is the initial step in the matter of parcel deliveries by the Post Office Department. The law, if enacted, starts out on the right principle, that of basing the charge on the actual service performed and in accordance with the length of the haul. After the law shall be in operation it can be amended as to rates to conform to the just requirements of the service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask, Mr. President, that the two tables to which I have referred may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the tables will be inserted.

The tables referred to are as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the so-called parcel-post amendment. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. BRYAN (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). On this vote I am released by my pair and will vote "yea."

Mr. PAGE (when Mr. DILLINGHAM's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] has been obliged to leave the Chamber. He is paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I make this announcement for the rest of the day.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], who is not in the Chamber. I therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (when Mr. GARDNER's name was called). I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. GARDNER] and his pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). I have consent of my general pair to vote upon this proposition, and therefore will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. As he is absent and I do not know how he would vote, I am compelled to withhold my vote. I ask that this announcement may stand for this and any subsequent vote upon this bill.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan]. I will state that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the transfer of that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DU PONT. My colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON], as already announced, has a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. If my colleague were present and free to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] I again announce his unavoidable absence from the Senate. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN. My colleague [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming] is detained from the Chamber, but is paired, as already stated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], with that Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. The junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] was necessarily obliged to leave. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] are both unavoidably detained. If they were present, they would respectively vote "yea."

Mr. BAILEY. I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON], which I have observed for more than two months. I am so certain that my vote would not make any difference in this matter and I am so anxious to have it recorded that I will disregard, instead of transferring, that pair and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WATSON] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS].

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 2, as follows:

So the amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, line 15, after the amendment adopted inserting the words "Postmaster General," it is proposed to insert:

And no demotion made since October, 1910, without notice of charges and without an opportunity to answer the same, shall be continued longer than October 1, 1912, except upon the procedure herein provided to be had in cases of removal.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, section 6 is intended, as I understand, to put a stop to a practice that prevailed toward the close of the year 1910 and the first part of the year 1911, when the Post Office Department, in attempting to enforce its so-called "slack order," disciplined a number of post-office employees in a manner which is now considered to be unjust, and which the Congress in the future proposes to prevent by law. As I understand, some time after the "slack order" was issued, the President himself issued an order which is very similar in its terms to section 6 of this bill. That order put a stop to further demotions made without an opportunity for the men to present their defense and without an opportunity being given them even to hear the charges made against them. Nevertheless, there were, and are now, some 23 men who are the victims of that unreasonable practice and who are still suffering from the demotions so incurred.

This amendment which I offer is intended to provide that, unless the department reinstates them on the 1st of October next, they shall be given an opportunity to meet the charges, such opportunity having heretofore been denied them. I hope that the amendment, which is designed to correct the injustice to these men who were the victims of a practice that we all now concede is wrong, may be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri was endeavoring to get the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs pardon.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I refrained from voting on that account.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not observe that the Senator from Missouri was endeavoring to get recognition.

Mr. REED. I had risen before the Chair had put the motion, and addressed the Chair to have the amendment again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask that my motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] was adopted be now put before the Senate; and, in order to enlighten the Senate upon the subject to be voted upon, I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 47, lines 20 and 21, an amendment was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole on motion of Mr. BRYAN, to strike out "paid extra in proportion to their salaries as fixed by law" and insert "allowed compensatory time on one of the six days, Sunday excepted, following the day on which they perform such service."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, it seems to me, in all fairness, that the motion to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was adopted ought to carry, because that is an important matter. It was argued as extensively as it could be under the rules that are prevailing to-day. Several Senators spoke for it and several others against it; but when it came to a vote I do not believe six Senators, all told, voted one way or the other. The Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] demanded the yeas and nays, but not in a very loud tone of voice, and I assume, of course, that the Chair possibly did not hear the demand; but some of us here supposed that a second for the demand would be called for, and we intended to second the demand and get a yea-and-nay vote. However, some little conversation was going on and a second was not called for. There was a good deal of confusion at that time, and some of us who desired to vote for or against the amendment did not have the privilege of voting understandingly on the amendment; and the motion was put and carried with two or three votes, I think, all told, and we did not know that it had been put at all.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. BRYAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Montana where he was when that vote was taken?

Mr. MYERS. I was here waiting for a second for the demand for the yeas and nays. The Senator from Florida did not withdraw his demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRYAN. I saw the amendment was adopted, and so I did not call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MYERS. The motion had been put without a second being called on the demand for the yeas and nays. There was a good deal of confusion, and some of us who wanted to vote on the amendment did not have the opportunity of voting, and really I have not had the privilege of voting on the amendment. Therefore I think it ought to be reconsidered, and then let Senators vote as they please on the adoption of the amendment, so as to give us the right to vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is proper that the Chair should say that the Chair did not hear the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it was not the fault of the Chair. I did not demand the yeas and nays. I was sitting in my seat and I said "We will ask for the yeas and nays;" but I reconsidered the matter of calling for the yeas and nays. The Chair was not at fault at all.

Mr. MYERS. That is the only way of demanding the yeas and nays that I know of—to say "I demand the yeas and nays."

Mr. BRYAN. I did not demand the yeas and nays of the Chair, but merely made the remark among those who were near me and were speaking of it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I should like to ask the Senator if he voted for the amendment?

Mr. MYERS. No; I did not vote at all. I did not have an opportunity of voting.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I make the point of order that the Senator from Montana can not interpose a motion to reconsider when he did not even vote on the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken. The Senator from Montana did not vote in the affirmative.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think the Chair is in error about that. There was no record vote, and where there is no record vote it occurs to me that anyone can move to reconsider.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order that under the unanimous-consent agreement debate is out of order on a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the motion of the Senator from Montana to reconsider the vote. There was not a record vote, and so the Senator has the right to make the motion. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] was agreed to. By the sound the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRYAN (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair and its transfer, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As he is not in the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BRYAN (when Mr. FLETCHER'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] has been absent this afternoon on official business.

Mr. OLIVER (when Mr. LIPPITT'S name was called). The junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] has been compelled to leave the Chamber on official business.

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who is not in the Chamber. I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as heretofore of my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and the transfer. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] and its transfer to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] and withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I do not know how he would vote. I therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Newlands	Shively
Bacon	Johnson, Me.	O'Gorman	Simmons
Brandegee	Kenyon	Page	Smith, Ariz.
Burton	La Follette	Poindexter	Smith, S. C.
Chilton	McLean	Pomerene
Curtis	Myers	Reed

NAYS—29.

Bankhead	Crawford	Massey	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Cullom	Nelson	Smoot
Bourne	Cummins	Oliver	Swanson
Bradley	Gallinger	Overman	Townsend
Bristow	Johnston, Ala.	Penrose	Williams
Bryan	Jones	Perkins
Catron	Lodge	Root
Clapp	Martin, Va.	Sanders

NOT VOTING—43.

Bailey	Dixon	Kern	Smith, Mich.
Briggs	du Pont	Lea	Stephenson
Brown	Fall	Lippitt	Stone
Burnham	Fletcher	McCumber	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Foster	Martine, N. J.	Thornton
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble	Owen	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Gardner	Paynter	Warren
Crane	Gore	Percy	Watson
Culberson	Gronna	Rayner	Wetmore
Davis	Guggenheim	Richardson	Works
Dillingham	Heyburn	Smith, Md.

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

Mr. BOURNE. I send to the desk an amendment and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On line 17, page 29, strike out "or" and insert, after the words "substitute railway postal clerk," the words "or post-office inspector," so that it will read:

Which shall be exempt from the payment of debts of the deceased, to the legal representatives of any railway postal clerk, substitute railway postal clerk, or post-office inspector.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PORT BOLIVAR, TEX.

Mr. REED. On the 8th instant, from the Committee on Commerce, I reported back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 22199) to extend the limits of the port of entry of Galveston, Tex., to include Port Bolivar, in that State. I call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COOSA RIVER DAM, ALA.

Mr. LODGE, Mr. BANKHEAD, and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate now adjourn.

Mr. BAILEY. There is a special order. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will wait.

Mr. LODGE. I withdraw the motion with great pleasure, if the special order is to be taken up.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senate has now been in session for the past nine hours. It may be that the Senate would prefer that Senate bill 7343, to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, Ala., at the place selected for Lock No. 18 on said river should go over until to-morrow morning, to be made a special order immediately after the morning business has been concluded. If that can be agreed to, I would have no objection.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection. I think it ought to go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FUR-SEAL CONVENTION.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to say in addition that when the measure relating to the Coosa Dam is disposed of, I shall then call up House bill 16571 to ratify the convention with Russia, England, and Japan in regard to fur seal.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to give notice that on Wednesday, August 14, at the close of the consideration of the so-called seal bill, I will ask the Senate to consider and dispose of Calendar No. 348, Senate bill 3, to cooperate with the States in encouraging instruction in agriculture, the trades, and industries, and home economics in secondary schools, and so forth.

THE PANAMA CANAL—FOREIGN-BUILT SHIPS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator who moved to adjourn to withdraw the motion for one minute while I state a question of personal privilege.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The other day I offered an amendment to the Panama Canal bill (H. R. 21969), which was adopted, to admit to American registry ships engaged in foreign commerce. In some way or other, I do not know how, the amendment as adopted by the Senate has been changed upon the record. As I moved the amendment it was that "foreign-built ships, to engage only in foreign commerce, should be admitted to American registry." As it was reported in the Senate proceedings it was that "foreign-built ships, built only to engage in foreign commerce, should be admitted to American registry." It would seem that one word would not make much difference, but one word in that case does make a great deal of difference.

As I proposed the amendment and as it was adopted we might have gone out on the high seas and bought the tramp ships or other ships at any time and provided that they were engaged only in the foreign commerce they would be entitled to American registry. But under this provision, as some clerk or employee of the Senate has changed it in some way—and I do not charge that they have done it with any object at all in view; I suppose it was a mere accident—it reads, "built only to engage," so that no foreign-built ship engaged in foreign commerce could fly the American flag under the provision as it appears in the RECORD, unless it had been built only to engage in foreign commerce. In other words, no ship afloat now could be bought to engage in the foreign commerce, which was totally contradictory of the amendment as it was passed by the Senate.

I might, perhaps, make a motion to bring the measure back to the Senate in order that it might be corrected, but I do not want to do that, because I know that the records of the Senate show I am correct in the statement I have made. I merely wanted to make this explanation in order that the Senate conferees might be duly informed as to what the Senate actually did. What the Senate actually did was to adopt an amendment, which I would read, but some one has taken it from my desk. The amendment was that all laws preventing the admission to American registry of foreign-built ships to engage only in the foreign trade were repealed, and to that was added subsequently an amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], now in the chair, to which I agreed, putting upon an equal footing as regards the mail subventions all ships built in foreign yards and the ships built in American yards for the foreign trade.

I thought it proper to make that announcement in order that the Senate conferees would understand the situation.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, August 14, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 13, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal Spirit, author of life, intelligence, and purity, help us with firmer grasp to lay upon those things which are eternal, that by an adequate use of things temporal we may be prepared for whatsoever awaits us in the life that now is and in the life beyond the confines of earth. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FEDERAL INCORPORATION.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a request for unanimous consent. I am about to introduce two measures providing for Federal incorporation, one of them drafted by Mr. Justice Charles F. MacLean, of the New York Supreme Court, and the other drafted by Mr. Blackburn Esterline, of the Department of Justice, in cooperation with myself.

I ask unanimous consent to print on the front of each bill the name of its author. Otherwise there is likely to be very great confusion.

I take no responsibility for Mr. Justice MacLean's bill. It represents his views, not mine. At the same time I do not wish to introduce it "by request." I wish to introduce it and to print on the front of it, "Drafted by Mr. Justice Charles F. MacLean." On the other bill I wish to show the fact that it is drafted by Mr. Blackburn Esterline in consultation with me. That is my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that when he introduces two certain bills which he names he may print on the front page of each bill the words, "Drafted by ———." Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, where would we end if this practice were once started, and every Member who wanted to distinguish the product of his own brain from that of somebody's else brain should desire to print the announcement, "Drafted by Mr. ———?"

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I should think——

Mr. FITZGERALD. These bills are numbered, and the fact can be made known that a bill of such a number is one bill and a bill of another number is another bill. These bills are printed for the use of the House in accordance with a well-settled practice, and I doubt very much the propriety or advisability of putting anybody's name on a bill except that of whoever introduces it; certainly not the name of anyone who is not a Member of this House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Let me say to the gentleman that that is all very well in theory. As a matter of fact the minority report of the steel committee is going to have a good deal of circulation among college professors and others. They may perhaps ask for the Gardner bill on Federal incorporation. In reply it is quite as likely that the MacLean bill would be furnished instead of the Gardner bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can obviate that in one of two ways, either by introducing only one bill, which will represent his own views, or by leaving instructions that whenever anybody requests the Gardner bills, all of them shall be sent, with the notice that the receiver of them can take his choice.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman seriously object to this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I very seriously object to printing the name of some outsider, not a Member of this House, upon bills introduced into the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me ask the gentleman this question, Is it not a rule of the House that Members have a right to introduce bills by request?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And wash my hands of it like Pontius Pilate. I should never think of introducing a bill prepared by a justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York and of marking it "by request." That is as much as to say, "I consider this bill of no importance." That is my very reason for asking this unanimous consent, because I do not want to introduce the MacLean bill "by request."

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Can not the gentleman obviate the difficulty by introducing only one bill?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A justice of the Supreme Court of New York asked me to introduce the bill. It is not the bill that is recommended by the minority of the steel committee. I can not say to Mr. Justice MacLean, "I decline to introduce your bill."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. When a member of the supreme court asks the gentleman from New York to introduce a bill, does he generally like to say, "No; I shall not do it"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the first place, members of the supreme court seem not to be overanxious to ask me to introduce bills. I never introduce a bill into this House that I personally do not favor, and it would be much better if all Members of the House would make it a rule not to introduce bills unless they were willing to advocate them. That should be the theory upon which legislative bodies should act.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That may be so Never mind about the theory. Here is a practical question. Here is a justice of the supreme court of the gentleman's State. First he went to a Member upon the Democratic side of the House and asked him to introduce this bill. This Member said that the bill did not represent his ideas, but that the minority of the steel committee had declared in favor of Federal incorporation. I was called into consultation. I suggested to the Member on the other side of the House that I should be glad to introduce the bill "by request." He said, "Please do not do that. You know what consideration the House gives and what people usually think is meant when you introduce a bill 'by request.'"

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I must ask for the regular order. I have no objection to the gentleman's request being submitted, but I do object to a discussion of the matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SPEECH OF HON. THERON AKIN, OF NEW YORK.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike from the RECORD a speech inserted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] under leave to print, which appears in the RECORD of Saturday, August 10, 1912, on pages 11548, 11549, 11550, 11551, and 11552 and the first column of page 11553. I was not on the floor of the House on Saturday last, but I understand that these remarks were inserted under leave to print. The speech was not delivered upon the floor of the House. If it had been no doubt some statements contained therein would have been challenged then and there. My information is that possibly the bulk, if not the entire speech, was furnished by a man who was recently disconnected from the public service, and who has a grievance against the chief of the bureau in which he formerly served. It is evident that the purpose of this insertion in the RECORD is to use a congressional frank to flood the country with matters derogatory to the administration of public affairs and to the detriment of a trusted public officer. Not only that, but Mr. Speaker, in these remarks inserted in the RECORD, which were not delivered, there is language used that is a severe criticism of certain Members of the House who have had and discharged official duties in connection with the matter referred to in this alleged speech. I therefore move that the matter contained in the pages I have cited be stricken out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have not read the speech; will the gentleman kindly indicate the grounds on which the motion is made?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I desire to be entirely frank, and will say to the gentleman from New York that I reached town only a few hours ago. I have not myself read the speech, but I have been informed by gentlemen who have read it that the speech contains serious charges of maladministration in office of the Chief of the Weather Bureau and of misappropriation of money appropriated for the proper expenditures of that office, and all of these matters had previously been investigated by the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department, and that that committee found there was no basis whatever upon which to predicate any such charges or any of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, as I stated, I have not read the speech, and the gentleman from Missouri states that he has not read the speech, but makes this motion upon the ground that he is informed that the speech contains certain charges of maladministration and misappropriation of money against some official in a bureau of the Government, which have, after investigation, been demonstrated to be untrue. Yet, Mr. Speaker, if that be ground to strike a speech from the RECORD, placed there by a Member who wishes to bring to this House charges of maladministration against some official of the Government, and the speech is stricken out upon the statement that some committee has investigated the matter and found the charges to be untrue, although the matter has not, that I am aware of, ever been reported to the House, then it is asking this House to exercise a very great censorship over this RECORD.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the speech was not delivered upon the floor of the House, but inserted under leave to print.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have not much sympathy with many things put into the RECORD in that way, but having been inserted into the RECORD, there are certain well-defined reasons on which the House should act to exclude a speech. I doubt the advisability of asking Members who have hardly had an opportunity to examine the speech to vote upon a motion to strike it from the RECORD, particularly as the gentleman himself states that he has not read it.

Mr. UNDERWWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have not read the speech, but I have heard comments upon it. I have not had a chance to read it. I understand this speech has been printed in the RECORD, was not delivered upon the floor of the House; that it contains matters that if published in the newspapers would be libelous as to gentlemen who are Members of the House, for it reflects upon their character. I do not think the House ought to let a matter of this kind go unnoticed, and yet I recognize the force of the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that the House ought to give careful consideration to the matter. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] be appointed a committee of three to report to the House to-morrow morning as to whether this speech should be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I call attention to the fact that the gentleman who inserted the speech is not in the House. It is a question whether in a matter of this kind notice ought not to be given to a Member who is thus brought to public notice in the House. It is a question whether this subcommittee should not give notice to the gentleman in order that he may at least have an opportunity to make a statement, if he cares so to do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that of course the object of acting at once in the matter is because if it is not acted upon at once it will go into the permanent RECORD. If it is an improper speech, it ought not to be placed in the permanent RECORD. Appointing a special committee will give the gentleman from New York an opportunity to appear before that committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with the suggestion that a committee should be appointed. But as the matter stood prior to the request of the gentleman from Alabama, we had only the suggestion from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] that the speech was one which was improper for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We did not have anything on the other side from the gentleman who inserted the speech. As a matter of fairness to a Member accused, it seems to me that he ought to be notified by the committee, or that he might have been notified by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] before the matter was introduced in the House.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does not the gentleman think this committee will be fair to the gentleman named?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course the committee will be fair. Now, a suggestion. Suppose the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] had made a violent speech somewhere in his district and had, by leave to print, gotten it in the RECORD, where it was found to have reflected upon somebody, and a Member had arisen on this side and asked that his speech be expunged from the RECORD. Does not the gentleman think some one on that side would have arisen and said he thought the gentleman from Missouri ought to be present?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Having been done, the only thing is for the committee to give a hearing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am merely submitting it because I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN] should have notice.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if this committee is to be appointed, I ask the Chair to substitute the name of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] in place of my name, because I do not desire to serve.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the Chair appoint the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], the gentleman from New York——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I was about to suggest that the gentleman from Alabama suggest some one else in my place, as I have so much to do I can not serve.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suggest the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to add an amendment to the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Alabama. I suggest that the gentleman include also a speech from this same gentleman, on page 11344, which is a severe reflection upon governmental officials, and I suggest the gentleman include that speech in the matter of investigation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I then ask unanimous consent that both speeches be included in the inquiry of the committee consisting of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], to report to the House at as early date as practicable whether these speeches should remain in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] be appointed a committee to investigate both of these speeches and report as soon as practicable. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Chair appoints the gentlemen named.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 284. An act for the relief of Andrew H. Russell and William R. Livermore;

S. 5719. An act to increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the United States Navy;

S. 2451. An act providing against the abandonment of destitute, infirm, or aged parents;

S. J. Res. 108. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington of a joint memorial to Maj. Archibald W. Butt and Francis David Millet;

S. 2953. An act for the relief of George P. Chandler;

S. 3132. An act granting a pension to Deborah B. Rowan; and

S. J. Res. 95. Joint resolution providing for a monument to commemorate the services and sacrifices of the women of the country to the cause of the Union during the Civil War.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with out amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 21221. An act making a grant of lands for school purposes in block 31, town site of Powell, Shoshone reclamation project, Wyo.;

H. R. 7672. An act for the relief of Mary J. Manning; and

H. R. 4113. An act for the relief of Robert E. Burke.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 17595. An act to amend sections 1 and 118 of act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills and a concurrent resolution of the following titles:

S. 6354. An act to perpetuate and preserve Fort McHenry and the grounds connected therewith as a Government reservation under the control of the Secretary of War, and to authorize its partial use as a museum of historic relics;

S. Con. Res. 2. Concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 3,500 copies of Bulletin No. 30, in two parts, of the Bureau of American Ethnology, entitled "Handbook of the American Indian;" and

S. 2117. An act to promote the efficiency of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to Senate concurrent resolution No. 5, "Reports of the Immigration Commission."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4568) granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 284. An act for the relief of Andrew H. Russell and William R. Livermore; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 5719. An act to increase the efficiency of the medical department of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 2451. An act providing against the abandonment of destitute, infirm, or aged parents; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. J. Res. 108. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington of a joint memorial to Maj. Archibald W. Butt and Francis David Millet; to the Committee on the Library.

S. 2953. An act for the relief of George P. Chandler; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3132. An act granting a pension to Deborah B. Roman; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. J. Res. 95. Joint resolution providing for a monument to commemorate the services and sacrifices of the women of the country to the cause of the Union during the Civil War; to the Committee on the Library.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 21221. An act making a grant of lands for school purposes in block No. 31, town site of Powell, Shoshoni reclamation project, Wyoming;

H. R. 7672. An act for the relief of Mary J. Manning; and

H. R. 4113. An act for the relief of Robert E. Burke.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2117. An act to change the name of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the Public Health Service, to increase the pay of officers of said service, and for other purposes; and

S. 6354. An act to perpetuate and preserve Fort McHenry and the grounds connected therewith as a Government reservation under the control of the Secretary of War.

THE WOOLEN SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take from the Speaker's table, and move to pass notwithstanding the President's veto, the bill H. R. 22195, the wool bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill accompanied by the veto message, and the question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] as to a division of time. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the question? [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. PAYNE. As far as I am concerned I do not care for any time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We desire some discussion on this side. I suggest to the gentleman that we have two hours, to be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. PAYNE. I shall not object to that, of course, if the gentleman desires time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this motion shall be for two hours, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from New York and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on this proposition be confined to two hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the recent message of the President vetoing the bill to reduce the taxes on wool and woolen goods conveys to Congress and to the country the sad intelligence that special privilege in its most vicious form is still strongly intrenched at the White House. The message harks back to the once triumphant but evil days of standpatism. It disregards the earnest and honest plea of 90,000,000 consumers and hearkens alone to the siren voice of greed and graft. This latest tariff veto performance of the President is Bourbonism run mad. Its keynote is "standpatism," and its manifest purpose is the continued partnership of the Government with privilege. At the beginning of his administration, the President led the country to believe that he sincerely favored relief to the people by a real reduction of tariff taxation. But his late conduct belies all his former professions. He complacently vetoes one honest tariff reduction bill after another and calmly assures a tax-ridden people that "their yoke is easy, and their burden is light." He is content that they should remain "hewers of wood and drawers of water," while the Woolen Trust continues to fatten off their hard earnings. This shifting of his position will prove a staggering blow to the hopes of millions of confiding citizens, who have trusted and honored him in the past. However, this course is in keeping with the uniform action of his party heretofore. For 40 years the Republican Party has never touched the tariff but to raise the average rate upon competitive imports. Its tariff-revision record is a record of excuses, evasions, subterfuges, and delays.

Mr. Speaker, the President has had three splendid opportunities to lop off the prohibitive and extortionate rates of Schedule K. When he signed the Payne bill and thereby perpetuated this schedule in all its hideous and hoary infamy he meekly announced that it was the best that could be done at the time. A year ago when he vetoed the bill making an honest reduction of this schedule, he haltingly offered the worse than no excuse that its revision should await the report of his so-called Tariff Board. And in this connection let me call attention to the ingenious effort of the President in effect to transfer to the Executive Department the constitutional function of Congress to originate and pass bills to raise revenue. After his board had finally reported on the wool schedule, Congress passed the pending bill which, in its judgment, is amply sustained by the findings of the Tariff Board in so far as they are accurate. Thereupon the President returns the bill with his veto in which he announces the startling policy that Congress shall enact no tariff legislation with his consent unless it conforms to the findings of his board as construed—not by a majority of both Houses of Congress, but by himself upon the advice of his board. According to press reports, when the pending bill reached the President, he immediately sought the counsel of Prof. Emory, president of the board, and who evidently reflected the views of the majority of the board. The result of this conference was the immediate announcement by the President that Congress was in error and that the bill was not justified by the board's findings and must therefore be vetoed. And, Mr. Speaker, the President, with surprising presumption, has specified with particularity the precise rates that Congress shall adopt in lieu of those contained in the vetoed bill. At this point the name of Mr. James B. Reynolds naturally comes to our mind. We recall the manner in which Mr. Cortelyou was transferred from the position of corporation inquisitor to another position in which he "fried the fat" out of the same corporations for campaign purposes. Mr. Reynolds as one of its members is reported to have been the dominating factor in the preparation of the Tariff Board's report on the wool schedule. Since that time it is understood that he has been transferred to a position on the Republican national committee that he might "fry the fat" out of the woolen manufacturers for use in the present campaign. And yet, Mr. Speaker, this is a "nonpartisan Tariff Board." Should this stand-pat Republican executive policy be adopted Congress would become a mere automaton to register the will of the President and his board in the enactment of tariff laws.

Mr. Speaker, it is with regret that I call attention to the fact that the stand-pat press of the country has for sometime confidently predicted a Presidential veto of any or all bills making an honest reduction of the tariff, and intimating that campaign contributions would be contingent upon such vetoes. The veto has arrived as per schedule.

Mr. Speaker, the President has set his face like flint against any real reduction of Schedule K. In so doing he has been obliged to assume three remarkable and unenviable attitudes: First, he ingloriously retreats from his former position in which he bitterly denounced the woolen schedule as "indefensible" and clamored for its speedy revision. Second, to prevent its just revision, he now sets his judgment up against that of Congress and the country as to what the Tariff Board's report shows. Third, he is driven to invoke the exploded and repudiated economic fallacy that the difference in the cost of production here and abroad shall first be determined and the rates made to equal the same. He well knows, everybody knows, that such difference in cost is impossible of determination; that it differs in different countries, in different sections of the same country, in different factories, and in the same factories at different periods of the year.

Mr. Speaker, in his further effort to evade and postpone real revision of this schedule of the tariff the President in a vague and general way announces that the wool schedule shall not be revised except along the line of protection—yes, stand-pat protection, that created all our trust evils and that has fastened upon this country extortionate prices upon every necessity of the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. May I have five minutes additional?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, this announcement of the President will bring joy to the Woolen Trust and to a few big flockowners and to those mill owners now under indictment for unlawful importation of foreign labor to supplant domestic labor in their mills, but it will carry woe and disappointment to the millions of families of this country who are unable to pay the trust prices upon the woolen garments which they must wear. They know that this means to them the cold and privations of another year, that they must shiver, half clad, through another winter in order that the Woolen Trust may continue to increase its already excessive profits. The President as a last subterfuge proposes that the duty on wool shall be reduced from 40-odd to 35 per cent, and he makes the cool announcement that 35 per cent would be ample protection, but that a duty of 29 per cent, which this bill proposes, would be absolutely ruinous to the woolen industry of the country.

He comes to the finished product. The rate he suggests with respect to cloths as the basis are absolutely of no value or effect with respect to real tariff revision. For instance, the maximum duty on woolen cloths is now 149 per cent. The President thinks that is somewhat excessive, and he proposes that it be reduced 20 per cent, leaving it at 120 per cent upon every such woolen garment worn by our 90,000,000 of American citizens. This is a monstrous proposition. We have no imports under our present prohibitive rates in this schedule except as to those articles purchased by the very wealthy people of the country, and the reduction proposed in this message would still leave the rates entirely within the prohibitive zone. They would be equally acceptable to the Woolen Trust and to the other woolen interests seeking protection.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I take it that a political exigency has moved the President to pursue this stand-pat course in the hope of political favors to come. I would remind him that the present-day Republican Party does not receive at the hands of the public that high estimate that it once received. This party, by reason of a long period of prostitution at the hands of special privilege, has become so corrupt that even men like Bill Flinn and Perkins and McCormick and Dan Hanna have felt obliged to take their noses in one hand and their grips in the other and march out of its ranks in search of a purer atmosphere. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And whenever a party permits the atmosphere which surrounds it to become so foul that the hardened and deadened olfactories of men like Flinn and Perkins can no longer endure it, no finite mind can fathom the depth of its degradation, and its promises as a pawn to the Woolen Trust would be worth very little in November.

Mr. Speaker, Schedule K places a very heavy tax on every article of woolen clothing worn by every man, woman, and child in the United States. They have been demanding a reduction of these taxes for 30 years. There is but one method by which it can now be done, and that is to pass this bill over the veto of the President. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] consume some of his time?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I send up to the Clerk's desk to have read in my time the veto message of the President. I think we can get a little information from that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STANLEY). The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

On December 20, 1911, I sent a message to the Congress, recommending a prompt revision of the tariff on wool and woolens. I urged a reduction of duties which should remove all the excesses and inequalities of the schedule, but should leave a degree of protection adequate to maintain the continued employment of machinery and labor already established in that great industry. With that message I transmitted a report of the Tariff Board, which furnished for the first time the information needed to frame a revision bill of this character, and recommended that legislation should be at once undertaken in the light of this information.

Despite the efforts which have been made to discredit the work of the Tariff Board, their report on this schedule has been accepted, with scarcely a dissenting voice, by all those familiar with the problems discussed, including active representatives of organizations formed in the interest of the public and the consumer. Importers and merchants, as well as producers and manufacturers, have testified to the accuracy and impartiality of these findings of fact. For the first time in the history of American tariffs the opportunity has been afforded of securing a revision based on established facts, independent both of the ex parte statements of interested persons and the guesswork of political theorists.

My position has been made perfectly plain. I shall stand by my pledges to maintain a degree of protection necessary to offset the difference in cost of production here and abroad, and will heartily approve of any bill reducing duties to this level. Bills have been introduced into Congress, carefully framed and based on the findings of the Tariff Board, which, while maintaining the principle of protection, have provided for sweeping reductions. Such a bill was presented by the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, which, while providing protection to the woolgrower, reduces the duty on most wools 20 per cent, and the duties on manufactures by from 20 to more than 50 per cent, and gives in many instances less net protection to the manufacturer than was granted by the Gorman-Wilson free-wool act of 1894.

Instead of such a measure of thorough and genuine revision, based on full information of the facts, and with rates properly adjusted to all the different stages of the industry, there is now presented for my approval H. R. 22195, "An act to reduce the duties on wool and the manufactures of wool," a bill identical with the one which I vetoed in August, 1911, before the report of the Tariff Board had been made. The Tariff Board's report fully and completely justifies my veto of that date. The amount of ad valorem duty necessary to offset the difference in the cost of production of raw wool here and abroad varies with every grade of wool. Consequently, an ad valorem rate of duty adjusted to meet the difference in the cost of production of high-priced wools is not protective to low-priced wools. In any case, the report of the Tariff Board shows that the ad valorem duty of 29 per cent on raw wool, imposed in the bill now submitted to me, is inadequate to meet this difference in cost in the case of four-fifths of our total wool clip. The disastrous effect upon the business of our farmers engaged in wool raising can not be more clearly stated. To maintain the status quo in the woolgrowing industry, the minimum ad valorem rate necessary, even for high-grade wool in years of high prices, would be 35 per cent.

The rate provided in this bill on cloths of all kinds is 49 per cent. The amount of net protection given by this rate, in addition to proper compensation for the duty on wool, depends on the ratio between the cost of the raw material and the cost of making the cloth. The cost of the raw material in woolen and worsted fabrics varies in general from 50 per cent to 70 per cent of the total value of the fabric. Consequently, the net protective duty, with wool at 29 per cent, would vary from 28.7 per cent to 34.5 per cent. In the great majority of cases these rates are inadequate to equalize the difference in the cost of manufacture here and abroad. This is especially true of the finest goods involving a high proportion of labor cost. One of the striking developments of the last few years has been the growth in this country of a fine goods industry. The rates provided in this bill, inadequate as they are for most of the cloths produced in this country, would make the continuance here of the manufacture of fine goods an impossibility.

Even more dangerous in their effects are the rates proposed on tops and yarns. Tops are the result of the first stage in the making of raw wool into cloth. Yarn is the result of the second stage. Taken in connection with a rate of 29 per cent on wool, and 49 per cent on cloths, the rates of 32 per cent on tops and 35 per cent on yarn, fixed in this bill, seem impossible of justification. They would disrupt, and to no purpose, the existing adjustment, within the industry, of all its different branches. It is improbable in the highest degree that raw wool would be imported in great quantities when the cloth maker can import his tops at a duty of 32 per cent and yarns at a duty of 35 per cent. The report of the Tariff Board shows the difference in relative costs to be uniformly greater than the amount of protection on yarns given by this bill. In a year of low prices, the net protection granted by the proposed rates would not be more than half the difference in costs. The free wool act of 1894 gave a protective rate of 40 per cent on all yarns over 40 cents a pound in value, with free raw material. The present bill gives only 35 per cent on such yarns with a duty of 29 per cent on the raw material.

The great increase in the imports of tops and yarns which would result from the rates in the bill now submitted to me would destroy the effect of the protection to raw wool and at the same time would be at the cost of widespread disaster to the wool combing and spinning branches of the industry. The last 15 years has witnessed a great growth of top making and worsted spinning in this country, and the capacity of the plants is now equal to domestic requirements. Under the rates proposed such plants could be continued, if at all, only by writing off most of the investment as a net loss and by a reduction of wages. To sum up, then, most of the rates in the submitted bill are so low in themselves that if enacted into law the inevitable result would be the irretrievable injury to the wool-growing industry, the enforced idleness of much of our wool combing and spinning machinery, and of thousands of looms, and the consequent throwing out of employment of thousands of workmen.

In view of these facts, in view of the platform upon which I was elected, in view of my promise to follow and maintain the protective policy, no course is open to me but to withhold my approval from this bill. I am very much disappointed that such a bill is a second time presented to me. I have inferred from the speeches made in both the House and the Senate that the Members of the majority in both Houses are deeply impressed with the necessity of reducing the tariff under the present act on wool and woolens; that they do not propose to stand on the question of the amount of reduction or to insist that it must be enough necessarily to satisfy the principle of tariff for revenue only, but that they are willing to accept a substantial reduction in the present rates in order that the people might be relieved from the possibility of oppressive prices due to excessive rates. I strongly desire to reduce duties, provided only the protection system be maintained, and that industries now established be not destroyed. It now appears from the Tariff Board's report, and from bills which have been introduced into the House and the Senate, that a bill may be drawn so as to be within the requirements of protection and still offer a reduction of 20 per cent on most wool and of from 20 per cent to 50 per cent on cloths. I can not act upon the assumption that the controlling majority in either House will refuse to pass a bill of this kind, if in fact it accomplishes so substantial a reduction, merely because members of the opposing party and the Executive unite in its approval. I therefore urge upon Congress that it do not adjourn without taking advantage of the plain opportunity thus substantially to reduce unnecessary existing duties. I appeal to Congress to reconsider the measure, which I now return, without my approval, and to adopt a substitute therefor making substantial reductions below the rates of the present act, which the Tariff Board shows possible, without destroying any established industry or throwing any wage earners out of employment, and which I will promptly approve.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 9, 1912.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, theories may be discussed, doubted, or disputed, but facts can not be set aside or disregarded. The plain, cold, indisputable fact is that the manufacturers of this country were not able to operate their business under the Wilson bill. Since that time wages have risen, as estimated, from 25 to 35 per cent, but every other material besides the wool that they use in their manufacture has increased in price, and the plain, cold, hard fact is that this bill does not give the manufacturer anything like the protection that the Wilson bill did.

With the exception of wool and yarns, the protection all through this bill is less than that given by the Wilson bill. The Wilson bill gave on cloth that is valued to exceed 50 cents per pound a protection of 50 per cent. Cloth valued at 50 cents per pound would include practically all wool cloths and nearly all the finer finished goods of a mixed character. This bill gives 49 per cent on cloth and makes an additional expense to the manufacturer of 29 per cent on the wool which he uses, which the Wilson bill gave him free.

On all of the small manufactures made of wool, such as webbings, gorings, suspenders, embroideries, and the like, the Wilson bill gave 50 per cent, with free wool. This bill gives 49 per cent. On clothing valued at above $1.50 a pound, which would include practically all of the all-wool clothing that would come in, the Wilson bill gave 50 per cent. This bill gives only 49 per cent, and keeps the 29 per cent tax on wool.

On women's and children's goods the same schedule applies; 50 per cent under the Wilson bill, and 49 per cent under this bill, and the Wilson bill gave the added advantage of free wool. On ladies' apparel the same rule again applies, and all through there was a great advantage in the Wilson bill to the manufacturer over the rates given in this bill.

On blankets the rates indeed in this bill are higher than those given in the Wilson bill, but not sufficient to make up for the 29 per cent which the manufacturer must pay on his wool under this bill. Blankets under the Wilson bill paid between 25 and 35 per cent. Under this bill the duty is 38 per cent.

On carpets there is a still more marked difference. It is true that on the expensive grades of Aubusson, Moquette, and Axminster carpets the rates in this bill are higher than those of the Wilson bill, but even on these the rates are not sufficient to make up the difference upon the wool. But when we come to tapestry Brussels and ingrain carpets the Wilson bill gave even higher protection, with free wool, than is given in this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Can I have two minutes more?

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to the gentleman two minutes in addition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the people of the United States may not always be able to figure out these schedules or understand these rates, but they can understand the effects of the Wilson bill, and they can determine for themselves whether the manufacturing business of this country can be carried on under this bill when it could not be carried on under the Wilson bill.

I have spoken of the effect on manufacturing, but my chief concern is not for the manufacturer, although I believe he should be treated fairly. If the manufacturer can not run his mills, the mill hand can not get his wages. If the mill hand does not get his wages, he can not buy the farmer's produce. If the farmer can not sell his produce, he can not buy the merchant's goods. The vicious circle that under the Wilson bill paralyzed every kind of trade and business and threw the laborer out of employment will then be complete, and the days of 1894 will again return. The American people remember them. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 41 minutes remaining.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. UTTER].

Mr. UTTER. Mr. Speaker, for one who has observed with some care the action of the Democratic majority since the beginning of this Congress it has been exceedingly difficult to understand the policy which has been followed on tariff legislation. Coming into this House with a majority, as they did, on a promise to reduce the tariff, they seem to have persistently and consistently followed a policy to prevent its reduction. Indeed, it seems to me that the time has now come when the people can well say to that party, as was said a long while ago to a certain individual, "Your actions speak so loud that we can not hear your words." [Applause on the Republican side.] The pretensions that you gentlemen on that side of the aisle have made are belied by your actions; the promises you have made have been discounted to the public by your actions; and now, as though to put a climax on the whole thing, you once more enact a bill which has met previous defeat, and I must conclude that you have repassed it with the expectation that it will again meet defeat.

Everybody who knows anything about public matters knows that legislation is dependent upon the President as well as upon the body which originates such legislation. The Constitution not only places upon the President the responsibility but also the duty of vetoing or approving legislation. Therefore for a legislative body to deliberately bring legislation to the President which it knows before it has been framed will meet with a veto is an act of insincerity that the people can readily understand.

This bill that we now have before us is a bill that has twice been before the President. There may have been some excuse at first for the hope that he would sign it. At this time, however, there can be no excuse whatever for any such anticipation. He himself has said, directly and positively, that he stands on a tariff principle which this bill violates. He himself has repeatedly said that he stands for a tariff policy which this bill attacks. He himself has said, and the people believe in him, that he has confidence in a system which this bill does not favor, but which it opposes. Yet once more we were asked to put up to the President a bill that we knew he would not approve, and now we are asked once more to pass that bill over his veto.

There was a bill offered to this House which the President would have approved. It was the bill offered by the minority as a substitute for the bill which has been returned without the President's signature. That bill was framed with regard to the principles for which he stands, and yet it was a marked reduction in tariff rates in many particulars.

Mr. WARBURTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UTTER. Yes.

Mr. WARBURTON. How do you know he would have approved it?

Mr. UTTER. If the gentleman will wait, I will try and prove it to him.

Mr. WARBURTON. May I make one suggestion? He has said many and many a time that the wool schedule was indefensible, and that there should be a very material reduction in it.

Mr. UTTER. I do not want the gentleman to take up my time. What I say is that the insincerity of this action is proven in two or three ways. It is proven, first, by the fact that this House knew before this bill was sent to the President that it would not be approved. It is the same bill that was passed last year. It comes back without a change in it, and it is proposed to put it up to the President once more. He himself has said that he will favor a discreet revision of the tariff, but he has never at any time said he would favor a revision that would seriously injure an American industry. [Applause on the Republican side.] Therefore, when we go to the people and tell them that a bill has been sent to the President and that he has disapproved it because he believed it would injure an industry in certain of its branches, we can not protect ourselves from the charge of insincerity by asserting that he has at some time said he is in favor of a general reduction. The very fact that this bill has for the second time been put up to the President is proof positive of the insincerity of the whole thing.

In the second place, it was well said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON], on the other side of the aisle, a few days ago, that if he were to have his way he would not continue to disturb business by threatening tariff legislation, but he would wait until such time as the party on that side of the aisle was in control, and then would pass a bill of its own manufacture and incorporating its own ideas. But here you have presented to the President a bill that does not carry the ideas professed by the people on the other side of the aisle; a bill that does not carry the ideas of the people on this side of the aisle; a bill that does not carry the ideas of anybody. It is nothing more or less than an effort to embarrass the President by hereafter declaring that he was offered a tariff bill making an apparent reduction in rates and yet a bill which he disapproved. The insincerity of the move is seen from the very first.

In the third place, the President himself has said that he was in favor of a bill that would properly reduce the tariff. He said in his veto message, that was read to the House only this morning, in so many words:

> My position has been made perfectly plain. I shall stand by my pledges to maintain a degree of protection necessary to offset the difference in cost of production here and abroad, and will heartily approve of any bill reducing duties to this level. Bills have been introduced into Congress, carefully framed and based on the findings of the Tariff Board, which, while maintaining the principle of protection, have provided for sweeping reductions. Such a bill was presented by the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, which, while providing protection to the woolgrower, reduces the duty on most wools 20 per cent, and the duties on manufactures by from 20 to more than 50 per cent, and gives in many instances less net protection to the manufacturer than was granted by the Gorman-Wilson free-wool act of 1894.
> In view of these facts, in view of the platform upon which I was elected, in view of my promise to follow and maintain the protective policy, no course is open to me but to withhold my approval from this bill.

Mr. WARBURTON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. UTTER. No. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] said, when this bill was before the House a few days ago, that should it become a law it would produce larger imports of the manufacturers of wool by $32,177,000 and of the entire woolen schedule to the amount of $63,495,000. And how? Simply because more goods were to be manufactured abroad and brought in here, and the bringing in of $32,177,000 more manufactures of wool, or of $63,495,000 of wool and woolen manufactures, would mean $63,495,000 less values produced in this country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WARBURTON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. UTTER. Not now.

Mr. WARBURTON. Just one question.

Mr. UTTER. Not now. I want to call attention also to this fact: If there had been a sincere effort on the part of the Democracy to reduce the tariff on wool, then, instead of standing by something that they knew would not be approved, they would have taken something that they had every reason to know would be approved. Men in business, men in active life, know that if they can not get all they want they better get what they can; and when a party undertakes to send a bill like this to the President, with the knowledge that the President will veto it, they are fooling themselves, not the people.

Mr. WARBURTON. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. UTTER. No.

Mr. WARBURTON. Would he have——

Mr. UTTER. I decline to yield. If there is any fixed party policy back of the repeated passing of this bill and of the sending it to the President, it must rest on the hope that the people can be deceived into believing that the promise of getting something cheap is the fulfillment of party promises to reduce the tariff. But the people will not be so easily deceived. They have not yet forgotten their experiences of the past. It seems to me that the whole thing can be illustrated by a short story. A man went to a butcher and asked him what was the price of sausage. The butcher said the price of sausage was 14 cents. "But," replied the man, "I can buy sausage of Smith for 10 cents." "Then, why don't you buy sausage of Smith for 10 cents?" asked the butcher. "Because," said the man, "Smith hasn't got any now." "Well," said the butcher, "if I didn't have any sausage, I would sell them for 10 cents, too." [Laughter.]

So the Democracy is undertaking to tell the people that it will give them something cheap, but it does not give them anything to buy with. It does not tell the people that by making things cheap it will probably also cause that which is to be bought to be manufactured elsewhere. The policy of the Republican Party is not only to buy things cheap, but to buy things made by American people in American manufacturing establishments and to take pride in American industry. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WARBURTON. Now will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Now will the gentleman from Alabama occupy some of his time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], on his eloquence and the persuasive speech he made in support of the President's veto. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] It consisted in having read at the Clerk's desk the veto message of the President. I appreciate the fact that my colleague believes that the message would speak more eloquently and effectively than he could himself, because the President approved one bill which bore the name of the gentleman from New York, and in this message commends to Congress another bill prepared by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WARBURTON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. The chief characteristic of the bill approved by the President in his message, and which he begs Congress to remain in session to enact, is that it increases the rates of duty on the cheaper grades of goods and takes off the burden by reducing the duty on the higher-priced goods, which are used not by the poor but by the rich.

I desire to call attention to the remarkable versatility of the President. This identical bill was sent to him last August, and in his message vetoing it he makes the following statement:

> I was elected to the Presidency as the candidate of a party which, in its platform, declared its aim and purpose to be to maintain a protective tariff by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries.

He received the same bill one year later, just a few days ago, and in his message vetoing this bill he makes this statement:

> My position has been made perfectly plain. I shall stand by my pledges to maintain a degree of protection necessary to offset the difference in cost of production here and abroad, and will heartily approve of any bill reducing duties to this level.

What about reasonable profit to the American industries upon which he placed so much stress in the other message? How about the Republican platform? The President in his first message and in this message keeps reiterating that he was elected on a platform which promised a certain measure of protection, and the platform of 1908 adopted by the Republican Party declares that—

> In all tariff legislation the true principle of protection is maintained by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, giving a reasonable profit to American industries.

That was the ground on which the President vetoed the first bill. The Republican platform of 1912 declares—

> That the import duties should be high enough, while yielding a sufficient revenue to protect adequately an American industry and wages.

In other words, by an ingenious change of language the American manufacturer is notified that the Republican Party still proposes that his profits shall not be curtailed while the declaration is framed in such a way as to deceive the American consumer. That is apparent from the President's message, because, while the platform declares for protection of the industry and wages—and when they differentiate between industry and wage they mean profit—the President has only stated that he will stand by his pledge and maintain a degree of protection necessary to offset the cost of production here and abroad.

In this message the President further states:

Despite the efforts which have been made to discredit the work of the Tariff Board, their report on this schedule has been accepted, with scarcely a dissenting voice, by all those familiar with the problems discussed, including active representatives of organizations formed in the interest of the public and the consumer.

There is a striking absence of any reference to organizations formed in the interest of the manufacturer, and I know of none legitimate in character formed in the interest of the consumer and made public which have indorsed the Tariff Board's report.

Importers and merchants—

He proceeds—

as well as producers and manufacturers, have testified to the accuracy and impartiality of these findings of fact.

Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman give me a little more time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I took occasion to put in the RECORD an analysis of the Tariff Board's report on Schedule K by Samuel S. Dale, editor of the Textile World's Record, of Boston, a leading authority upon textile industries of the United States. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] knows him and knows that he is competent to pass on the Tariff Board's report. The President is not. He appointed the board in order to furnish him with information by which he could determine how he could act, lacking, as he has repeatedly admitted, sufficient information himself. Mr. Dale, if I am not misinformed, at one time was associated with the Taraiff Board in an advisory capacity, but, like another gentleman, as disclosed the other day, he left them in disgust. I shall put some extracts in the RECORD, and also submit some figures which the Tariff Board gave as to cost.

Mr. Dale said:

No better proof of the impossibility of determining cost for the purpose of applying the difference in cost formula to the revision of tariffs is required. The board attempts to avoid this difficulty, as in the case of tops, by assuming a full output. Thus, on page 646:

"In view of this difficulty the Tariff Board has adopted a general rule of figuring all costs on the basis of full normal output, as in the case of tops."

This is assuming a condition that never prevails for any considerable time throughout the industry. Moreover, the question arises, How did the board revise the cost returns received so as to determine the result that would have been actually reached if the mill had been doing something that it was not doing?

On page 650 the report says:

"Figures of cost were secured in England from various manufacturers on actual samples, and in the second column in the table below are given the figures which represent the average of the various calculations.

"From this it is evident that the board obtained from 'various manufacturers' in England estimates of cost of certain grades of worsted yarn. These estimates were averaged by some unexplained process and the results tabulated on page 650 for the purpose of comparison with the figures obtained from American mills and revised by the board at Washington. That is the result, or rather lack of result, attained by the board in investigating the cost of the material, white worsted yarn, which of all the multitudinous products of wool manufactures offered the least difficulty in such an inquiry."

Again, speaking of the yarn material for a yard of cloth:

These figures do not represent the cost in any mill either in this country or abroad. They result from some undisclosed system of estimating, based on arbitrary prices for foreign and domestic yarns. Such calculations do not come up to the level of ordinary guesswork.

He concludes this very illuminating paper with the statement:

In conclusion I desire to express my keen regret at having found these statements of fact in the report deficient and the conclusions generally erroneous.

This is the information upon which the President urges that legislation be framed. Unless a bill be drafted along the lines indicated in the report shown by Mr. Dale to be utterly worthless the President will not approve a bill.

Mr. Dale is stated to be the most competent man in the United States to pass on the work of the Tariff Board. The President, for whose benefit this board was appointed, because he confessed he was unable to determine for himself what the rates should be, because he had no information, in speaking of this report, says:

For the first time in the history of American tariffs the opportunity has been afforded of securing a revision, based on established facts, independent both of the ex parte statements of interested persons and the guesswork of political theorists.

The President in his Winona speech said that the woolen schedule was an indefensible schedule; that it had not been revised because the combination of woolgrowers in the West and woolen manufacturers in the East had prevented any change being made in it, and he states in one of his messages that he has repeatedly declared it to be indefensible. He now expresses his regret that Congress has not complied with the recommendations of this report and legislated in accordance with it.

Mr. Speaker, the truth of the matter is that the President is thinking only of the manufacturer and those who have been earning profits at the expense of the American people as a result of Republican legislation. This bill has been drawn to afford relief to the great mass of the people, the consumers of the land, and it is in their interest alone that it was passed, and not for the benefit of the beneficiaries of Republican tariff legislation. Twice Congress, with deliberate judgment, with Houses hostile to each other politically, has agreed upon this bill, and twice the President has interposed to deny relief to the public in order that these ill-gotten profits of the manufacturer may be protected. I appeal from the President of the United States in this matter to the good sense of this House and to the American people, who understand fully the situation. I am convinced that the results will not be such as to justify his vetoes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, there is an absolute irreconcilable difference between the policies of the Republican Party and the policies of the Democratic Party. I am a Republican and believe in the policies of that party. One of the policies of that party, and the most important one from an economic standpoint, is the protective system. The gentleman from Alabama, the leader of the majority, candidly says that this bill is framed without any regard whatever to protection, that it is intended to be a bill for revenue, and announces clearly and intelligently that he does not favor in this legislation or in any legislation which he supports anything that will protect American labor. How are you going to reconcile the difference between the gentleman and his party and me and my party? You voice it in your platform upon which your candidate, Mr. Wilson, stands. You say there is no power under the Constitution to levy a protective duty, and it was on that principle, that doctrine, that the southern portion of the country refused to submit to the will of the majority, and we had as a result that great struggle, and in your Confederate constitution you wrote in express words that no duties should be levied for protection.

You passed this bill once before and sent it to the President. He vetoed it. Do you think you are making your position any stronger by sending it to him again? He vetoed it, thank God, and he vetoed it because if it had passed it would have been destructive not only of the flockmaster but to the hundreds of thousands of people with small flocks of sheep, and it would have been destructive to a great army of people who are engaged in doing the labor to make the textiles. If, perchance, your fond prophecy shall materialize, and you shall come into full power, what is going to be your policy? Your candidate for the Presidency makes a very artful speech of acceptance. He says, in substance, to the New Jersey manufacturer and the New York and New England manufacturer and to the great Middle West manufacturer in my own State—it being the third State in manufacturing, as it is first in agriculture—"Oh, we will be very careful; oh, we will not do it all in one minute; we will cut off the tail of the dog only an inch at a time, so that it will not hurt him." [Laughter.] But he also accepts the nomination upon the Baltimore platform, which declares that protection is unconstitutional and pledges legislation for a tariff for revenue only.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if the Democratic Party comes into power the country would be infinitely better off if you would not kill the industries of the country by inches, but would write your policies upon the statute books. Of course, that might not fool the people up in Massachusetts and New England and New Jersey and New York and Illinois; and, therefore, you think to temporize. You are right or you are wrong. We are right or we are wrong. Let us be manly. The Republican Party stands for adequate protection, high enough even to prevent dumping. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who speak on this veto message have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD for five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken or who may speak upon this veto message may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 26 minutes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the Republican Party obtained the last presidential election under false pretenses. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Payne-Aldrich tariff law is an open, notorious, and willful violation of the solemn pledges made by that party to the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It was conceived in a conspiracy with trust magnates and tariff barons and born in the star chamber of special privilege. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Its provisions bristle with injustice to the American consumer. It is a license to rob and plunder the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The woolen schedule was so outrageous and oppressive that the President explained its presence by saying that the Woolen Trust was so powerful and influential that it was impossible for a Republican Congress to reduce the tariff on woolen goods. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The people cried out against the entire law. They strongly condemned the woolen schedule. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And then this same Republican President made a confession; he declared that the woolen schedule of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law was inexcusable and indefensible. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, in 1910 the people expressed their disapproval of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law and repudiated the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] A Democratic House was elected and immediately set itself to the task of reducing the tariff tax, of relieving the people of the burden of unjust and oppressive taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] One of the first bills reported to this House was one to reduce the tariff tax on woolen goods. The bill passed the House and, by the aid of insurgent Senators, it passed the Senate. It then went to the White House, and the same Republican President who had denounced the woolen schedule, declaring it inexcusable and indefensible, employed the veto power to defend it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He struck down a bill that would have carried relief and happiness to millions of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The people were sorely disappointed and justly indignant, but the cohorts of the Woolen Trust were happy, and its president expressed pleasure at the President's veto and congratulated him upon his courage. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, there was great rejoicing among the privileged classes and the trust magnate was in supreme command at the White House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The people turned away from this scene sad and despondent. Again, at this session of Congress, we passed the woolen schedule. Again it passed the Senate and again it reached the White House.

Mr. Speaker, when that bill, fraught with so much good and carrying so much relief to the people of the United States, reached the President—in spite of his former veto—men, women, and children looked with hope to the White House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They had felt the chill of three winters under the woolen schedule of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They had suffered and shivered in the cold, and disease and death had come to many of their loved ones; and now they hoped and prayed that the President would approve the bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In their anxiety and hope they saw cheaper clothing and they could almost feel the warmth and comfort that would come with the President's approval of that measure. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They looked longingly to the White House, Mr. Speaker, but they looked in vain, and when the news of the President's veto reached them they were disappointed and exceedingly unhappy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They knew by bitter experience what the coming winter had in store for them [Applause on the Democratic side.] And with heavy hearts they turned, awe-stricken, from the scene and exclaimed: "God of our fathers, how long will the American people submit to the open and bold defiance of their registered will?" [Applause on the Democratic side.] How much longer will tariff barons and trust magnates be permitted to rob and plunder the American people? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, the President may shut his eyes to the suffering and distress caused by the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. He may turn a deaf ear to the pitiful appeals of men, women, and children who must shiver in the cold because of his veto of this woolen bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He may, by the unwise and improper use of the veto power, postpone the day of their deliverance from the evils of special privilege, from the distress, misery, and tyranny of this robber tariff law, but, thank God, he can not long delay it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The handwriting is upon the wall. I appeal to the Members of this House to pass this bill over the President's veto. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Our cause is just. A long-suffering people are indignant and determined, and, thank God, the day of their deliverance is near at hand. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman from New York to consume the balance of his time. There will be only one more speaker on this side.

Mr. PAYNE. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty-seven minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, there is not the slightest use in attempting to befog this question. It is a clear, straight-out, open, clean-cut issue between protection and free trade, for a tariff for revenue only is nothing but free trade with a handicap. The President of the United States has sent a message to Congress in which he says that he will approve a bill drawn at a lower rate of duty than the one that he has vetoed if it is drawn on protection lines. But the Democratic Party insists that the veto shall be overridden and that there shall be no legislation except on their own terms. Gentlemen, the responsibility is upon you. One branch of the legislative power says there shall be no reduction of the duty on Schedule K unless it is made on free-trade lines.

That is the issue. There is no use trying to disguise it. If the Members of the House will look in the RECORD when this bill was under discussion before they will find a speech by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], in which he placed the rates of this bill and the bill which was voted for by the Republicans, on the importations of 1911 side by side, one giving a rate for his measure of 31 per cent, the other giving a rate for the Republican measure of 36 per cent on the importations of that year. But he was fair enough to state at the beginning that it applied only to all-wool goods.

If he had applied the cotton proviso of the Republican bill to the importations of that year, the reduction by the Republican bill in the aggregate would have been at least 7 or 8 per cent below the rate of the bill which he drew and which is now under consideration. It is not a question of rates, but of the method of their application. It is simply a question of protection or free trade.

At the very foundation of this industry lies the wool duty, and it was a matter of common talk at the time that the first Democratic caucus was held that there were 47 men on that side of the House who stood for a duty on wool, and because that 47, added to the Republican membership, would have prevented legislation putting wool on the free list, they were compelled to put a duty on wool. But in doing it they declared their sentiments, and this is what they said. I read from the RECORD:

Resolved, That the bill revising Schedule K, as presented to this caucus by the majority Members of the Ways and Means Committee, is not to be construed as an abandonment of any Democratic policy.

They were actually for free trade then. They are actually for free trade now, and I appeal to those 47 Members, who will have to go back to their constituents and meet this issue fairly and squarely, to meet it here on this floor. They can not escape by dodging the issue. It will meet them.

No man reaches mature life in this world without having some great opportunity placed before him to stand for principle rather than for expediency, and I want to read to those 47 men a statement that was made many, many hundreds of years ago, when the question of expediency was put up against honor and even against life. I read from the book of Esther:

Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther—

And I want the gentleman from Colorado and the Democratic gentlemen from the Western States, from California and other wool-growing States of the West, to listen to this statement:

Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther. Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the King's house more than all the Jews, for if thou holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there arise deliverance and enlargement from another place, but thou and thy house shall be destroyed, and who knoweth but that thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?

And this might apply to others beside Democrats on that side of the House. What was Esther's answer? She sent back word that she would stand upon principle, and said:

I will go in unto the King, and if I perish, I perish.

But she did not perish. She won out [applause], and there was a day of gladness and rejoicing for her and all of her people.

I say to you, protectionists on this side of the Chamber, "Stand by your principles." If you do not, you will not be saved because you are in the king's house just now. It is a question of protection and free trade. Let me prove it to you. A few days ago a delegation visited Seagirt, N. J., and a statement was made by a prominent Democrat to Dr. Wilson, declaring that he believed that a certain person whose party platform called for protection now was actually for free trade. He added:

But I want to say to you, Gov. Wilson, even if we forfeit this election, we ought to stand for what we believe is right.

What was the answer? Said the Doctor:

I am complimented by your allegiance, and I want to assure you that, while I think this is a very high personal compliment, I take it to myself simply that I, for the present at any rate, represent the earnest desires and purposes of the Democratic Party.

Said he:

It seems to me we are standing in the presence of something higher than allegiance to the Democratic Party.

That is from your candidate. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Another delegation came along, and he said this to them, referring to another subject:

The Democratic Party is now placed under a peculiar responsibility. It has to prove that it is the worthy instrument of that zeal on the part of the people of the United States. If it does not prove it now, it will never be given another chance to prove it.

"It will never be given another chance." Only a few days ago he said that there was "no indispensable man." I say to Dr. Wilson that the fate of Democracy does not rest on him. Four years from now CHAMP CLARK and OSCAR UNDERWOOD will be found leading the hosts of Democracy, no matter what happens to Dr. Wilson now or what may be the outcome of this presidential election. [Applause.]

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Not now. Their opportunity will not be gone. [Renewed applause.] It does not rest with him to insist that the people of the United States shall stand for free trade, as expounded by one who has believed in it and taught it all his life, and that if they do not accept that or anything else now, the opportunity of Democracy is gone forever. I honor the men on that side of the House who stand for the principles in which they believe. I am for true protection. I believe in "an honest dollar and a chance to earn it." That was the motto of William McKinley, and with it as his battle cry the American people gave him a splendid victory over William Jennings Bryan, who made the Democratic platform of to-day, and who will try again to raise the money issue if his candidate is successful now.

I believe in protection to American industry from start to finish. You do not. [Applause.] You do not believe in it at all. You believe in free trade, no matter how much you disguise it. We will meet you at Philippi in November. [Applause.]

Mr. WARBURTON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HILL. Oh, no. I commend to you also the message which Mordecai sent to Esther, "Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the King's house." That will not protect you. You have got to stand on principle and go to your constituents and say, "I will stand by my principles; and if I perish, I perish." [Applause.]

Mr. WARBURTON. I submit, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. WARBURTON. I submit that——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington has not the floor.

Mr. WARBURTON. May I make a suggestion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to get time either from the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] or from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. PAYNE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the whole pretense on the part of the majority side of this House to enact legislation for the honest revision of the tariff is the most consummate farce that has been enacted in this House in modern years. I have reached the conclusion that gentlemen on the other side of the aisle at no time have had any purpose, intention, or desire to revise the various tariff schedules. They are nursing the whole subject for use in the campaign.

In the summer of 1911, in the first session of this Congress, this bill in identically the same terms went through the two Houses of Congress, went to the President, and was vetoed by him on the ground that there was no way of finding out, no way of ascertaining whether it would be destructive to the woolen industries of the country. From the arguments made in support of the measure it would have been not only disastrous but absolutely destructive of that industry, because men who advocated it boasted of the fact that it had eliminated every vestige of protection from the wool tariff.

The Tariff Board had made no report at that time. Since then it has. The Congress has had access to that great report, which shows thorough research upon this question for eight months. The minority members of the Ways and Means Committee presented a bill to the House at this session conforming strictly to the report, reducing the duty on wool on an average of 45 per cent. Gentlemen on the other side of the aisle knew well enough that if that bill had gone through the two Houses of Congress it would have become a law. There was an opportunity to reduce the tariff on wool 45 per cent. That was rejected, and they have resurrected and brought out the same old cadaver that went to the administration dissecting table last August, the same identical bill, and presented it again to the President, and it has met the same fate as it did before. They have not changed it an iota, they have not even galvanized it or deodorized it, and yet they pretend to desire its enactment. They knew the President would disapprove the bill when they passed it. They were careful to defeat all bills they thought would be approved by the President and persisted in supporting a measure they knew was impossible. They are not fooling anybody but themselves. It is true the people want the wool schedule revised, but for what? Not merely for the sake of having it revised, but for the purpose of having it fairly and intelligently readjusted. The people do not want a revision that will close the woolen mills of the country and throw several hundred thousand men and women out of employment, but they do want a revision that will afford our own industries reasonable protection, and no more. They demand that all unnecessary duties be removed, that all above a reasonable protection basis be reduced to that basis. This bill was made without any regard to the report of the Tariff Board and without any concern about the fate of the American woolen industry. They are utterly indifferent about the welfare of the laborers of our woolen mills. Only one conclusion can be reached and that is that the Democratic side of the House has sedulously striven to frame a measure that could not become a law, and yet they will proclaim with lusty lungs their undying fidelity to the cause of the "peepul." Every maneuver they have made in the way of tariff revision has been to mislead the country and to promote their own individual political fortunes. A shame on such trifling with the important affairs of the country.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I read a very interesting news item in a Washington newspaper. This news item recounted how a considerable number of the inhabitants of a Canadian village, visiting the city of Ogdensburg on the American side of the St. Lawrence on a holiday occasion, were arrested on their return to their native heath, and found to be in possession of large quantities of woolen dress goods, clothing, and like American material purchased on the American side and smuggled into Canada. As I read that item, I thought how unfortunate it was for those poor, misguided Canadians, who thus brought themselves within the meshes of the law and were threatened with jail sentences, how unfortunate it was that they had not heard the speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the majority floor leader, the other day when he called our attention to the alleged outrageous prices, the vastly enhanced cost of woolen goods in the United States, above their cost in other regions, where Republican tariff legislation is not upon the statute books. Those ladies and gentlemen—I understand there were some ladies among the smugglers—were still more unfortunate in that they had not heard the impassioned eloquence of the other gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], who a few moments ago made us fairly shiver, even in the present temperature of the atmosphere, as he told us of some people—I do not know where they live; probably he does not; somewhere in this blessed land—who have been shivering for three long and cold winters, as he assured us, because they were unable to buy woolen goods at the high prices fixed, he tells us, by Republican tariff legislation. If these misguided——

Mr. WARBURTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will not. I will yield to a free trader or I will yield to a protectionist. If these poor, misguided——

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming refuses to yield. The gentleman must not interrupt without permission.

Mr. MONDELL. These poor, misguided Canadians, uninformed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] or the other gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], were foolish enough to come from Canada with her preferential British tariff into the highly protected market of the United States and take their chances on a jail sentence in order to buy woolen goods on the American side of the line. How unfortunate that they had not been advised by our friends on the other side that these goods were much higher on our side of the line than on theirs.

Mr. Speaker, we have reason again to thank God that we have in the White House an honest, courageous President who believes in the principles and policy of protection to American labor and American manufactures. Our Democratic friends imagine that they are going into this campaign riding two horses going in opposite directions. They would be the most disappointed people in the world if the President were to sign this bill. Nothing would be so regrettable, from their standpoint, as to have the question of the tariff on wool eliminated from the campaign. They hope to go into the campaign declaring that the President has vetoed a wool bill that would have given relief to the poor people of these United States who wear woolen goods, and then, on the other hand, where conditions are not such as to make their claims based on this bill wise they expect to read from the ladylike speech made by their candidate for the Presidency when at Seagirt the other day he discussed the great question of the tariff. Says Prof. Wilson in his speech of acceptance, discussing the tariff:

> When we act we should act with caution and prudence, like men who know what they are about and not like those in love with a theory.

So, in the consuming centers, far from the flocks and herds of the farms and ranches——

Mr. WARBURTON. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not. I will yield either to a Republican or a Democrat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Far from the hum and whir of the machinery of our factories and our mills, they will declare that if it had not been for the President we would have had cheaper woolen goods.

And out on the plains of Wyoming and on the farms in Ohio and Michigan and in the factory towns they hope to have creep into the hearts of the people the soft and soothing words of the Sage of Seagirt, to the effect that the tariff should be revised with caution and prudence, and not as you are doing today, like those in love with a theory.

It is true that there are some Republicans, real Republicans, who voted for the bill which the President has vetoed. We know how it came about. A wool bill was brought in by gentlemen on that side, drawn without reference or regard to its effect upon American industries, the effect of which would have been to wipe out the sheep-growing industry in the Nation and close down the mills and the factories manufacturing their products.

It went to another body, and in that body men who believed in protection substituted another bill for it, not the sort of a bill I would care to vote for, and yet believed by the men who presented it to be fairly protective. It came back, and when the Democratic conferees in conference abandoned the claim which you made earlier in the session that you would not stand for a bill containing any protection, you finally reached an agreement with gentlemen who were so anxious to reduce Schedule K that, believers in protection though they are, they were willing to take chances on duties which they probably themselves believed to be dangerously low. And so when the bill came here for the final vote, it received the votes of a few men on this side who believe in protection and who hoped—and, I fear, hoped against their judgment—that the rates might be high enough to warrant their voting for the measure in preference to the present law, which they consider too high.

But no one anywhere who believes in a protective tariff can consistently vote to pass this bill over the President's veto, no matter how anxious he may be to make some reductions in Schedule K. The President has pointed the way for the revision of this schedule to rates as low as they can be placed without destroying industries. The bill prepared by the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee can be presented at once. We can pass it this afternoon; the Senate will accept it, and the President will be glad to sign it. It contains very considerable reductions from the present rates. If relief is needed, as you say, it will bring relief, and the President invites you to the work. We stand ready to do our part, and if you really wanted to fairly revise Schedule K you would not hesitate. The trouble is you do not want to revise the schedule; you want to agitate.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic platform recently adopted at Baltimore contains this statement:

> We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the Federal Government under the Constitution has no right or power to impose or collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue.

The Republican platform recently adopted at Chicago contains this provision:

> We hold that import duties should be high enough while yielding a sufficient revenue to protect adequately American industries and wages.

These are the two flags flying at the front of the ranks in this campaign. [Applause on the Republican side.] This bill is framed upon the Democratic platform, meets with the approval of the Democratic side of the House, because it is not protective to American industries or American wages and is for revenue only.

It has met with the disapproval of a Republican President in favor of the principles of the Republican platform and of protection to American industries and American wages. There is no halfway house between the two. [Applause on the Republican side.] No protection Republican can afford to vote for this tariff-for-revenue bill. We do not ask those who believe that the Federal Government has no power to impose a tariff as an aid to American industries to vote against the bill. We hope that you will stand to your colors, and I hope that those who claim to be protectionists on this side of the aisle will have the courage to put their claims into a vote and sustain the protection Republican platform and Republican principles. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, when I regard the veto messages the President of the United States is now sending to the Congress I can not refrain from a sense of pity. I think the gentleman who is sending these messages to us is a man of affable manners, honest in personal character, with a desire to do what he believes to be right, but he sits on his gilded throne at the White House and reminds one of the last of the Bourbon Kings of France—he still believes in the kingly power of the Republican Party.

Mr. Taft has not found as yet that his party's old-time rival and opponent is marshaled in the field and is marching upon his political columns. He has not as yet realized that discord, disunion, and treason have broken out in his own ranks, and that even the Swiss guard that patrols the doors of the palace can no longer be depended upon for loyalty to the throne.

Yet he sits apparently undisturbed while the people demand their rights, and he fires these paper shots in opposition to their wishes, believing that he can dam back the tidal wave of popular opinion with a veto message sent to Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He is not even consistent in the position he takes. When he was elected to the Presidency he led the people of the United States to believe that he was in favor of a revision of the tariff downward. He called on the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to send him a tariff bill that would redeem his campaign pledges. The tariff bill he received from the gentleman from New York was a repudiation of every Republican campaign pledge of 1908, and, more than this, the President of the United States and the gentleman from New York were both repudiated by the American people in the election of 1910. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, the President has sent you a message upholding his kingly power and seeking to destroy legislation twice sent to the White House in favor of the masses of the people, and says: "No; I will not sign this bill. I will not approve a bill repealing the woolen schedule of the Payne Tariff Act which reduces taxes that I admit are cruelly high. No; I will not approve of that bill, but I commend you to my partner in the crime of 1909, a partner who, with me, enacted the tariff bill that the American people repudiated in 1910, and if you pass his new bill I will sign that." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This is the message the President sends to the Representatives on the floor of this House of a free American people. The lines have divided on that side of the Chamber. A Progressive Party and a Republican Party stand in conflicting columns. It is for you on the other side of this Chamber to now take your position with respect to this battle line. The Republican Party, through the message of your President, through the speeches and the actions of your leaders, is proclaiming to-day that you believe still in the old-time principle of protection, as you call it, which means the maintenance of the tariff rates of the Dingley bill and of the Payne tariff bill which the people have repudiated.

This new Progressive Party on your side is demanding a revision of the tariff in the interest of the people. Here are the two roads and here is the dividing line. We Democrats ask you to-day to make your record at that desk and tell your constituents whether you stand with the gentleman from New York and the President of the United States for a repudiated stand-pat tariff policy, or whether you are going to stand with the Democratic Party and the La Follette party, in favor of a revision of this tariff downward. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This House has proved itself during this Congress sensitively responsive to the demands of the people for a reduction in the present high cost of living. Immediately upon the convening of this Congress in April, 1911, the Ways and Means Committee applied itself vigorously to the preparation of a bill reducing the duties of the wool schedule, which the President had so often referred to as "indefensible." This bill was prepared after a thorough consideration of all available data which the committee assembled with regard to woolgrowing and wool manufacturing. The measure was passed by Congress and sent to the President in August of last year. Notwithstanding the prerogative and responsibility given in the Constitution of the United States solely to the House of Representatives to originate and to devise measures of this character, the President promptly vetoed the bill, assigning as his reason for doing so that the Tariff Board, which had been appointed by him and which was responsive solely to him, had not completed an investigation which it was making for him and had not advised as to what revision of this schedule was necessary. Thus, notwithstanding his admission of the indefensible rates of the schedule and the responsibility resting solely upon Congress to provide the legislation covered by this measure, the President took the responsibility of vetoing this bill and of thereby continuing excessive rates on wool clothing to an extent of extra taxes on consumers of at least fifty millions of dollars a year.

But the Tariff Board finally reported, and its data were transmitted to Congress by the President in his message of December 20, 1911. These data were carefully analyzed by the Ways and Means Committee, and the analysis failed to reveal anything that required a single change in the rates fixed in the bill which the President had vetoed in August, 1911. Hence the same measure, after careful consideration of the Tariff Board's data by both Houses of Congress, was returned to the President at this session of Congress, and he has seen fit to again veto the action of Congress in reducing the indefensible rates of the wool schedule, claiming as his reason for vetoing it that the findings of the Tariff Board have not been properly interpreted by Congress. The President has, wittingly or unwittingly, blinded himself to the fact that the wool report of the Tariff Board has been thoroughly discredited by economists, statisticians, and practical students. The theory by which this Tariff Board made its wool investigation and projected its report is that of adjusting tariff rates on the basis of the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. This theory has even been publicly repudiated by the Tariff Board itself.

Notwithstanding admissions by the board and by the President that the theory of adjusting tariff duties set forth in the Republican platforms of 1904 and 1908 was impracticable in operation, the Tariff Board, under the direction of the President, has spent during the three years of its existence $550,000 of the people's money in operating on a theory which both the President and the board in the beginning knew and admitted to be false, impracticable, and worthless. The repudiation of this theory of fixing tariff duties on the basis of the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad is based upon the following clearly defined reasons:

First. The ascertainment of costs is in practice impossible. No board or commission has the power to demand cost statements from manufacturers or producers, and if it had, it could not, in the light of the above statement of the President, secure truthful data. Moreover, there is no way of obtaining statements of any kind from foreigners.

Second. If all manufacturers here and abroad were willing to throw open their books in an honest and impartial way, it would be of no service, because cost accounting is not always practiced by producers, and where it is practiced there is little or no agreement in the treatment of different elements of costs.

Third. If there were a perfect system of cost accounting in every manufacturing plant producing a given article throughout the world, knowledge of comparative costs in certain countries would be of no service, since costs in every competing country would have to be known before any conclusions could be arrived at as to what tariff rate was needed to protect a given country against the competition of others.

Fourth. If all these facts were known for every country, the difficulty would still be just as great as previously, unless it were known whether a duty were to be imposed for the purpose of equalizing cost between the best, the poorest, or the average, or the normal establishments in the several countries; otherwise the information about costs would be useless as a basis of tariff duty.

Fifth. To utilize a general cost analysis as a basis for tariff rates, it would be necessary to know the manufacturer's intentions with reference to the fixing of prices, because of the fact that many commodities are produced in groups or as by-products. It would also be necessary to know that the manufacturer had no disposition to establish "export prices" at rates lower than those that would be dictated by the cost of production.

For these and other valuable reasons the cost-of-production theory is both practically impossible and theoretically unsound as a basis for the establishment of tariff duties. Even the Republican Party has abandoned the theory, as evidenced by the fact that it was discarded and omitted in framing the Chicago platform of 1912. In hanging on to this thoroughly disreputed theory the President lags in the rear of progressive thought if the public is to take seriously the statement of his wool veto message.

The President undertakes to interpret the findings of the Tariff Board, and, because, as he asserts, the duties of the wool bill have not been fixed in accordance with his interpretation, the compromise wool bill is rejected. Who has made this interpretation? It is the work of a partisan board working on a partisan and impracticable theory. At the President's elbow stood a member of the Tariff Board who has placed his own interpretation on the board's findings, and the expression of this individual must be accepted instead of the carefully matured views of a large number of the Members of this House who have given much time, not only to the material submitted by the Tariff Board, but to all other available data concerning the wool industry in this and in other countries. Now, let us see what the actual conditions are. The following table may be regarded as setting forth, as well as it is possible to do, the conclusions as to the rates of duty justified by the Tariff Board report, compared with the rates of the present law and of the bill which the President has seen fit to veto:

Comparative equivalent ad valorem rates of duty on the imports of 1911 with those of H. R. 22262 and H. R. 22195, together with the rates computed from the Tariff Board report as equalizing cost of production at home and abroad.

The figures shown here as resulting from an interpretation of the Tariff Board report when brought into comparison with the bill vetoed by the President justly condemn his veto action and clearly show his lack of appreciation of the people's demand for cheaper clothing.

It is hardly necessary at this time to go into the details of the statistics of this bill further than as shown in this table, but it is amazing how the President could have sent to this Congress two messages in such conflict as to the facts. A year ago he repudiated and vetoed this bill because, as he said, he did not have information on which to sign a woolen bill. He signed, without information, the Payne bill, carrying its 90 per cent of protection, but he could not sign a bill reducing that 90 per cent to 48 per cent protection without the expert information of his clerks. As already stated, the facts of the Tariff Board report, so far as they went, sustained in the main our position, and we sent the same tariff bill back to the President, with the honest hope and expectation that if he meant what he said and was in favor of an honest revision of the tariff and was willing to take facts presented by his board he would then approve this bill and at least give some relief to the American people. But what do we find? Right at the beginning of his veto message he says he disapproves this bill because the tax levied on raw wool is not high enough to protect the wool industry of the United States. This is his language:

In any case, the report of the Tariff Board shows that the ad valorem duty of 29 per cent on raw wool, imposed in the bill now submitted to me, is inadequate to meet this difference in cost in the case of four-fifths of our total wool clip. The disastrous effect upon the business of our farmers engaged in wool raising can not be more clearly stated. To maintain the status quo in the wool-growing industry, the minimum ad valorem rate necessary, even for high-grade wool in years of high prices, would be 35 per cent.

This gentleman, who signed one of the highest tariff bills that was ever written in reference to the woolen schedule, now repudiates the acts of the men who have been sent here by the American people to legislate for them. He appeals to Congress, and what does he say?

I appeal to Congress to reconsider the measure, which I return without my approval, and to adopt a substitute therefor making substantial reductions below the rates of the present act, which the Tariff Board shows possible, without destroying any established industry or throwing any wage earner out of employment.

He also says in this message that he approves of the bill presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] when the revision of the wool bill was last before this House. Facts are facts, although the President of the United States does not seem willing to recognize them. He does admit that this bill carries 29 per cent ad valorem on raw wool. The ad valorem equivalents shown by the Tariff Board's report, worked out by experts, and presented heretofore in these remarks, show that 25 per cent ad valorem would cover even the wools that were embraced in the Ohio flocks, which they claimed needed protection. That is what his own board shows, and yet we, as a compromise in this bill, gave 29 per cent. He says that we must send him a bill calling for 35 per cent ad valorem, and yet he approves of the rates that are fixed in the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

If you will refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 2, 1912, pages 4026 to 4028, you will find a comparison of the rates of that bill worked out on the imports of 1911. That comparison shows the tax levied by the Payne substitute bill, which the President approves, would be 28.99 per cent ad valorem on wool on the skin, or the same rate as in the bill vetoed by the President.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. If that is correct, and you desire to reduce the duty on wool from the present law, why do you not accept this bill, then, and we will all be happy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If that were the only iniquity in the gentleman's bill, there would not be much difficulty, but I know, and the gentleman knows, that if it were not for a situation which commands him otherwise he would be glad to put raw wool on the free list for his industries. What he wants to do is to protect the American manufacturer to an extent to which he is not entitled to protection. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Referring again to the table of comparative taxes shown elsewhere in these remarks, it will be seen that there are two rates on unmanufactured wool in that bill: Wool on the skin, 28.99 per cent, and not on the skin, 30.66 per cent, compared with a straight ad valorem of 29 per cent in the bill which has been vetoed, and yet he sends this message to Congress and tells the American people that we are about to destroy the wool-growing industry and at the same time commends to our gracious consideration the bill of the gentleman from New York, while the rates on this item practically conform to ours. I ask you when the American people understand these facts, and they are facts, you can not deny, can there be any question as to what their decision will be?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, but I do deny them and have denied them time and again, and the rate shown by the Tariff Board calls for a duty of at least 35 or 36 per cent on wool.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has never denied the figures to which I have referred in the RECORD, worked out by the experts by applying the rates to the imports of 1911.

Mr. PAYNE. Worked out by what experts?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The experts of the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. I never saw the figures of the experts of whom the gentleman speaks, but I have seen the figures of the experts of the Tariff Board, experts who were equally competent; and I have figured it out a little myself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from New York knows perfectly well that one of the clerks in the committee who does much of this figuring was employed by the gentleman himself in the last Congress. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. I did not know that fact.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the gentleman is blind, for he confronts the clerk every time he walks into the committee room.

Mr. PAYNE. The committee in the last Congress confined itself to no one expert.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; and I think it probably would have been better if it had discarded some of the experts it did have. It is too bad, Mr. Speaker, that the facts put the gentleman from New York and the President of the United States in such an unenviable position in their efforts to destroy this bill.

An illustration of the inconsistency of the data of the Tariff Board and worthlessness of their conclusions is afforded by the following excerpts from page 11, volume 1, of their report:

In the western United States the capitalization per head of sheep (exclusive of land) is $5.30, upon which a gross profit of 6.2 per cent was realized during the 12 months under review.

The board adds further:

The interest rate in that region ranges from 8 to 10 per cent per annum.

If this be a truthful statement, why do not those persons who have invested their money in sheep sell them out and loan their funds at 8 to 10 per cent? Does the board think for a moment that this country will believe that the sheep barons of the West are philanthropists serving the country and the people by maintaining at a loss an American industry? No; the truth must be that the shepherds of the West have imposed upon this overcredulous Tariff Board, just like the American Woolen Co. and similar interested trust factors have engrafted their views into the overcredulous minds of Republican tariff makers until the consumers in this country are seriously burdened and oppressed with the high and exorbitant prices of woolen clothes.

The President picks out the duty on tops as representative of the improper manner in which Congress has, in his opinion, failed to conform to the findings of the Tariff Board. I can not do better in answer to his criticisms here than to quote the following from the analysis of the Tariff Board report by Mr. S. S. Dale, editor of the Textile World Record, of Boston, Mass., and who was for some time employed by the Tariff Board as their leading wool expert:

The report gives a comparative statement of the domestic cost of converting wool into tops but makes no attempt to give the cost of raw material. It is evident, however, that the difference in the total cost of a wool product must be known in order to apply the difference in cost principle in fixing tariff rates. The omission of any important item of cost makes the comparison worthless for that particular purpose. In the case of worsted tops the board has omitted the item of raw material. The variations in the cost of raw material, not only for tops but for other forms of wool manufactures, are so great from grade to grade and from time to time that its determination is impossible. This impossibility in the case of wool fabrics was recognized and frankly stated by the board, page 628, in these words: "The question of raw material was eliminated altogether, since this is such a fluctuating element." That is true of worsted tops as well as cloths. Turning to the board's investigation of the conversion cost of tops, attention is called to the fluctuating and uncertain elements involved as outlined on pages 640 and 641 of the report. Admitting these fluctuations and uncertainties does not eliminate them, and they alone would thwart the purpose of the inquiry. But on top of all these factors the board informs us, page 641, that the mill records disclose "the widest divergencies" in the conversion cost of worsted tops:

"In attempting to arrive at the cost of tops from a consideration of actual mill records for a given period of time, we have found the widest divergencies, due to the difference in output. For a six months' period in one mill the average cost of production for all tops was only 4.28 cents per pound, while for another six months' period in the same mill, running upon practically the same quality of tops, the actual average was 9.37 cents per pound. In the first period, however, the output was about three and one-half times the output in the second period. In the first case the mill was running overtime, and in the second case much of the machinery was idle, while the fixed and overhead charges continued the same."

The Tariff Board attempts to meet this situation by assuming a theoretical production on the basis of a full running time. This, however, is assuming a condition that is never found to prevail throughout the industry or continuously in any combing plant.

If so much emphasis had not been placed on the difference-in-cost theory, we might profitably stop here and accept the evidence disclosed by worsted tops as conclusive that the theory can not be applied to the revision of Schedule K. As far as tops are concerned we find that an item constituting approximately 90 per cent of the total cost has been omitted entirely, because it could not be determined, while the items making up the remaining 10 per cent are subject to "the widest divergencies." The conclusion is unavoidable that the board has not determined the difference between the domestic and foreign cost of tops.

Now, when you come down to the real crux of the proposition, by which the gentleman from New York and the President of the United States in this holy partnership seek to deprive the people of the United States of legislation in the people's interest on this important question, you want to put an enormous profit in your rate for the manufacturer. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You do not care anything about the sheep raiser on the plains of Wyoming or Montana, you do not care anything about the small manufacturer, but you are determined when it comes to the top industry to maintain enormous rates that will make enormous prices and guarantee enormous profits to watered capitalization throughout the United States.

I wish to call further attention to a few features of the bill prepared by the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee and which the President so heartily approves. When carpet wools are used in the manufacture of the cheaper clothing for the poor—and such is the case to some extent—the duty on this wool would be increased by the minority bill from 4 cents per pound, the rate of the present law, to 7 cents per pound, which is an increase of 75 per cent. This is certainly a very serious "joker" on the poor people of this country. As might be expected this measure, which has the President's approval, is not a revision in the interest of the consumer. Cheap clothing is taxed more than expensive clothing. Instead of carrying the 18 cents tax per scoured pound of the wool into the cloth, Mr. Taft would advance the scoured pound to 25 cents—that is, the weight of the wool content—and then add 35 per cent ad valorem as an additional tax. What is this equal to? Work it out on the importations for 1911 and it is found that the cheap cloth valued at not more than 40 cents per pound is equal to 105.42 per cent. On the higher grades of goods valued at 70 cents per pound that bill places the tax of 26 cents per pound on the wool content and 55 per cent ad valorem, which works out to an equivalent ad valorem rate of 49.72 per cent. This is consistent with what has been the former practice of the Republican tariff makers. The entire cost of production is covered by 100 per cent, yet they go above that for the cheaper class of goods and add 5 per cent additional; when they come to the expensive grades of goods worn by the wealthy, the tax figures out 49.72 per cent. The people are asked to take this character of adjustment as a relief from the present law, and the President says he will allow no more.

It is clear that the minority bill which the President praises was framed with little or no reference to the findings of the Tariff Board. The board secured and published no information on blankets, but notwithstanding this, the President is willing to fix a rate on the blanket paragraph. In 1910 there were 1,849 pounds of blankets imported, valued at $640. These paid duties of $598. The minority bill would tax these blankets at the equivalent ad valorem rate on the imports of 1911 of 103 per cent, compared with 93 per cent under the present law in 1910. Evidently the President is willing to favor an upward but not a downward revision of the tariff.

On the cheaper grades of flannels—those worn by the poor—valued at not more than 40 cents a pound, the President's bill would put 23½ cents a pound on the wool content and 20 per cent ad valorem. Work it out on the imports and it is found that 82.21 per cent is placed on these flannels, compared with 38 per cent in the compromise bill which the President has vetoed. When you come to the higher class of flannels valued at over 70 cents per pound the President would put 23½ cents per pound on the wool content and 30 per cent ad valorem. This works out to an equivalent tax of 57.8 per cent, compared with 82 per cent on the cheaper grades of flannel.

On women's dress goods the rate in this compromise bill, which the President has vetoed, is 38 per cent, and on some of the higher-grade goods the rate is as low as 31 per cent, but on the cheaper grades of women's dress goods your rates go up to 112 per cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You are doing like you always do, legislating in the interest of the rich and laying the burden of your taxes on the helpless poor. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Throughout the bill which the President advocates the ad valorem rates work out to a higher tax on cheap wearing apparel than on expensive apparel. Now, think of the presumption of the President in asking intelligent representatives of a free people, clamoring for tariff revision, to compromise on such a bill.

Mr. PAYNE. What expert told you that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In the bill which the President—and we know what he stands for—he does not "stand at Armageddon and battle for the Lord" [applause on the Democratic side], but he sits at the White House and battles for the gentleman from New York. Mr. Taft has made his interpretations; the people will next make theirs, and surely the "mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small." [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

APPENDIX.

The criticisms of the public press of the President's wool veto are very pronounced, as will be seen from the following representative editorial excerpts:

[From the New York Evening Post, Aug. 9, 1912.]

RELIEF AGAIN VETOED.

President Taft's veto, for the second time, of a bill reducing the duties on wool and woolen manufactures, is a proceeding hard to explain and still harder to justify. He may be acting from a sincere sense of duty, but it will be difficult to make the country believe it. People can not have failed to notice the suggestive articles which have appeared in the Boston Herald and other protectionist newspapers, confidently predicting a presidential veto of any bill altering the wool duties, and frankly connecting it with the exigencies of the campaign. The intimation was clear that the protected manufacturers demanded a veto as a condition precedent to campaign contributions. We do not say that this has been a motive with Mr. Taft, but it has obviously been such in the minds of his campaign managers. The veto will go before the country violently under suspicion that it was written for political effect.

The President, to be sure, gives his reasons, but they are far from convincing. Last year, when he vetoed substantially the same measure, he had at least one argument—the Tariff Board had not completed its investigation of the wool schedule. Until it had done so, President Taft affirmed, he would not depart from the principle that Congress must wait for expert guidance in reducing the tariff. It seemed at the time that he should have been willing to give the consuming public the benefit of the doubt, especially when it was a case of cutting down high duties which he himself had pronounced "indefensible." But he preferred to side with the beneficiaries of Schedule K. He told us that we could get no relief till the report of the Tariff Board was in hand. Well, it came at last, and, when it did, left the Payne-Aldrich rates on wool not a leg to stand on. It showed how duty after duty levied in Schedule K was prohibitive or extortionate. Without recommending any specific reductions—that was not its function—it presented a mass of statistics and analyses which rendered it certain that large reductions could be made without harming anybody but monopolists, and greatly to the advantage of the purchasers of clothing and blankets and carpets. These conclusions the President now accepts, as he could not avoid doing, but by some mysterious process of deduction he seeks to show that the duties proposed in the vetoed bill are a shade or a fraction too low here and there, and hence would mean injury to the woolgrowers and actual disaster to the woolen manufacturers.

A brief comparison of the figures will show on what slippery ground the President chooses to stand. He declares that the reduction in duties on raw wool ought not to exceed 20 per cent. A bill making such a cut he says he would promptly approve. But what is the amount of the reduction which he vetoes? The percentages, based on the actual importations of last year, were given to the Senate by Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On clothing wool the ad valorem rate under the existing tariff figures out at 44.5 per cent. The duty which the President vetoes is 29 per cent. But 20 per cent off 44.5 would leave the rate at 35 per cent. How does Mr. Taft know that this would mean safety, while 29 per cent would mean ruin? Especially how does he know it, in view of the fact that at least one-fifth of all the wool grown in this country is a by-product, the sheep being raised for the profit derived from mutton? The comparisons might be extended all up and down Schedule K. For example, on "combed wool or tops and on wool or hair advanced in any manner beyond the washed or scoured condition," the Payne-Aldrich duties range from 73 to 252 per cent. Will Mr. Taft seriously maintain that no more than 20 per cent can be taken off those monstrous rates without, as he says, causing "irretrievable injury to the woolgrowing industry"? The thing is absurd on its face. If a 20 per cent reduction from 252 could be endured, it is certain that one of 25 or 30 or even 50 could be.

Another excuse which the President gives is that he was elected on a platform pledging him to "maintain a degree of protection necessary to offset the differences in cost of production here and abroad." But that little protectionist dodge of 1908 has now been completely discredited—so much so that the Republican platform of this year shamefacedly abandoned it entirely. And the one thing that did more than anything else to destroy the notion that you can frame a tariff on the basis of cost of production at home and abroad was precisely the wool report of the Tariff Board. Again and again in that document was the admission made that trustworthy figures showing the true cost of production could not be obtained. Thus, in reference to wool by-products, noils, and the various wastes the board explicitly said: "No comparison as to the cost of production of such products can be made." Again and again in the report do we find phrases about there being "fluctuating" elements and "the widest divergencies," which made anything like an accurate determination of the cost of production impossible. Yet the President in his veto leans upon this theory, which skilled economists and experienced business men knew from the first to be hollow, and which his own Tariff Board was forced to admit to be a broken reed.

The force of inconsistency could hardly go further. President Taft, to be sure, asserts that he is anxious to secure reduced wool duties, and urges Congress to stay in session until it can frame a bill which he will sign. But there is a shorter way. Let Congress pass the bill over his veto.

[From the Baltimore Sun, Aug. 10, 1912.]

Mr. Taft stands firm behind a high tariff wall. He will make his fight from the citadel of protection. We had hoped for his own sake, as well as that of the country, that he would sign the modified and moderate tariff bills which have been sent to him by Congress. They are not all the people have the right to demand, but, like the half loaf, they would have been better than nothing at all, and would have afforded a measure of relief to millions of people oppressed by the high cost of living.

But Mr. Taft refused to help them. He bends all his energies and all his mind to finding an excuse for standing by the protected interests instead of the unprotected people.

The President's present course gives final proof that nothing need ever be expected from him in aid of tariff revision, despite the protestations in his veto message that he wants to sign the proper kind of wool bill. He would sign no bill presented to him that would give any real relief. He is now and forever allied with those who think they ought to have a perpetual license to pluck the American consumer. Those who vote for him will do so with the full knowledge that Mr. Taft will not lift his little finger to lighten popular burdens if lightening those burdens means lessening even in the slightest degree the enormous profits of the New England mill owners and other favorite and favored sons of the high tariff system.

[From the New York Times, Aug. 10, 1912.]

The President has vetoed for the second time a bill reducing duties on wool and woolens. It was passed avowedly to "put him in a hole," and, as politicians reason, that was a shrewd thing to do. We don't like this work of tariff legislation; it is too much on the order of the old "trick and dicker," with a slight difference in methods. The device, however, is a sign that the politicians realize the existence of a deep, popular desire to have the tariff reduced, and that is important. The issue having been made up the President's veto will be considered in deciding it. We don't think it will strengthen the protectionist party. In it, in substance, Mr. Taft says: "You can have no reduction of the tariff on wool that does not meet my notion of what the Tariff Board's report recommends." But the report of the Tariff Board is so vague, confusing, and pointless that no two persons are likely to have the same notion of it. The voters who want a real reduction of the tariff will not consent to be put off until a majority of the Congress and the President can interpret alike a report of this sort. The impression on the public mind will be that the position of the President is an excuse for not seriously reducing the tariff. This impression will be confirmed by Mr. Taft's insistence on the absurd principle of tariff duties equal to the difference in costs at home and abroad. It is entirely impracticable to fix any such difference correctly. The Tariff Board does not do it and can not do it. It admits that there is no definite cost here or abroad. That costs differ widely as between different factories or farms in the same section, as between the product of the same farm or factory, in one year and another. No uniform or accurate or complete record of costs is made, the manufacturers and growers do not know what real costs are. In the great body of cases they could not find out. Foreign costs are actually difficult to ascertain. Now, to say that the consumer shall be taxed to meet the difference between two unknown quantities is, logically, an absurdity and morally impudent.

Mr. Taft could not very well help vetoing the wool tariff bill again. When it was first presented to him he might have signed it with credit to himself and without injury to business or industry. Such action at this time would largely have taken the tariff out of politics, which is, of course, desirable. But he didn't see his way plain to take that action. He must suffer the consequences. His second veto does not strengthen him. It rather weakens him. But, in our judgment, it will tend, on the whole, to bring nearer a real and sound reduction of the tariff.

[From the Springfield Daily Republican, Aug. 10, 1912.]

In his second veto message the President urges that the Tariff Board's report does not justify so great a cut in the duties as the bill carries. He feels obliged to insist on such a reduction only as would still leave the wool tariff on a protective basis. A certain bill to which he refers, drafted by the minority of the Ways and Means Committee, represents the views of himself and his party, and that bill Mr. Taft announces he would sign. It is the only bill, in his opinion, which covers adequately the difference in the cost of production here and abroad. The cost of production theory, however, has been so far discredited in the Tariff Board reports, under the searching analysis of economists and tariff experts, that the Republican platform this year omitted all reference to it. The question of what percentages ad valorems are sufficient for the wool-growing and woolen-cloth industries is one for specialists to quibble over and selfish interests to quarrel over. Senator LA FOLLETTE is a protectionist, and he indorses this bill which the President has now vetoed twice. Other protectionists differ among themselves as to what the reduction in the duties should be. Should there be no relief whatever to the people because the doctors can not agree upon the precise number of pills? The President is severely consistent perhaps—although he did not wait for reports by the Tariff Board when negotiating a trade agreement with Canada—yet the consumer continues to be the victim of an "indefensible" tariff schedule.

[From the New York World, Aug. 10, 1912.]

These are Mr. Taft's days of grace. In them is presented his last chance. How is he improving them? By vetoing and by threatening to veto the moderate nonpartisan bills passed by Democrats and Republicans in Congress to reduce in some measure the cost of living. It is a sorry ending of a career that might have been honorable if not distinguished.

A year ago he withheld his approval of these bills on the ground that in the absence of reports from the Tariff Board he and Congress lacked knowledge. This year he kills reform because he fears that it is ill considered and goes too far.

Is this pique, is it partisanship, or is it plain obstinacy? It is not principle. How are we to explain these acts of a man who did not hesitate to sign the outrageous Payne-Aldrich revision upward and who needed no advice from a Tariff Board when he drove Canadian reciprocity through Congress? He has done the things he promised not to do and failed to do the things he repeatedly promised he would do. Three times in three years he has proved false to his pledges and false to the people. He broke faith with them quickly. He has disobeyed and defied them since. It is only to the greedy interests that write tariffs and grow rich upon their extortions that he has proved true.

Surrounded on all sides by enemies, critics, and friends estranged, he is loyal in nothing but his unfailing service to a privileged class which, like his administration, is doomed. * * *

Mr. Taft might have made himself the Sir Robert Peele of America. He might have linked his name forever with a reform that cheapened the food and clothing of the people. The country was ready for it. The country demanded it.

WOOL MEN ELATED AT REVISION VETO.

[Special telegram to the Public Ledger.]

BOSTON, August 9.

New England woolen manufacturers were elated to-night on learning that President Taft had vetoed the wool tariff bill. It was fear of a reduction of the duties that caused the Lawrence strike, making the Lawrence mills cut wages when hours were reduced by a State law. Leaders of the woolen industry were apprehensive that if the wool bill became a law it would be necessary to cut wages, with the probable consequence of another strike.

William Whitman, president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, said to-night that the action of the President was pleasing to him personally and to all men engaged in the industry in Boston, the greatest wool market in the world.

Theodore Justice, of Philadelphia, a retired wool importer, who is in Rockport for the summer, said that President Taft realized that if he had not exercised the veto he would have had the responsibility of destroying an industry.

"President Taft," he said, "well knows that whenever the duties have been reduced on wool the number of flocks of sheep have diminished and the supply of flesh food has decreased, and there has been an increase in the cost of living. The President also knows that everything that is produced in a wool factory is cheaper now than ever before and that wages paid by woolen mills are greater than ever before."

HELD FOR USING ALIEN LABOR—WEALTHY MILL OWNER CHARGED WITH VIOLATING FEDERAL STATUTES.

BOSTON, August 9.

Francis Vernon Willey, of Bradford, England, son of Francis Willey, formerly lord mayor of that city, was arrested here to-day on a charge of conspiring to bring English operatives into this country in violation of the contract-labor law.

Willey is treasurer of the Barre Wool Combing Co., of Barre, Mass., and is a member of the firm of Francis Willey & Co., wool manufacturers, of Bradford and Boston.

Mr. Willey was taken into custody in the Federal building after he had testified at the hearing before United States Commissioner Grinnell of Arthur T. Saville, of Bradford, charged with importing English mill operatives.

Willey is alleged to have conspired with Saville on July 25 to bring immigrants into this country from Montreal in violation of the contract-labor law. Three immigrants were arrested at Newport, Vt., where they are being detained by immigration officials.

While Mr. Willey was on the witness stand to-day he admitted that a cablegram sent to him referred to people who were coming into this country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to pass the bill the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 174, nays 80, answered "present" 10, not voting 126, as follows:

During the calling of the roll,

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order. The House is not in order. Members can not hear their names as they are called by the Clerk. I ask that the rule be enforced touching the appearance of Members at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The rule is that Members shall not come to the Clerk's desk at any time, especially when the roll is being called. The House will be in order. Gentlemen will take their seats and refrain from conversation.

At the conclusion of the roll call the Clerk announced the following pairs:

On all questions affecting vetoes by the President:

Mr. MACON and Mr. LEGARE with Mr. LOUD.

Mr. MOORE of Texas and Mr. RANDELL of Texas with Mr. SMITH of California.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas and Mr. EDWARDS with Mr. DALZELL.

Mr. KONOP and Mr. FIELDS with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio and Mr. GARNER with Mr. HINDS.

Mr. TUTTLE and Mr. COX of Ohio with Mr. NYE.

Mr. CULLOP and Mr. SCULLEY with Mr. BROWNING.

Mr. MURRAY and Mr. RICHARDSON with Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota.

Mr. BOEHNE and Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan.

Mr. CALLAWAY and Mr. HARDWICK with Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. REDFIELD and Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi with Mr. LAWRENCE.

Mr. PUJO and Mr. PETERS with Mr. MCCALL.

Mr. BRANTLEY and Mr. SHEPPARD with Mr. BATES (ending Wednesday).

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama and Mr. BARTLETT with Mr. HARTMAN.

Mr. FRANCIS and Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. TILSON.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia and Mr. GARRETT with Mr. FORDNEY.

Mr. MCHENRY and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. CANTRILL and Mr. MCGILLICUDDY with Mr. GUERNSEY.

Mr. DAUGHERTY and Mr. ELLERBE with Mr. CURRIER.

Mr. BROUSSARD and Mr. BURGESS with Mr. YOUNG of Michigan.

Mr. DICKSON of Mississippi and Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL with Mr. SLEMP.

Mr. SMALL and Mr. STACK with Mr. VARE.

Mr. COX of Indiana and Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. AMES.

Mr. SHERWOOD and Mr. PALMER with Mr. HENRY of Connecticut.

Mr. LITTLETON and Mr. DIES with Mr. HIGGINS.

Mr. HOBSON and Mr. GUDGER with Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia.

Mr. HARRISON of New York and Mr. BELL of Georgia with Mr. LANGHAM.

Mr. ROUSE and Mr. CRAVENS with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. AYRES and Mr. MCDERMOTT with Mr. PATTON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUPRÉ and Mr. GEORGE with Mr. FULLER.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE and Mr. GOULD with Mr. SIMMONS.

Mr. LAMB and Mr. KINDRED with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma.

Mr. PEPPER and Mr. WILSON of New York with Mr. STEPHENS of California.

Mr. LINDSAY and Mr. BARNHART with Mr. PRAY.

Mr. ESTOPINAL (against) with Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts (to sustain).

For the session:

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. ANDRUS.

Until further notice:

Mr. MAYS with Mr. THISTLEWOOD.

Mr. SPARKMAN with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. ASHBROOK with Mr. KOPP.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri with Mr. DYER.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina with Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. RUBEY with Mr. HAWLEY (Mr. HAWLEY reserves the right to vote on all measures pertaining to his State).

The SPEAKER. All gentlemen who are not before the desk for the purpose of recording their votes will please take their seats.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I find I am paired with Mr. CULLOP and Mr. SCULLY. I voted "nay." I wish to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BROWNING, and he answered "Present."

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded as voting "yea."

Mr. ESTOPINAL. I am paired, and I wish to withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. ESTOPINAL, and he answered "Present."

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear my name called.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman was not in the Hall.

The SPEAKER. There is no use to get excited about that.

Mr. MANN. I do not propose to.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall on the first roll call?

Mr. LEVY. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. And on the next roll call was the gentleman in the Hall listening?

Mr. LEVY. Yes. I heard the Clerk call down among the M's.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall?

Mr. LEVY. Yes; I was right up in the Hall, inside the railing, among the seats.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LEVY, and he voted "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be recorded.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman inside the Hall, listening?

Mr. LEWIS. I was at the door of the cloakroom, if that embraces the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman knows whether it is inside the door or not.

Mr. LEWIS. I do not know what the interpretation of the word "Hall" is, whether it embraces the cloakroom or not.

The SPEAKER. The only question the Chair has a right to ask is whether the gentleman was in the Hall, listening, when his name was called.

Mr. LEWIS. I can not answer that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARBURTON. I think a man has the right to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not entertaining arguments on the subject. The question is, Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening, when his name was called?

Mr. LEWIS. I can not answer otherwise than that I was standing in the door of the cloakroom waiting, and did not hear my name called, owing to the noise and other interruptions. I was listening for it and waiting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that brings the gentleman within the rule, although it is a close shave. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Does the Chair rule that that brings the gentleman within the rule?

The SPEAKER. It is hard to tell. Suppose the question arose if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], standing where he is now, was in the Hall or not. That is about a parallel case to the Lewis case. The Chair, from his own eyesight, would decide that Mr. KITCHIN was inside of the Hall.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but that does not decide the case of the gentleman from Maryland. The Chair can not see the gentleman from Maryland, to know where he was.

The SPEAKER. That is absolutely true, but——

Mr. MANN. I think the rule——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman says he was in the door of the Hall, listening for his name to be called.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman himself has to answer the question in the affirmative, under the rule, and to say that he was in the Hall listening for his name; and if he is unwilling to do that, it does not seem to me the Chair can decide it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] states the rule correctly; and really the only question that the Chair is expected to ask of a Member is whether he was in the Hall listening.

Mr. JAMES. But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maryland says that he was back there at the door and listening. That is in the Hall.

Mr. MANN. He knows whether he was in the Hall. Let him answer the question.

The SPEAKER. It rests entirely with the gentleman from Maryland. If he says he was in the Hall listening, the Chair will have his name recorded. If he was not, he is not entitled to have it recorded.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, he must have been in the Hall, listening, when his name was called.

The SPEAKER. He says he was listening.

Mr. JAMES. He says he was standing there for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Maryland himself say?

Mr. LEWIS. Under the interpretation of the Speaker, I should say I was in the Hall listening for my name.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LEWIS, and he voted "yea."

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I was present when my name was called the first time and missed it, but stepped out and then came back in again.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LAFFERTY, and he voted "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GILLETT, and I desire my name to be called again.

The SPEAKER. How did the gentleman vote in the first place?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I voted "present." I desire to remain silent and protect the pair.

Mr. JAMES. He merely withdraws his vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I desire to remain silent and protect my pair.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to get this record straightened out, and for that purpose has asked the gentleman how he voted in the first instance.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I voted "present."

The SPEAKER. How does the gentleman desire to vote now?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I desire to withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman can not do that. The Chair can count the gentleman just as well as if he voted "present." The gentleman has a perfect right to vote "present." A Member can not withdraw his vote absolutely, because the Chair will count him if it is necessary.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I voted "present" with the understanding that I was paired. I find I am not, and I wish to be recorded as voting "yea."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea," but I have discovered that I am paired with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], and I wish to withdraw my vote yea and to vote "present."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. OLMSTED. If I correctly understood the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY], he said that he was in the House when his name was called the first time, but did not vote, and that when it was called the second time he was not in the Hall. My inquiry is whether he was entitled to vote.

The SPEAKER. If that is what he said, he was not entitled to vote.

Mr. LAFFERTY. That is not what I said. I said I was in the Hall when my name was called the first time, but failed to catch it, and then stepped out; and when I came in again my name had just been passed on the second roll call.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair understood the gentleman to say.

Mr. MANN. That is the same thing.

The SPEAKER. No; there is a difference. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] said, as the Chair recalls, that the gentleman from Oregon said he was in the Hall of the House when his name was called the first time and did not vote and then went out. Now, that would imply that he was in the House and heard his name called and did not vote.

Mr. OLMSTED. That was my understanding and the understanding of other gentlemen around me.

The SPEAKER. There is no question of veracity at all.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I am willing to leave it to the notes of the Official Reporter as to what I said. If I said what the gentleman from Pennsylvania says I said, I will withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he voted "yea."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, would it be proper to ask for a recapitulation of the vote?

The SPEAKER. It depends on how close it is. If it is a close vote, the Chair will order a recapitulation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I would like a distinct ruling upon the proposition when a man is in the House the first time his name is called and does not vote, even conceding that he did not hear his name, but he knows he did not vote, is he entitled to vote after the roll call when, instead of voting on the second roll call, he leaves the House?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is making a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. OLMSTED. If he is absent during the second roll call, can he come back into the House afterwards and still vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know that there is any rule about it, but the practice has been that the Speaker asks the Member who wants to vote whether he was in the Hall listening when his name was called. If he says yes, he is entitled to vote.

Mr. OLMSTED. He has not yet said that he was listening for it. He said he did not catch it.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I think the statement bears the interpretation that I was listening the first time, and this is the first time I have ever had occasion to vote at the conclusion of the roll call when I have failed to answer the first time and was present but was not right in the Hall the second time.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should like very much to have a ruling on that question.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the Speaker is called upon to make a ruling, nor do I believe that the rule requires that a man must be in the Hall when his name is called both times in order to be entitled to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the gentleman. There are 174 Members voting to pass the bill over the President's veto. There are 80 Members voting against it. There are 10 present who did not vote at all. Two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the Chair is of the opinion that it is those Members only who vote that are to be considered, and therefore that this bill is passed over the President's veto. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Does the Journal show that 10 Members of this House voted "present"?

The SPEAKER. It will show it in the morning. It will show that 174 voted in the affirmative, 80 in the negative, and 10 "present."

Mr. CANNON. And the Chair holds that the 10 present do not constitute a part of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules, if this point is to be ruled upon, that they constitute a part of the House for the purpose of making a quorum. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I call the Speaker's attention to the precedent in the Fourth of Hinds, sections 3537 and 3538.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just examined the precedents, and they do not carry out the footnote. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It says "the two-thirds vote required to pass the bill is two-thirds of the Members present. Fourth of Hinds, 3537 and 3538, with a footnote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair took pains to hunt that up; he made up his mind that if there were two decisions on one side and none on the other, he would follow them.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That is from the syllabus.

The SPEAKER. It is from the syllabus, and the syllabus misled whoever made the book.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Being a constitutional question, I hope the Chair will amplify his decision.

The SPEAKER. There were 174 votes one way and 80 votes the other, and 174 is more than twice as much as 80.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. In view of the very clear statement on page 82 of the Manual, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to lay the gentleman's appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's citation?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It is on page 82 of the Manual.

The SPEAKER. I know where the citation is, but what are the sections referred to?

Mr. OLMSTED. It is section 101.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And the precedents are found in Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, sections 3537 and 3538.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will allow me to make a suggestion in that connection——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is nothing before the House. The gentleman from Massachusetts rose to a parliamentary inquiry, and he appealed from the decision of the Chair on a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the gentleman from Alabama states the case exactly as it is. The gentleman from Massachusetts evidently arose to try and persuade the Chair to change his decision, but the Chair adhered to his original opinion, and it was from his original decision that the gentleman appealed, and the gentleman from Alabama moves to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as it was my motion to which the gentleman refers, I want to say that when an answer to a parliamentary inquiry is given it does not preclude the raising of a point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will yield a minute, I do not care to cut him off from the right to discuss the point, but I would like to come to a decision as to how much time it will take.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I only ask for sufficient time to consult the text of the decisions.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. A while ago the Speaker announced, when the gentleman from Illinois inquired if the Journal would show that 10 Members were present, that it would show that they were present the next morning. Is there any authority under the Constitution or any rule for the Journal to show anything except the names of those who voted "aye" and those who voted "no," in accordance with section 7, Article I?

The SPEAKER. There may not be any authority except the uniform practice of the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The Constitution is squarely against it.

The SPEAKER. Against what?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Against recording those who vote "present." It reads this way:

> But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House, respectively.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair was going to read to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman has read has nothing to do with recording those present on the Journal. Mr. Speaker, the Constitution requires those voting for and against the bill to be recorded in the Journal. The Constitution does not affect the rules of the House in reference to recording those present.

The citation of the gentleman from Massachusetts, which the gentleman from Massachusetts has referred to in the Manual, which provides that the count shall be based upon those present, is a citation made to distinguish between counting two-thirds of those present and two-thirds of the entire membership of the House. The reading of the Constitution is, "If approved by two-thirds of that House it shall become a law." And the first question which arose in reference to a veto was whether that meant two-thirds of those present, meaning thereby those who voted, or two-thirds of the entire membership of the House. For instance, to-day the bill would not be passed if the Constitution required two-thirds of the entire membership of the House, and it was ruled that the language of the Constitution requiring that it should be approved by two-thirds of that House did not require two-thirds of the entire membership, and it was for that purpose that the citation was put in the Manual.

The citations in Hinds' Precedents are to carry out that theory that it requires two-thirds of those present, meaning those voting. It has invariably been so held. The practice in the House every day on the passage of bills, and there is no distinction beween the passage of a bill in the first instance and the passage of a bill over the veto of the President, except in the number required, is that those voting for a bill are counted on one side and those voting against the bill are counted upon the other side; and the only purpose for which those answering present are counted is to make up a quorum.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose two Members had voted to pass a bill over the veto and one Member had voted against and enough to make a quorum had answered present, would the bill be passed?

Mr. MANN. It would, and we pass bills every day when there is not a single soul voting aye or no, a quorum being present, and the Journal shows that the House passes the bill, and I have repeatedly seen bills passed when only one Member voted aye, and have sometimes seen them defeated when only one man voted no.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, that is not upon all fours with this case, because the Journal shows the number that voted and the number that did not vote and the number who were present.

Mr. MANN. But the Reed rule itself expressly provides, not merely for answering "present," but for counting a quorum when gentlemen are in the Hall and gentlemen answer "present," and then the majority who vote decides the question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my appeal.

Mr. JAMES. Then there is nothing pending before the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Speaker to have the vote recapitulated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the position that the present Speaker has always taken upon the question of recapitulation. He held the same position when he was upon the floor of the House, and he takes it now and always will, that if the vote is close enough to raise a doubt about whether it is really a full expression, there ought to be a recapitulation of the matter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, while I think the Speaker is correct in his ruling, yet if the Speaker were wrong, the vote will be fairly close, and, therefore, I think the vote ought to be recapitulated.

The SPEAKER. That is true. Before that recapitulation the Chair begs leave to state his own views about the question that is now before the House. I do not know that it is necessary at all, but still the gentleman from Massachusetts wanted the Chair to elaborate his opinion.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted just a minute before the Chair rules?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The Chair has already ruled, and is not going to change his ruling, but is going to give the reasons for it.

Mr. OLMSTED. I understand. The Constitution provides that when a bill has been vetoed by the President it shall be returned, with his objections, to that House in which it originated, and be there reconsidered, and that—> if, after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a law.

In impeachment proceedings the Senate may convict with "the concurrence of two-thirds of the Members present." That is the language of the Constitution. But in the case of a veto the language is "two-thirds of that House." I incline to the belief that the framers of the Constitution meant two-thirds of all the Members, but concede that in 1845, and again in 1856, it was held to mean two-thirds of those present. (4 Hinds, 3537–3538.) Now, in order to declare this bill passed, you will have to go one step further, and hold that it means two-thirds of those voting, although less than two-thirds of those present. That has never yet been ruled in a veto case. We have been very particular in the rules of the House to provide accurately where we mean two-thirds of those voting and not two-thirds of the entire membership or two-thirds of those present. Thus, in Rule XXVII, we provide that the Speaker may entertain a motion to suspend the rules, but that—no rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the Members voting, a quorum being present.

That is the rule for suspension of rules in the House, but it does not apply to a constitutional vote to pass a bill over the veto of the President. The total membership of this House is 394. Two-thirds of that would be 263. The number present is 264. Two-thirds would be 176. But there have been cast only 174 votes in favor of the passage of the bill. The Constitution contemplates that every Member present shall vote. Ten Members merely answered "present." Does that fact enable less than two-thirds of those present to pass the bill? I question whether it has received the vote required by the Constitution.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will indulge me for a moment, I desire to state that the ruling of the Chair is correct. This question is determined by the Constitution and not by any rule of the House. The Constitution says:

But in all cases—

Of veto—

the votes of the Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for or against the bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively.

That is the constitutional and mandatory way of voting in such cases. No vote, except it be yea or nay, can be counted in determining the decision of the House. That is the way it is determined—by a yea and nay. If you take into the count those answering "present," you might count them as having voted in the negative and attempt in an unauthorized way to sustain the veto. They have voted neither way. The only way that a Member can vote upon this proposition and have his vote counted and entered on the Journal is to vote either yea or nay. [Applause.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. If I may have the permission to answer it.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is simply this: If there were a quorum present and on a resolution to pass a bill over a veto of the President only the gentleman from Alabama and myself should vote "aye" and another man vote "no," would the motion be carried?

Mr. CLAYTON. No; a quorum to do that must be present, if that question is raised.

Mr. OLMSTED. But I say a quorum being present, could the vote of the gentleman from Alabama and my own, as opposed to one other gentleman, pass the bill over the President's veto?

Mr. CLAYTON. There must not only be a quorum present, but a quorum voting on the proposition. I do not think a veto can be overruled by a sub silentio vote. The voting up or down of the proposition must be determined by a yea-and-nay vote, not by a mere notation of the presence of some Members. The answer "present" of a Member is not more than the notation of his presence. The answer "present" is not recognized in the Constitution as a vote on overruling or sustaining a veto. The vote must be yea or nay, and "present" can not be counted in either the affirmative or negative. A quorum made up of yea-and-nay votes in this case has voted, and the decision of the Chair is correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I think there is sufficient doubt about this question to make it important that the House should not dispose of it hurriedly or without proper consideration. As the Speaker has rendered his decision, I do not wish to argue against his ruling, but I do wish to express some views, which, although not positive convictions, may well be considered. I sincerely trust that the Speaker has accurately construed the constitutional requirements. Unless in the discussion which may ensue it appears somewhat conclusively that he is in error, I shall support his contention in whatever subsequent manner the question may arise. The questions that have arisen heretofore in the House have been, as has been stated, as to whether the two-thirds required was two-thirds of the entire membership of the House or two-thirds of the House as constituted at the time the vote is taken. This House as at present constituted is not of the Members who on the question are recorded as voting "yea" or "nay," but it is my impression that it is constituted of the Members who record themselves "yea" or "nay" and those answering "present," and who have made their presence known in a manner that can not be eliminated from the records of the House.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just one moment. I have hurriedly examined some of the commentaries upon the Constitution. Watson, in his history of the Constitution, in its application and construction, calls attention to the fact that this question has never been considered by any Federal judicial tribunal; but the Supreme Court of Wyoming, in Brown v. Nash, in the first Wyoming, has held that, under the constitutional provision, "two-thirds of the members of each house" (without specifying whether it is two-thirds of the members-elect or two-thirds of the members present) must vote for a bill before it can be passed over the governor's veto meant that the vote of two-thirds of the members actually present was necessary, and that two-thirds of the members voting were not sufficient when other members of the body are present.

That portion of paragraph 2, of section 7, of Article I of the Constitution, which is pertinent to the question, is as follows:

If, after two-thirds of that House (to which the bill has been returned by the President with his objections) shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House, respectively.

The question here depends entirely upon what is meant by "two-thirds of that House."

It has been long and definitely settled that two-thirds of the entire membership of the House is not required in such instances. In Mason on the Veto Power, it is pointed out—page 117—that the original proposal was "two-thirds of each branch of the National Legislature." "This phrase," he states, "could only mean," he says, "two-thirds of all the Members in each branch of Congress." When the resolution was taken up by the committee of detail the wording was changed, so that a bill to become a law in spite of the veto must be passed by two-thirds of each House. The change in the wording is significant, for in the Constitution the word "House" is in such connection used as synonymous with "quorum."

The question seems to have been definitely settled in the Senate in 1856, when a veto of President Pierce came up for reconsideration. Mr. Mason says that "the 31 votes cast in favor of passing the bill over the President's objections made two-thirds of the Members present, but not two-thirds of the total number of Senators." It was declared to be sufficient to pass the bill, and this precedent has since been accepted.

It did not determine, however, whether those actually present but not voting should be counted. Even to-day in the Senate only Senators voting "yea" or "nay" are counted to make a quorum. A different rule prevails in the House, and the Supreme Court has upheld Speaker Reed's ruling that Members present and refusing to answer may be noted on the Journal as present and counted to make a quorum.

Mr. Speaker, let us assume there were present in the House 197 Members—a quorum—and 131 voted in favor of the proposition and 60 voted against it and 6 answered "present." What would be the result? A quorum being present, two-thirds of those voting would have voted in the affirmative. Would such a vote be "two-thirds of the House"? Is it sufficient that two-thirds of those who vote, a quorum being present, or does it require two-thirds of those who are present? The question is not free from doubt. If the "House," as used in the paragraph of the Constitution already quoted, consists, a quorum being present, of the Members actually present and whose presence is disclosed, then two-thirds of the House requires an affirmative vote of all recorded, whether in favor, against, or merely as present. Suppose the vote were 174 ayes, none in the negative, and 90 present, would that be two-thirds of the House? I think it is unfortunate, perhaps, that the question came up without Members having had an opportunity to look carefully into the question. It would have been desirable to have done so. If 197 Members constitute a quorum, and if 131 Members vote "aye" and 60 Members vote "no" and 6 members answer "present," there would not be two-thirds of a quorum voting in favor of the passage of the bill. If the Members voting "present," are to be in such an instance counted to constitute the House, and the votes necessary to make the two-thirds are lacking and necessitates the counting of those answering "present," should they not be counted in this instance also? I do not believe that the rule can be any different under the different circumstances indicated.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. JAMES. If the position of the gentleman is correct, then the gentleman's holding would cause the 10 Democrats who are in favor of passing the bill over the veto, who have voted "present" here by reason of having a pair with Republicans who were opposed to the passage of the bill over the veto, doing the very thing they did not want to do; that is, of voting to sustain the veto and against the passage of the bill over the veto, which would be done by indirection—in answering "present" upon the question of the veto when the purpose was to stand one vote off against the other.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know that that enters into the question. The only question involved is whether under the Constitution of the United States the necessary number of Members have voted to pass this bill, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. It does not make any difference——

Mr. JAMES. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman confuses the Constitution with the rules of the House. The Constitution does not say anything about keeping a notation of or recording those "present," but says that the yeas and nays shall be called and that those voting "aye" shall be recorded and those voting "no" shall be recorded. There is nothing said about the recording of anybody "present," which merely means that a Member is in the Chamber, but not voting upon the question under consideration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply suggested this question. One hundred and ninety-seven Members are required to constitute a quorum. One hundred and thirty-one vote aye and 60 vote no, and then the 5 additional necessary to constitute a quorum vote present. This gives a two-thirds vote of those voting. Is it two-thirds of "the House"?

Mr. JAMES. The Constitution does not say anything about persons answering "present." The Constitution says "if after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill," and so forth. Now, how do you determine it? The Constitution says, "But in all such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting 'for' and 'against' the bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House, respectively." The record which determines the fate of the veto is the aye and nay vote, and that shows the quorum. There is nothing said about recording those present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The question arose under that language whether it was two-thirds of the entire membership of the House or two-thirds of a quorum, and it was determined that it did not mean two-thirds of the entire House. It now comes to be determined whether such a vote as has been recorded is two-thirds of "the House" as required by the Constitution. I am not certain which is the correct construction. It is unfortunate that the Speaker is called upon unexpectedly to rule upon so important a matter. Having some doubt as to what the correct ruling should be, I shall be content with this hasty expression of some impressions received without pressing them as positive convictions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a recapitulation of the vote, and under the circumstances of the case the Chair thinks he ought to have it. [Applause.]

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE, M'LAIN AGAINST BOWMAN.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No. 1 in the contested election case of McLain against Bowman.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANSBERRY, from the Committee on Elections No. 1, reported the following resolution:

House resolution 687 (H. Rept. 1182).

"Resolved, That Charles C. Bowman was not elected a Representative in the Sixty-second Congress from the eleventh district of Pennsylvania, and is not entitled to a seat therein."

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I further desire to give notice that immediately after the reading of the Journal on Saturday I shall call up the report for the consideration of the House. The minority, of course, will have opportunity up to that time to file their report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] gives notice that he will call up this report on Saturday, immediately after the reading of the Journal. Without objection, the report will be printed and referred to the House Calendar.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the minority desire time in which to file their views. Will the gentleman give until Saturday?

Mr. ANSBERRY. Yes; until Saturday.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the minority have until Saturday in which to file their views.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Elections No. 1 may have until Saturday in which to file their views. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one hour to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the gentleman that to-morrow is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that he can take the floor to-morrow and address the House for an hour in his own right.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his request?

Mr. STANLEY. I withdraw the request.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Speaker, I announce that I shall want an hour to-morrow, immediately after the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] addresses the House, or immediately after the reading of the Journal, on the question of the contests in the Republican national convention in the State of Washington.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON], as I did to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], that, unless the House cuts him off, he will have the right to take the floor in his own right to-morrow for an hour without getting consent now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is correct.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto; and pending that I would like to see if I can arrange with the other side for a division of time.

Mr. HAUGEN. How much time is desired by the gentleman?

Mr. LEVER. I think that by not taking any time myself we can conclude the debate on this side in an hour's time.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have numerous requests here. I could not agree to that.

Mr. LEVER. What suggestion does the gentleman make?

Mr. HAUGEN. I really have no suggestions. There are a number of gentlemen who have requested time. I suggest that we proceed, and I will ascertain what time is desired and possibly we can arrange an agreement later.

Mr. LEVER. I would much rather reach an agreement, because this bill is not privileged against conference reports and such things, and we will get jammed up presently and not be able to pass the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not need to worry about that.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have no desire to delay the proceedings of this House nor the passage of this bill, but I believe, in justice to Members here who wish to address the House on that bill, that they ought to be given an opportunity.

Mr. LEVER. How would an hour and a half on a side do?

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that before he closes the general debate on the bill some one ought to take the floor and explain what the bill is, because I daresay not a dozen gentlemen in the House outside of the committee that reported it know what the bill is, and I am not sure that the members of the committee know very accurately. After the provisions of the bill have been explained, then you can tell better how much time is desired.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Illinois is very much mistaken about his proposition. There is not a bill pending in this House which has had more consideration at the hands of the press and the public than this bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand that; but I am saying that Members do not know the terms of the bill and it ought to be explained before you try to cut down the time. I think myself when they learn what is in the bill there will be a lot of gentlemen who will want to speak in favor of it.

Mr. LEVER. I am sure of that. How about an hour and a half on a side?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; let us go ahead this afternoon.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think we can gain time by going on now.

Mr. MANN. We may get through without any trouble.

Mr. HAUGEN. And then we can arrange an agreement, I think.

Mr. LEVER. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that we run along this afternoon, and I give notice that the next time we consider the bill I will endeavor to close debate.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have no desire to delay the proceedings of the House.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, we have agreed to run along this evening with the general debate, with the understanding that as soon as we can, when this bill is next considered, we will endeavor to reach an agreement as to limitation of the debate. I ask that the gentleman from Iowa control one half the time and that I control the other half.

Mr. FOSTER. We could not agree to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, with Mr. RAKER in the chair.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Is the bill being read for the purpose of amendment, or is it receiving its first reading?

Mr. MANN. The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is my understanding; that the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the recollection of the Chair. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will try to explain the provisions and purposes of this bill. The title of the bill sets out rather clearly what is intended to be accomplished by its provisions. It is a bill to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto.

In 1862, 50 years ago, the first comprehensive recognition of agriculture was given by the Federal Government by the enactment of what is known as the first Morrill Act.

That act was signed by President Lincoln, and under its provisions has been built up a system of agricultural colleges the like of which can not be seen in any other country in the world. No country of which I have any knowledge can boast of such an efficient system of agricultural colleges. [Applause.] It was found that the difficulty with the agricultural colleges was that those who were teaching the boys who came within their doors were themselves lacking in that scientific information necessary to the better preparation of these young men for the great profession of agriculture.

And so, therefore, the agricultural thinkers of the country concluded that the system of agricultural colleges was not complete unless there could be built up in connection with them and working in conjunction with them a system of agricultural experiment stations whose purpose and duty it should be to do research work with a view of developing scientific truths, both for the purpose of agricultural colleges and for the purpose of aiding agriculture itself. The result was that in 1887, 25 years after the passage of the Morrill Act, the Hatch Act was passed establishing agricultural experiment stations, the objects of which were to aid in diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on subjects connected with agriculture and to promote scientific investigations and experiments respecting the principles of agricultural science.

Under that act, fostered by the "Great Commoner" from Missouri, has grown up the agricultural experiment stations in this country, one of which is located in each of the several States and several in our island possessions.

No man not familiar with agricultural conditions, no man who is not acquainted with the history of agriculture in this country can measure the splendid work of these institutions. No man can judge, unless he has investigated the subject most thoroughly and accurately, the enormous benefits to this country which have come from the establishment of these experiment stations.

In 1890 the second Morrill Act was passed, the purpose of which was the further endowment of agricultural colleges, appropriating to each State and Territory $15,000 for the year ending June 30, 1890, an annual increase in the amount of these appropriations of $1,000 a year for 10 years, making a permanent annual appropriation under this act of $25,000.

The second Morrill Act, like the land-grant act of 1862, was to be applied for the purpose of instruction in agriculture, or, to be more accurate, was intended as a further endowment of the agricultural colleges then in existence.

In 1906 came the Adams Act, which provides additional appropriations for the maintenance and support of the various State experiment stations increasing this appropriation, until now each of the experiment stations receives the sum of $30,000 annually, to be applied only to pay the necessary expenses of conducting original research and experiments dealing directly with the agricultural industry of the United States.

Following that, in 1907, the Nelson amendment was passed for the further endowment of agricultural colleges, giving to each State and Territory for that year the sum of $5,000 in addition to the sum previously appropriated, an annual increase of $5,000 for five years, after which the annual sum to be paid to each State and Territory shall be $50,000, to be applied annually for the purpose of agricultural colleges as defined and limited in the first Morrill Act.

Thus we see, Mr. Chairman, that the Federal Government has been rather liberal in its treatment of agriculture. And yet when we bear in mind the fact that not much over 10 per cent of the total appropriations of this Government are devoted to agriculture, I do not know that we can claim for ourselves very much liberality in that respect.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Did I understand the gentleman to say 10 per cent or 1 per cent?

Mr. LEVER. The Country Gentleman, a most reliable agricultural paper, some time ago made the statement that only 1 per cent of the appropriations of the country, State and Federal, went to the promotion of agriculture. Since 1862 we have expended through our experiment stations and the agricultural colleges the sum of $67,908,433.15.

The agricultural colleges teach theories, and necessarily reach a very limited number of people. Experiment stations furnish the scientific truths to the agricultural colleges and to agriculture itself, but unfortunately the difficulty in the past has been that we have not been able to take out to the people themselves, the great body of the people, the mass of individual farmers, and their families, the truths and theories taught in colleges and the scientific facts developed at the experiment stations.

We have been collecting information, and as it were damming it up in a great reservoir, until now I think it will not be disputed that we have within our agricultural colleges and experiment stations gathered together as much agricultural information as any country under the sun. As I suggested a moment ago, the difficulty has been and is that we are not getting this information out to the people as rapidly as people demand or as the emergency of the situation requires.

The agricultural thinkers of the country have been at work on a proposition for a long time to find some way of disseminating the information that has been accumulated for 50 years to make it available to the people of the United States, and this bill which I have had the honor to introduce is really the combined efforts of the best agricultural thinkers and seeks to establish the missing link between the man on the farm and the demonstrated methods of the colleges and experiment stations.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I want to ask my friend if under his bill, which I heartily agree to in relation to the establishment of the agricultural extension department, whether it would be permissible to offer an amendment proposing the sum, say, of $50,000 a year, to cooperate with the State of New Jersey in the mosquito extermination that has been so successfully carried on by our State for the past four years?

Mr. LEVER. Such an amendment, I think, would be permissible, but I do not think it would be in order on this bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. There have been inquiries made regarding the line of the gentleman's bill as compared with that of the Senate bill of Mr. PAGE. Would it comport with the gentleman's address to inform the House something of the nature of the two respective bills?

Mr. LEVER. I would prefer to go on with the line of my discussion of the sections of the bill as I come to them, and later on I may be willing to discuss the other proposition.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. I would like to inquire whether the appropriation in the gentleman's bill is confined strictly to the agricultural schools, or whether it takes in a broader field of the vocational school.

Mr. LEVER. This bill of itself is strictly confined to agricultural colleges established under the land-grant act of 1862.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LEVER. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The bill provides for the demonstration work to reach the farmers and not the boys in the colleges?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, as I was saying when interrupted, this bill seeks to disseminate the information that we have been gathering, and to disseminate it in the most practical way, so that the farmer who has eyes may see and who has ears may hear. I have known farmers all of my life. I was born and reared on a farm myself, and have practically what little investments I have in agricultural land now. I know how conservative the farmer is. I know how hard it is to get him to accept new theories. The farmer has been humbugged so much and for so long a time that he looks with suspicion upon any new proposition that comes into the community. I got the idea contained in this bill from the work that is being done in a more or less crude way in the Southern States by the Department of Agriculture at this time.

This bill proposes that we shall take the information we have been gathering and take it out to the farm, with the farmer, and demonstrate to him upon his own farm, by a system of comparison with his own methods, that the methods of the agricultural colleges and experiment stations and the Department of Agriculture and the most up-to-date farmers throughout the country are better methods than he employs. That is the only way in which you can possibly reach the farmer upon that proposition. We have been trying to reach him for years and years with the lecture, with the printed bulletin, with the agricultural newspapers and farmers' institutes; but the man who ordinarily can be reached with the printed bulletin or with the lecture or with the agricultural newspaper is the man who does not need this information that is proposed to be carried out to him in this bill, because he gets it from these other sources. The man we desire to reach is the small farmer, the man who does not read the bulletins, the man who has no confidence in book farming, the man who does not take an agricultural paper. We want to reach the little fellow out on the farm who needs the help. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am intensely interested in educating the young man upon the farm. Following the gentleman's explanation of his bill, I have been unable to gather whether it is proposed to train youth in the habits and occupations of the farmer. It appears to be for the dissemination of literature, and so forth.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania that the purpose of this bill is to carry the information more largely to the adult farmer than to the farm boy or the farm girl; but we take it that if we can teach the adult farmer the best methods of agriculture, the boy, the son of this adult farmer, necessarily must absorb the information that is being given.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But would the appropriation provided for in the bill looking to Federal aid and cooperation with the States in any way aid in the education of a boy in the practical work of the farm?

Mr. LEVER. Except as I have stated, except as being an example of good farming, which is an education in itself.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask one more question, so as to be put right, because I want to join the gentleman and all on his side in the passage of any bill which will aid in education on the farm and induce young men to go on the farm or to stay there. Do the agricultural colleges already in existence give practical training to young men who desire to go on the farm?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; the agricultural colleges are doing a great work in the training of young men for actual agriculture, but the difficulty about it is that so few of the boys can go to the colleges, so few of the boys do go to the colleges, and there is an impression in the land, and it is justified to some extent, that these agricultural colleges are not teaching agriculture to the boy, but are teaching mechanical arts and engineering, and the like of that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the point in my mind now.

Mr. LEVER. I will clear that proposition up.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to give him this illustration, and then he will understand my point. I know a boy, perhaps a hundred boys, who would like to go upon the farm, who would like to understand farming, who would like to be successful farmers. Will they be aided in any way if I should support the passage of a bill of this kind?

Mr. LEVER. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to get more information upon that point.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. In just a moment. I want to show the gentleman from Pennsylvania how this bill will help his boys. The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows that we have in the Department of Agriculture what is known as the Farmers' Cooperative Demonstration Work, for which we have been appropriating in an effort to defeat the boll weevil. This work has been in existence since 1904. I desire to read to the gentleman what Mr. Bradford Knapp, in charge of this work, has to say about this, and I think that will answer the gentleman's question, because this bill seeks to do in a more comprehensive and scientific way for all of the country what is being done in a less comprehensive and more crude way in the Southern States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say that if the gentleman can devise any way by which we can induce the young men to go out on the farm, even to giving them free education in the practical work of farming I would be very glad to join with him in that work.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that there never will come a time in this country when we will get the boys to go back to the farm or to stay on the farm unless we can devise through State or Federal legislation some way to make farm life profitable and happy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman there.

Mr. LEVER. And this bill proposes to do that. Let me read what we are doing in the South:

> First, the personal contact of the instructor with the farmers receiving instructions; secondly, the participation of the farmer receiving instruction in the actual demonstration of the lesson to be taught; thirdly, the certainty of success under normal conditions of the method advocated.

Now, the first proposition is the personal contact of the instructor with the farmers receiving instructions. There will be located in each agricultural college of the country a practical farmer who can receive instructions and impart them. He will have perhaps 40 or 50 farmers located all over and about the county. He will visit these farmers from time to time and come into personal contact with them. He says to one of them: "Mr. Smith, I want you this year to take an acre of land and plant it in cotton here, and I want you to take another acre and plant it in cotton right beside this acre, and I want you to farm this acre as I tell you to farm it, and I want you to farm this other acre as you have been usually farming it according to your own method. If my method works out better than yours, you will adopt my method; if not, I will adopt your method and try to have other farmers put it in operation." The result has been that through the instructions of the Department of Agriculture we have been able almost to double the yield of cotton in South Carolina in these demonstration plats as against the average yield of the State. If the gentleman will permit me, I will read that. In 1907, for instance, in the State of Oklahoma the average yield under demonstration methods for seed cotton in pounds was 628.7, while the average for the State was 504 pounds. In the State of Louisiana the average under demonstration methods, the methods proposed by this bill, is 1,063 pounds, as against the general average of 522 pounds. Take the State of Mississippi; the average there under demonstration methods is 1,045 pounds, as against 510 under the general average. Take the State of Georgia; the average under demonstration methods was 1,510 pounds of seed cotton, as against 732 pounds under the old system. Take South Carolina—she is first in everything—the average yield under demonstration methods was 1,569 pounds, while under the old method the general average for the State was 795 pounds.

These figures which I hold in my hand, showing the results of this work in all of the Southern States, both with respect to cotton and corn, demonstrate beyond any question the value of better methods in increasing crop production. These results have not been worked out on one isolated plat or experiment, but represent the average production from a number of acres in every county in each of the States where this work is being done. The number of acres by States and the average yield by demonstration methods and the average under the old methods are shown in these statistics, which have been furnished me by the department, and which I shall insert into the RECORD as a part of my remarks, for the information of the House:

No attempt has been made to estimate the effect of the work upon the balance of the demonstrators' crops or upon the crops of their neighbors.

In addition to the work reported above, this office conducted the work of 56,480 boys in the boys' corn clubs and 3,500 girls in the girls' canning clubs during 1911.

Mr. PICKETT. Would the gentleman be kind enough to insert in his remarks his list of tables?

Mr. LEVER. I have stated that I would do this. Not only that, but you can not get the farmer interested in these propositions unless you make him a part of the work itself. You can go out into a community and deliver your lectures and hold your institutes and have your agricultural trains go through the country, and the farmer will stand up and listen, but perhaps not 10 per cent of them will put into operation upon their own farms the wholesome truths that they have heard from these lectures. I think my friend from Indiana [Mr. Moss] will agree to that proposition. This system makes the farmer himself a party to this demonstration and therefore keeps him interested in the proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman has not quite got my point. The Government of the United States aids in the education of boys to go into the Navy. It aids boys to an education to fit them to go into the Army, and aids in the education of boys in other directions. I would like to see incorporated in this bill, if possible, governmental aid, or State aid by cooperation with the Government, of the boy who wants to learn scientific farming. That is the point I was making.

Mr. LEVER. I will answer my friend's question when I get to the third proposition.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit an interruption. I presume he is aware I have taken some interest in this branch of agricultural education for a number of years.

Mr. LEVER. I know the gentleman has been very active.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And have had a bill before the gentleman's committee for five or six years along this line—along the line somewhat suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. Now, if the gentleman will bear with me, as he is an enthusiast and he wants the information, I know the gentleman's time is limited, but if the gentleman will permit me to make a suggestion now and ask his opinion in regard to it——

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I agree with all the gentleman has said—that industrial education is the best thing in the world not only for the agriculturist but for the soil. I agree to that. I agree also with what the gentleman said that the Government has invested many millions of dollars, approaching $100,000,000, along these lines, and that the vast amount of scientific, technical information is now stored in the minds of a few men. The difficulty, as the gentleman has well stated, is to get it to the agriculturist proper. Now, the proposition in the bill is to send out, as it were, individuals to the individual farmer and teach the old men how to do a certain thing. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman if he expects to revolutionize farming in the United States from a scientific standpoint by simply sending one agent for a county—and there are a large number of agricultural counties in the United States—send one man there to enlist, as it were, each individual farmer?

If such is the case, how many agents of the Government will be required, and where is the gentleman going to get this vast army of agents, qualified to teach them scientifically? It is true that you might go out and tell a farmer, "You plant an acre of corn this way, and another the old way, and see what the difference is next year." Then perhaps you ought to teach him horticulture; you ought to teach him plant breeding; you ought to teach him stock breeding; you ought to teach him fertilizing. That all goes along with scientific agriculture. And so I say now that if you limit your experiments to one individual, in each of the 3,000 agricultural counties in the United States, you will be forever, disjointedly and disconnectedly teaching scientific agriculture in all its various branches throughout the United States, and it would be like sending a special agent to every county to teach each man mathematics, whereas they could be aggregated just as well in a district school or a county school, with a competent teacher. The old ones would not come there, but the young ones would, under a scientific system of teaching agriculture along the same lines as the Page bill, which is almost a copyw of the so-called Davis bill, which has slept six years in the Committee on Agriculture and upon which I have been unable to get a report one way or the other. Of course, the theory of that bill is along the line of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to teach the youth scientific farming, and then as he progresses he will teach his father and future generations.

I am going to vote for the gentleman's bill, but I really think the gentleman is going at it in a somewhat impractical manner, and in a way that will produce the least ultimate benefit to the great agricultural interests of the United States.

Mr. LEVER. Of course, the question submitted by the gentleman is a very important question.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The most important question that can be considered by Congress.

Mr. LEVER. I do not know but that the gentleman is right on that proposition, but the gentleman will realize this fact, that the bill now under consideration is the completion of a system already in operation, while the gentleman's bill is the beginning of a new idea with respect to Federal aid to State schools, high schools, common schools, and normal schools.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will tell the gentleman what it is, in brief. This vast storehouse of knowledge is contained in the heads of a few scientists, graduates from the agricultural colleges.

I will state to the gentleman that less than 7 per cent of the children of the United States ever enter the high schools at all, and less than 2 per cent ever get any higher education at all. Hence, 93 per cent, the toilers who substantially produce the wealth of this country, are practically uneducated. It is to bridge over that chasm from the common school, in which 93 per cent of the youth of this country is educated to the college that led me to introduce my bill, and led Senator PAGE to introduce his, to educate the youth of the land. The gentleman from South Carolina says his plan is a completion. I say it is simply another additional step, but a short one.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say that the third proposition involved in this demonstration work, as we know it in the South, is that the farmer himself shall be made to know beyond a doubt that it is successful. As I stated a while ago, the farmer has been humbugged so often, that unless you demonstrate beyond a doubt that you have a system of your own that is better than his, and which will bring the results that you claim for it, the farmer is not going to accept it.

Now, what has been accomplished in the South? Here is where we reach some of the boys that my friend from Minnesota is interested in, and in whom I am interested, too.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am interested in all of them.

Mr. LEVER. So am I. Speaking of this demonstration work, Mr. Knapp continues: "From a small beginning, with but few trained men in the field, it has grown, developed, and been systematized into a great movement for the wide dissemination of agricultural knowledge for the man, the wife, the boy, and the girl on the farm. To-day it is directly instructing practically 100,000 farmers, 75,000 farmers' boys, and 25,000 farmers' girls. The farmers are divided into two classes—the one class called the 'demonstrators,' whose farms are actually visited by an agent once in every 30 days during the crop-growing season, or practically 8 to 10 times each year, and even more; the other, called 'cooperators,' are grouped around about the farm of the demonstrator, and are called together upon it for the purpose of coming into contact with the agent and receiving personal instruction. Briefly stated, it seeks to press home such lessons as the better drainage of the soil, the deeper and more thorough preparation of soil for planting, the value of better seed, how to produce it, how to select it and keep it pure, the testing of seed before planting, the proper spacing of plants to suit the plant, soil, and climate, the value of intensive cultivation during the growing season for conservation of moisture, the importance of humus in the soil, and the use of barnyard manure, farm refuse, and commercial fertilizers, the value of crop rotation and winter cover crops on southern farms, for maintenance and building up of fertility, the use of more horse power and less hand power, and the accomplishment of more work in a day, the use of better tools for the same purpose, the great importance of live stock as a part of the permanent system of agriculture, the production of all home supplies of food required for men and animals on the farm, and the keeping of an account in order to know whence the profits and whence the loss in the farm operations."

And I say without hesitation, and my colleagues from the Southern States will bear me out, that since the inauguration of this system, in 1904, it has worked an absolute revolution in agriculture in the South. [Applause.] We are having better farming in the South to-day than we have ever had, and better farming means better living, and better living means more happiness, and more happiness means better citizenship; and I say to you that back of a great deal of the improvement in conditions in the South is this propaganda, and upon that idea is based this bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I should like to ask the gentleman a question there. The only question is as to how to put the idea into the best practical use. The gentleman has lived on a farm. Does he not know that it is pretty hard to get old farmers to go to a school, or to get them to spend their time listening to an agent sent to instruct them?

Mr. LEVER. We are taking the school to those old farmers. That is the point.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. You send a man to the farmer. Now, does not the gentleman think the same amount of money put into the education of boys, when they are young, when their minds are capable of retention, teaching them scientifically—that the same amount of money, both Federal and State, would ultimately work for the greater good of the community than to teach a few of the older men something?

Mr. LEVER. We are not now quarreling about the provisions of the gentleman's bill. What we want to do now is to pass this proposition. The thing we desire right now is to do the practical thing. The practical thing is the passage of the bill before the House.

Mr. CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. CONNELL. I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's remarks. I should like to ask him for information—if the system of farmers' institutes by the States, where a lecturer or a teacher is sent out by the State, prevails to any extent throughout the South the same as it does in other States?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; we have a good deal of that in the South, and it is doing good work.

Mr. CONNELL. Is the instruction contemplated by this bill independent of all that?

Mr. LEVER. This is in cooperation with that.

Mr. CONNELL. It does not stop any State work?

Mr. LEVER. Not at all. As I will explain to the gentleman when I come to a discussion of the various sections of the bill, that the State is required to put up an amount of money equal to that given to it.

Mr. CONNELL. Can the gentleman remember offhand how many agricultural colleges there are in the Southern States?

Mr. LEVER. There are two of such colleges in each of the Southern States, one for the whites and one for the blacks, and the total is 28.

Mr. CONNELL. In my State of New York we are all the time using farmers' institutes. They go to the farmers with them. I had the great privilege, when I was home a while ago, of attending a farmers' gathering where two representatives of the State came to teach the farmers and talk to them about bettering their conditions and about keeping accounts of their farming; and if you could have listened to that debate and have heard the manner in which the men who were tied up in farming all their lives and who were in the milk-producing business, and all that, wanted the State representatives to tell them some practical things you would have been very much interested. It was very interesting to listen to the kind of information that the farmers already had, but which they did not seem to have applied until it was pointed out to them how it could be done.

Mr. LEVER. That is the exact point. You may talk to the farmer until you are blue in the face and furnish him food for thought in every word, but unless you actually demonstrate the truth the farmer is not going to accept it.

Mr. CONNELL. In other words, the farmer is "from Missouri."

Mr. LEVER. He is "from Missouri."

Mr. HAMLIN. All good men are.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to give as succinct but at the same time comprehensive statement as possible, regard being had for interruptions, of the methods and results of the demonstration work as it is now carried on in the South and as is contemplated to be carried on in the future through the agricultural colleges of the several States under the provisions of this bill. For the information of the House I shall insert at this point a recent bulletin of the Department of Agriculture showing the wonderfully beneficent and fruitful results obtained last year in South Carolina, where I am familiar with the conditions and have every reason to believe in the correctness of the statements.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEMONSTRATION WORK IN SOUTH CAROLINA—INTERESTING REPORT BY BRADFORD KNAPP, HEAD OF UNITED STATES FARM DEMONSTRATION WORK—SOME COMPARATIVE FIGURES.

"Demonstration work in South Carolina has been advancing year by year both in acreage under cultivation and in increase of yields obtained under demonstration methods over those obtained under ordinary methods," says Bradford Knapp, head of the United States farm demonstration work, in a bulletin issued giving the detailed results of the work in all of the States of the South.

A complete summary of the bulletin shows as follows:

	Cotton.	Corn.
Number of demonstrators	1,574	1,672
Number of acres reported	7,371	5,958
Average yield per acre	[1] 1,569.2	[2] 39.2

[1] Pounds. [2] Bushels.

The Bureau of Statistics in its preliminary estimate, December 11, 1911, gives the average yield of seed cotton for South Carolina in 1911 as 795 pounds per acre from 2,627,939 acres, and of corn as 18.2 bushels per acre from 1,790,000 acres.

With cotton 1,574 demonstrators reported on 7,371 acres, an average of 4.7 acres for each demonstrator, an average yield of 1,569.2 pounds of seed cotton per acre and a total of 11,566,537 pounds. The average yield of cotton in South Carolina as estimated by the Bureau of Statistics, December 11, 1911, was 795 pounds. Thus it appears that the demonstration methods produced an increase of 97.4 per cent, or 774.2 pounds per acre above the State average, which at $3 per hundred amounts to $23.23 per acre, or $171,228.33 on 7,371 acres.

CORN DEMONSTRATORS.

With corn 1,672 demonstrators reported on 5,998 acres, an average of 3.6 acres for each demonstrator, an average yield of 39.2 bushels of shelled corn per acre, and a total of 233,584 bushels. The average yield of corn in South Carolina in 1911 as reported by the Bureau of Statistics was 18.2 bushels per acre. This shows an increase under demonstration methods of 115.4 per cent, or 21 bushels per acre, which at 91 cents per bushel amounts to $19.11 per acre, or $113,857.38 on 5,958 acres.

Combining results on these two crops, we find a total of $285,085.71, representing the value of increased production of cotton and corn in South Carolina due to demonstration methods on 13,329 acres reported for the year 1911.

In addition to the work reported above there were about 600 demonstrators and cooperators in South Carolina in 1911, following demonstration methods, from whom no reports were received. No attempt has been made to estimate the effect of the work upon the balance of the demonstrators' crops or upon the crops of their neighbors.

Demonstration work in South Carolina has been advancing year by year both in acreage under cultivation and in increase of yields obtained under demonstration methods over those obtained under ordinary methods.

In 1910 there were 1,048 cotton demonstrators reporting on 3,821 acres an average yield of 1,249.3 pounds of seed cotton per acre. In 1911 there were 1,574 demonstrators reporting on 7,371 acres, an average yield of 1,569.2 pounds per acre.

With corn in 1910 there were 1,114 demonstrators reporting on 3,357 acres an average yield of 41 bushels of shelled corn per acre. *In 1911 there were 1,672 demonstrators reporting on 5,958 acres an average yield of 39.2 bushels per acre.

Mr. PICKETT. Does the work contemplated in the pending bill take the place of the work now being conducted by the Agricultural Department, or does such work continue, and will this be supplementary?

Mr. LEVER. It will depend very largely upon the attitude of the Agricultural Department. My own judgment is that the kind of work now being done in the South, this demonstration work, is really a work that ought to be done under local influence and environment. The Department of Agriculture should deal with those bigger, broader, more regional problems than is possible to be dealt with by a State agricultural college. The Agricultural Department would probably turn over its organization in the South to the agricultural colleges, but would maintain a force, and do a greater amount of good, to study in a broader way the larger problems of agriculture. The colleges, the experiment stations, and the Department of Agriculture would continue to collect information, develop theories, and suggest methods, while these new agencies created in this bill would be charged with the duty of distributing these to the man upon the farm. Embalmed information is of no service to the country; it is to vitalize this information and make it available to those who need it that we are seeking.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. This work here would take the place of the field work now being conducted?

Mr. LEVER. I think in a large measure it would.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this extension work I have been speaking of is by no means confined to the Southern States, and is not entirely new to this country. It has been in operation a good many years in a larger or smaller degree, but I wish now to call the attention of the committee to the results accomplished in European countries by this same system of demonstration and extension teaching. Every up-to-date European country has what is known as extension work. I submit a brief summary of the work as carried on in these countries.

The high estimation in which extension teaching is held in foreign countries is shown by the following sentence from the Right Hon. Horace Plunkett, who was a member of the committee of the English Parliament appointed to visit continental countries and make investigations and report upon the various systems of agricultural education there in use. He says:

If there is one feature of agricultural education which, having been tested to the utmost in every country of the world, has stood that test better than any other, it is the itinerant instructor.

BRITISH EMPIRE.

In Canada the Dominion department of agriculture has undertaken to aid the Provinces in their agricultural education extension work and to encourage them to further self-effort.

In Great Britain the Government made its first grant to the several district (State) colleges of agriculture for extension work in 1888. Each college organizes and directs the extension work in its own district. The county councils also make appropriation to aid such work in their respective localities. The board of agriculture, which corresponds to our United States Department of Agriculture, is head of the entire system.

AUSTRIA.

According to the Austrian minister of agriculture, the instruction in agriculture to farming people above school age by means of extension teaching is regarded as an important factor in the education of its rural people and the development of its agricultural resources. This instruction is mostly given by itinerant instructors paid from the Government treasury. The Government annually gives very large subsidies to the various Provinces for extension work in agriculture. The itinerant instructors appointed by the Government also study the wants and needs of the farmers, gather statistics, and keep the Government informed respecting all agricultural conditions.

BULGARIA.

The Government supports the three agricultural colleges and the three experiment stations, all of which employ itinerant teachers for the sole purpose of conducting extension teaching in agriculture among farming people beyond the school age.

DENMARK.

Within the past 30 years agriculture in Denmark has risen from about the lowest to the highest place among the countries of Europe. This remarkable progress was brought about chiefly by the effectiveness with which the Government was able, through organizations among farmers, to aid them with expert advice, technical instruction, and material support along extension lines as a supplement to the regular college or school work. At the head of the entire educational system of the country is the Royal University, at Copenhagen, while the agricultural work centers in the Royal Agricultural and Veterinary College, at Copenhagen, an institution controlled and supported entirely by the Government. Below this are the 21 agricultural schools of the country. In addition there are 4 experiment stations, with over 500 experimental fields scattered over the country. Then there follow the numerous high schools devoted chiefly to agriculture; then also the common schools; and, finally, there are the numerous cooperative societies among the adult farming people, which form a system of itself and embraces nearly 4,000 organizations, covering all phases of agricultural activity. In addition there are also 107 local agricultural societies.

The Government aids all these organizations and employs a large number of experts as itinerant instructors, who devote their entire time to extension teaching in agriculture, and in addition local organizations also employ itinerant instructors, who are paid partially by Government funds. Thus the Government of Denmark is behind the agricultural education extension work and is its moving spirit and financial aid.

FRANCE.

In the comprehensive system of public instruction in France provision is made for compulsory instruction in agriculture in the normal schools of each of the 87 civil departments. In these schools are educated the teachers for the lower-grade schools, and hence agriculture, which is also required to be taught in all schools regardless of grade, is thus provided with a supply of teachers. The Government provides at its own expense a professor of agriculture for each of the 87 departments, and requires him to devote a certain amount of his time to agricultural extension teaching and demonstration among the adults on the farms. His traveling expenses are also paid by the Government. There are also numerous special professors of agriculture, who likewise are also required to devote a certain amount of time to agricultural extension work among the people on the farms. Thus the French Government has provided for and directly financed the very thorough and comprehensive system of agricultural education extension teaching among its rural people.

HUNGARY.

The Government, through its minister of agriculture, employs and maintains a large force of itinerant lecturers, employed by the year, solely for the purpose of giving instruction in agricultural subjects to adult rural people on their farms. The Government also carries on each year 80 model or demonstration farms at various places to aid in the instruction of its farming people.

ITALY.

The Government contributes two-fifths of the salaries and expenses of maintaining itinerant chairs of agriculture in each Province or district. These itinerant chairs are for the sole purpose of conducting extension teaching in agriculture to the adult farming people on their farms by the means of lectures, personal advice, demonstrations, correspondence, and so forth, and to foster cooperative and other agricultural societies and organizations, gather statistics, and learn the needs and wishes of the rural population.

HOLLAND.

Each of the 11 Provinces in Holland has a state professor of agriculture supported entirely by the Government. His duty is to direct and control the agricultural interests in his Province, including itinerant or migratory school work, which is extension teaching, and reaches the adult farmer in his home.

GERMANY.

Each Province has a chamber of agriculture established by law as representative of the agricultural interests in that Province. The Government subsidizes these chambers and they conduct the agricultural education extension work, which is thorough and comprehensive, and reaches all classes of the adult farming population.

RUSSIA.

The itinerant extension teaching in agricultural subjects in Russia is under the direction of the department of agriculture at St. Petersburg. No special force for extension work is employed, but the Government pays the salaries and expenses of those regular college and school instructors who are called upon to do such work.

BELGIUM.

Agricultural education extension teaching in Belgium is financed and managed entirely by the Government, which annually spends large sums of money for this special method of reaching and influencing its rural population. The Government maintains a large number of extension supervisors, who are under the jurisdiction of the minister of agriculture through the inspector general of agriculture and the director general of the rural office. Besides the 34 chief extension supervisors there are a large number of assistants. The entire time of the 34 chief extension supervisors and their assistants is devoted to the instruction of the adults on the farms of the country by means of lectures, personal visits, inspection and advice, correspondence, and demonstration plats. The extension supervisors assist the farmers in matters pertaining to agriculture and country life, including the marketing as well as the production of farm products, the improvement of the home, live stock, and crops, and the land itself; further cooperative societies and their organizations among farming people for selling, for purchasing, and for credit and insurance; keep in close touch with them, and ascertain their desires, wishes, and needs; act as intermediaries between them and the Government; gather agricultural statistics and endeavor to improve all agricultural conditions and products. Twenty-five years ago the agriculture of Belgium was in a most deplorable and discouraging condition. The Government then established this system of extension work in agriculture, which in this brief period has completely revolutionized this foundation of all industries and government, and has placed Belgium at the front rank among agricultural nations.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. With pleasure.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the gentleman intend to insert in his remarks comparative tables showing the yield in this country and Belgium and France and other countries?

Mr. LEVER. I would be glad to do that, and I would be glad to discuss it.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not care to raise any discussion about it, but it bears out the truth of what the gentleman is saying, that lands that have been cultivated since the days of Charlemagne now produce 50 bushels of wheat to the acre, while our virgin soil does not produce but about one-half of that amount.

Mr. LEVER. That is true, and with the permission of the committee I shall insert at this point some exceedingly pertinent and interesting facts bearing directly upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky, which have been compiled and summarized by the National Soil Fertility League:

Our population increased 21 per cent in the last 10 years.
Our farm acreage increased 4.2 per cent in the last 10 years.
We produce 7½ bushels of wheat per person.
We consume, including seed wheat, about 6½ bushels per person.
In 1900 we had 40.5 per cent as urban population.
In 1910 we had 46.2 per cent as urban population.
With a population of 93,000,000 home consumption takes 98 per cent of corn and 91 per cent of wheat. In 50 years our population will be 200,000,000. How shall we feed them?

Belgium's progress.

	1885	1910	Gain.
			Per cent.
Wheat, average yield per acre (bushels)	24.54	38.55	57
Oats, average yield per acre (bushels)	49.75	81.45	63.8
Rye, average yield per acre (bushels)	23.84	36.69	53.4
Barley, average yield per acre (bushels)	38.25	57.57	50.5

Their farmers, in the last 12 years, have trebled their savings-bank accounts.

Germany's progress.

	1885	1910	Gain.
			Per cent.
Wheat, average yield per acre (bushels)	22.4	29.5	31.6
Oats, average yield per acre (bushels)	39.2	53.4	36
Rye, average yield per acre (bushels)	19	27.2	41
Barley, average yield per acre (bushels)	27.8	36.2	30

On soil cropped for centuries.

Denmark's progress.

In a generation Denmark rose from poverty to thrift and prosperity. They raise an average of 40 bushels of wheat per acre.

THE UNITED STATES.

The average yield per acre.

Wheat (bushels)	14.3
Oats (bushels)	30
Rye (bushels)	15.8
Barley (bushels)	25.5
Corn (bushels)	33.4

Our averages now are lower than the lowest for Belgium and Germany 25 years ago. They have advanced.

These figures show not only what we may accomplish by a systematic effort to improve agricultural conditions, but they bring home in a most striking manner the important fact that must give grave concern to every economist that consumption in this country is not far behind production and is rapidly overtaking it. As is suggested the time is not far distant, if conditions are not improved, when our export trade in agricultural products, with the exception of cotton, will completely cease, and we shall be brought face to face with the problem of producing sufficient foodstuffs to meet the demands of our increasing nonproductive classes. No man charged with the responsibility, such as is given to a Representative in Congress, can fail when the facts are brought to him to appreciate the situation and set about to find relief for it. To my mind there is not a more far-reaching problem in this country, except it be the problem of finding such a system of distribution of farm products as will bring closer together the producer on the one hand and the consumer on the other, to the end that the exorbitant burden of distribution may be reduced to the very minimum.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. In the statement just made by the gentleman, he says that this work of demonstration will be carried on by demonstrators in the community and on the farm—as I think the gentleman expressed it, "on the farmer's own farm." Now, reading section 2, which seems to provide for this work, I find that the only requirement is "to give instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics to persons not resident in said colleges in the several communities." Does the gentleman think that is sufficiently definite to carry out the idea that the gentleman expressed?

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will read the bill more carefully he will find a provision which makes it obligatory that 75 per cent of the money appropriated shall be used for these demonstrations. That is found on page 4 of the bill in the proviso.

Mr. TOWNER. I understand that, but that is not my thought. This would provide that the amount of money might be spent by a gentleman who went down and made the demonstration, not on the farm, but by lectures, and the way lectures and demonstrations are given now by these special agents——

Mr. LEVER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the provision on page 4:

And provided further, That in each State which shall assent to the provisions of this act there shall be expended each year for field instruction and demonstrations not less than 75 per cent of all moneys available under the provisions of this act.

So it would leave only 25 per cent available for the purposes that the gentleman has mentioned. We were careful to protect the bill and to have the money not wasted in talk. We have reached the point now of showing and doing instead of talking.

Mr. TOWNER. I agree with the gentleman's point of view, and as I understand, the gentleman thinks the statement made in the bill for field demonstration would be sufficient?

Mr. LEVER. I am sure it would be.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill has not been hastily considered. It has not been thrown together without regard for what was intended, nor have those who have been interested in it most intimately neglected to get the information of the agricultural thinkers of this country. With the permission of the Chair and the committee, I propose to print in the RECORD expressions from the presidents of many agricultural colleges in the United States, every one of them favoring the idea of this bill.

COMMENTS ON LEVER AGRICULTURAL BILL BY LEADING EDUCATORS AND AGRICULTURAL THINKERS.

ARIZONA.

A. H. Wilde, president of the University of Arizona:

I believe the bill would admirably supplement the present agencies used by the Government for agricultural education. There must be many people in the country unable to leave their homes for education of any sort. Their only resource for agricultural education would be lectures of itinerant lecturers and the extension work and literature of the colleges.

CALIFORNIA.

Benjamine I. Wheeler, president of the University of California:

I have been looking over the bill presented by Mr. LEVER regarding agricultural extension work, and I am convinced that it is on the whole the best of all agricultural measures, good as they are, which have been presented in these recent years. It means real help for the masses of our people.

CONNECTICUT.

C. L. Beach, president State Agricultural College:

My personal opinion is that the carrying of the latest scientific knowledge to the working farmer is one of the most important duties of the land-grant colleges. I sincerely hope that this bill will have favorable consideration by the present session of Congress.

COLORADO.

C. P. Gillette, director State Agricultural College Experiment Station:

I have examined the bill carefully and believe it should pass Congress. If it is passed, I believe it will be a great benefit to the agricultural interests of the country and consequently to the country as a whole.

DELAWARE.

George A. Hurd, president Delaware College:

Delaware College is greatly interested in the passage of the bill to establish schools for university extension in the several States of the Union. This will supplement the several Morrill bills by furnishing the people of the State the proper instruction that will lead them naturally to the agricultural college. I believe it is a move in the right direction to make agricultural knowledge both widespreading and far-reaching. I hope the law will be enacted.

FLORIDA.

Director P. H. Rolfs, Agricultural Experiment Station:

This bill, as I understand it, is in direct line with what was advocated by the Southern States Agricultural Workers' Association in their meeting at Nashville last October, and has the same foundation principles that were indorsed by the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations at the Columbus meeting in November. It is also in direct line with the recommendation from the Association of Farmers' Institute Workers, which also met in Columbus in November. Prof. William D. Hurd, Massachusetts Agricultural College, Amherst, was made chairman of a committee of this last association to take up this matter. I think Prof. Hurd will have taken up this matter with you and written you personally in regard to it. Your bill, therefore, is in line with the national gatherings of agricultural workers, which should have very considerable weight in the matter of passing it through Congress.

GEORGIA.

Andrew M. Soule, president University of Georgia:

I inclose you herewith a copy of a resolution passed at the recent meeting of a conference on extension teaching in agriculture held in Nashville, Tenn., in association with the Southern Commercial Congress. This meeting was attended by 200 representative leaders of agricultural thought and education from every Southern State. In 18 years' experience, I have never seen so representative a gathering of this class brought together before. They were unanimously and enthusiastically in favor of the measure which you have introduced and will lend it their heartiest support. These expressions from so representative a body of leaders will no doubt be of interest and encouragement to you at this time.

The resolution above referred to is as follows:

Resolved, That the conference on extension teaching in agriculture hereby unanimously indorse and urge the passage of H. R. 18160 and its companion measure, Senate bill 4563, by the present session of Congress. This measure is calculated to carry into effect more completely than any measure yet devised constructive educational work among the farmers of the United States. It will enable the agricultural colleges to take the scientific information relating to agriculture accumulated through their researches to the farmers in an acceptable form, and will unquestionably stimulate production, inspire our farmers, and improve rural conditions socially and educationally. The remarkable service rendered the people of the United States through the agency of the agricultural colleges and experiment stations will be repeated on a larger and more efficient scale through the establishment of a definitely endowed system of extension teaching in agriculture. The fact that the colleges are now ready to carry the provisions of this measure into effect, coupled with a Nation-wide interest in the maintenance and development of our agriculture upon a permanent basis, justify us in urging immediate consideration and passage of this fundamental measure.

Dr. Soule again says:

I assure you that the people of the South are thoroughly behind you in this matter, and if this measure can be passed, it will be regarded by the people of the United States as one of the finest pieces of constructive legislation which has ever been enacted for the welfare of our farmers and the advancement of our agriculture.

HAWAII.

John A. Gilmore, president College of Hawaii:

I am quite convinced that the Congress could make no more lasting or advantageous investment for the people than through the support of education and demonstration that will increase agricultural efficiency and the proper attitude toward the conservation of soil resources.

IDAHO.

Dr. McLean, president of the University of Idaho:

I have read the bill through carefully, and believe it will accomplish the desired result, namely, to bridge the 20 years' gap that now exists between scientific agriculture as developed in the experiment station and actual agriculture as practiced on the farm.

INDIANA.

P. E. Goodrich, president National Hay Association:

The old method of teaching agriculture does not seem to be nearly so efficient as it should be. Except in a few instances, our main field crops are less to-day than they were 20 years ago. Especially is this true in grass crops, clover, alfalfa, etc. We feel, therefore, that the only way to make any permanent progress is to establish a man in each vicinity who can learn the actual conditions and show those who are making failures with their methods the difference from those who are making a success.

ILLINOIS.

Eugene Davenport, dean of the College of Agriculture:

I speak of it (demonstration idea) because the term "agricultural extension" in the present state of evolution means principally talk, attendance upon farmers' institutes, conduct of special trains, etc. This has been going on for so long that I think we ought to have passed, very largely, the evangelistic state of agricultural development, and what is really needed is to settle down to the work of demonstration in the various localities of the several States, the findings of the experiment station of that State, and the recent contributions to agricultural knowledge from other sources of information.

KANSAS.

R. H. Faxon, chairman Conservation Commission:

I certainly am distinctly in favor of the Lever bill. I believe it will be a remarkably strong and favorable advancement in the cause of agriculture. I like that expression, "Applied science is the hope of agriculture." It assuredly is.

E. H. Webster, dean State Agricultural College:

I think that this bill meets with the approval of the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, and that, if organized through its officers and proper committees will give such assistance as may be necessary to secure its passage. I think the bill is drawn in excellent shape and will do a wonderful amount of good in many of the States that are not now spending money in extension work.

KENTUCKY.

M. A. Scovell, director Experiment Station, State University:

It seems to me the bill is about in as perfect shape as it could be.

MAINE.

Robert J. Aley, president University of Maine:

I feel that such a bill enacted into law will make it possible for us to do great good to the people of our State.

Chas D. Woods, director Agricultural Experiment Station:

I have conferred with the college of Agriculture here and find that they approve of all of the items of this bill. I should be glad to do anything that you may suggest in any way to advance the chances of this measure becoming a law.

MARYLAND.

R. W. Sylvester, president State Agricultural College:

The people of Maryland are heartily in favor of the passage of this bill; in fact, it seems to me that every State, Territory, and dependency of our country should heartily support this bill. Our experiment stations have accumulated a vast amount of information, and it needs only now that this information should be gotten through extension work provided for by our National Congress. The man who secures the passage for such a bill will make a reputation for himself equal to that of Senator Morrill and Senator Nelson in securing the passage of the Morrill and Nelson Acts.

T. B. Symons, State Entomologist:

It meets with my hearty approval, and I should imagine that it has a much greater chance of passage than the Page bill, on account of its simplicity and appropriations required. I will do what I can to push the matter in this State.

MONTANA.

J. M. Hamilton, president State Agricultural College:

I am heartily in favor of this movement, and I believe that the provisions of this bill will meet the approval of all the interest concerned. The experiment stations are creating a scientific agricultural practice, but the agricultural colleges are able to instruct but a small portion of the future farmers. If the work of the experiment stations is to reach any considerable part of the men on the farms, it must be carried to them by an extension department.

F. B. Lindfield, director State experiment station:

I am pleased to learn that you are beginning an active campaign for the consideration of your bill, making an appropriation for extension work at the various agricultural colleges. Considering the needs of our western country, such an appropriation would be a great help in enabling us to bring to our people on the farms, and also to our young people of the rural communities, the very best ideas and agricultural practices as adapted to our peculiar conditions.

MISSOURI.

F. B. Mumford, dean College of Agriculture, State University:

The Lever bill has my unqualified approval. In my judgment, the great problem at present is to get the farmers to put in practice the systems of farming and methods of agriculture that have already been discovered. If this can be accomplished, the production throughout the country may be increased—perhaps doubled in 10 years.

NEW MEXICO.

W. E. Garrison, president College of Agriculture:

The measure known as the Lever bill in the House and the Hoke Smith bill in the Senate seems to me the most desirable of all measures now pending before Congress for the advancement of agricultural interests. The one greatest need at the present time is the extension of agricultural teaching to the farmers. There are other needs also * * * but none of these is so urgent, none is so unanimously indorsed by all interests, and none lies so clearly within the scope of the legitimate activity of the Federal Government as the promotion of extension teaching in agriculture. The Lever-Smith measure should have the support of every person who is interested in the agricultural development of the Nation.

NORTH CAROLINA.

J. B. Dudley, president Agricultured College (colored):

To my mind, it would be difficult to exaggerate the advantages, possibilities, and far-reaching effect of this prospective legislation. It would certainly prove a powerful agency in helping the colleges and the people in the rural sections of our country.

NEW YORK.

George Peabody:

I write to express to you my great interest in the development of agriculture and my understanding that this bill is approved by the leading agricultural organizations and by the Farmers' Union of Georgia, in which I am greatly interested.

L. H. Bailey, director State College Agriculture, Cornell:

I think that this bill is a meritorious measure.

NEW JERSEY.

W. H. S. Demarest, Rutgers College:

I am glad to express to you my emphatic indorsement of this measure and my earnest hope that it will be passed.

A. E. Burnett, dean College of Agriculture:

This bill has my hearty approval and support. It is exactly in line with the resolution passed by the American Association of Agricultural Colleges at its meeting in Columbus, Ohio, last November. This bill should have the support of all of the agricultural colleges and experiment stations which were represented at that meeting.

OKLAHOMA.

James A. Wilson, director State Experiment Station:

In traveling over the country during the past year I find people generally are just awakening to the importance of the industrial system of education which began in a very small way half a century ago; and in talking with men engaged in the larger pursuits throughout the country I find that they are a unit with regard to the importance of pushing further legislation right along the line of your bill.

OREGON.

W. J. Kerr, president State Agricultural College:

I have examined the bill carefully and heartily approve all its provisions.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Edwin E. Sparke, president State College:

I beg to say that this college is anxious to assist you in every possible manner. At the meeting of the State board of agriculture held in Harrisburg last week the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That we heartily indorse Senate bill No. 4563 (Smith bill), supplemental to the acts for Federal support of State agricultural colleges and experiment stations, providing for national appropriations for giving instructions and demonstrations in agriculture and in home industries and economics, applicable to rural life to persons not connected with said colleges, but residents of the State. We believe that such legislation will vastly improve the condition of rural communities by disseminating practical information, and we call upon Congress to enact the same into law."

C. J. Tyson, secretary State Horticultural Association:

I take this opportunity to especially commend the bill introduced by you and to assure you of the interest and support of this association. This is a matter of immediate need and far-reaching advantage to the agricultural interests of the country. I sincerely hope that it may become a law.

RHODE ISLAND.

Howard Edwards, president State College:

I heartily approve your bill and have no criticism to make. I am anxious to do whatever is possible in aid of the passage of this measure.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

A. A. Brigham, principal State College of Agriculture:

We here in South Dakota, both of the college and of the farming community, are anxious to have legislation in support of agricultural extension. House bill No. 18160 seems to fill the need.

James W. Wilson, Agricultural Experiment Station:

I have read this bill clear through and believe it would be a good move on the part of Congress.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

J. N. Harper, director State Experiment Station:

I think your bill an excellent one, and I sincerely hope that it will become a law, and will do everything in my power to urge it along.

W. M. Riggs, president Clemson Agricultural College:

I think your bill an excellent one, and I sincerely hope that it will say that I consider it one of the most important pieces of constructive legislation since the Hatch Act. There is no question but that the great need to-day is dissemination of agricultural information among our rural people. The colleges are doing a great work in an educational way, but this particular phase of the work is needed to round out and complete the educational structure.

UTAH.

E. D. Ball, director experiment station:

It seems to be by far the best and most satisfactory bill that has been presented on this subject; and I assure you of my heartiest support in every possible way.

WEST VIRGINIA.

E. D. Sanderson, dean and director College of Agriculture:

I fail to find anything that I can criticize in this measure, and it has my most hearty support.

WYOMING.

H. G. Knight, director University of Wyoming:

I have looked over the bill very carefully, and wish to say I consider it a very satisfactory bill. I will give it such support as I may.

In addition to that this bill has the indorsement of every farmers' organizations in our section of the country, and by all say that the Farmers' Union of the South, which is the largest farmers' organization in our section of the country, and by all odds the most influential, unhesitatingly indorses the purposes of this bill.

What is true of the Farmers' Union of the South is true of the National Grange of the North, East and West, whose representative appeared before the Committee on Agriculture, stating that he represented 1,000,000 people, and he unhesitatingly and emphatically indorsed the provisions of this bill. I have here some resolutions which I desire to place in the RECORD, one from the International Dry-Farming Congress indorsing this bill, another from the Conference on Rural Progress, another from the Maine Federation of Agricultural Colleges, another from the Association of County Superintendents of Education of South Carolina, another from the Manufacturers and Merchants' Association of Georgia. There is another from the Grain Growers' Convention of North Dakota, another from the Wisconsin County Life Association, a telegram from the American Bankers' Association, representing 12,500 banks, and then a memorandum prepared for the President of the United States by Dr. Galloway, submitted to the President by Secretary Wilson, and is explicitly commended by the President in his address at the Kansas City Conservation Congress, in this language:

The welfare of the people is so dependent on improved agricultural conditions that it seems wise to use the welfare clause of the Constitution to authorize the expenditure of money for improvement in agricultural education and leave to the States and private enterprise general and other vocational education. The attitude of the Government in all this matter must be merely advisory.

It is now proposed to organize a force of 3,000 men, one to every county in the United States, who will conduct experiments within the county for the edification and education of the present farmers and of the young embryo farmers who are being educated. It is proposed that these men shall be partly paid by the county, partly by the State, and partly by the Federal Government; and it is hoped that the actual demonstration on the farms in the county—not agricultural stations or schools somewhere in the State—but in the county itself, shall bring home to the farmers what is possible to do with the very soil that they themselves are engaged upon.

It is my pleasure, as secretary of the International Dry-Farming Congress, to call to your serious attention the following expression of the farmers of the United States through their delegates assembled at the sixth session of this congress in Colorado Springs, October last:

"Agricultural extension: This congress believes that the agricultural extension work carried on by the various State agricultural colleges has demonstrated itself to be the most effective means for the dissemination of valuable information to the farmers and to the farmers' wives, and since these agricultural colleges receive no Federal aid for this work, we therefore urge upon the Congress of the United States the passage of the Lever bill, the principles of which have been indorsed by the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, which bill is now pending before the United States Congress and which provides for appropriations to be used for the extension work in farmers' institutes, in movable schools of agriculture, upon demonstration farms, and for similar work in the various States. This congress further urges that the Congressmen from the various States represented by this congress be not only requested, but urged, to aid in the immediate passage of this bill."

A study of this agricultural extension work will at once reveal the great good accomplished thereby for the farmer and will make plain his attitude in thus urging the passage of the Lever bill in order that this work may not only be continued, but may be made broader and more comprehensive than is at present possible.

Trusting that you will give this bill your careful study and deserving support, I am

Very truly, yours,

JOHN T. BURNS,
Executive Secretary-Treasurer.

At a meeting of the New England Conference on Rural Progress, March 8, at the offices of the State board of agriculture, statehouse, Boston, the following resolutions were unanimously voted:

"Recognizing the latent possibilities of the New England States for agricultural development, especially along certain high-class specialized lines, and realizing that this development can be most speedily and effectively brought about through well-organized extension teaching in agriculture, the New England Conference on Rural Progress—representing more than 70 organizations interested in rural life—to-day assembled in convention in the city of Boston, would respectfully urge upon Congress the necessity and advisability of passing legislation granting Federal funds for the development of extension teaching in agriculture. Of the bills now before Congress, we believe Senate bill 4563 and H. R. 18160 to be the wisest and most practical forms of legislation yet proposed."

The delegates represent the agricultural colleges, the experiment stations, the State granges, and various special agricultural live stock, dairying, and other organizations and agencies of New England.

Yours, very respectfully,

JAMES A. MCKIBBEN,
Secretary New England Conference on Rural Progress.

In our State we have a Federation of Agricultural Associations. The writer of this letter happens to be its secretary. At the annual meeting held Wednesday, March 6, the Lever bill was indorsed and the Secretary instructed to convey the wishes of the federation that it receive the support of Congress and a passage at the present session. I need only add that this federation comprises every State and county wide agricultural association, department, and institution in our State, including the State Grange, the College of Agriculture, the Maine Agricultural Experiment Station, and the department of agriculture.

Yours, very truly,

LEON S. MERRILL.

Resolved by the Association of County Superintendents of Education of South Carolina assembled in conference at Winthrop College July 11, 1911, That we unanimously indorse House bill No. 11542, "to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with the agricultural colleges and experiment stations in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1887," and that we further indorse the work of Hon. A. F. LEVER in preparing and introducing this measure. The association urges upon the South Carolina delegation in Congress the support of this bill in the hope that the policy therein set forth may soon be put into operation not only in this State, but in all the States of the Union.

O. H. GASQUE,
President County Superintendents' Association.

This association wishes to add its word to the many expressions of support which have no doubt come to you concerning the House bill No. 18160, known as the Lever bill.

We regard it as supremely important that this legislation be passed as a means for placing before the individual farmers the instruction in agriculture which is so necessary for the development of our country.

Very truly,

WILSON M. HARDY,
Secretary of Manufacturers and Merchants' Association of Floyd County, Ga.

A resolution was adopted at the Tri-State Grain Growers' Convention indorsing the passage of your bill, and as president of the convention I sent copies of the resolution to the Members of both Houses in Minnesota and the two Dakotas. I trust the bill will find favor with both Congressmen and Senators, and become a law.

Very truly, yours,

J. H. WORST,
President Tri-State Grain Growers' Association of North Dakota.

At the Second Wisconsin Country Life Conference, February 1–2, 1912, Madison, Wis., the following resolution was unanimously adopted by the conference association, representing all the varied interests of country life and rural progress in all parts of Wisconsin:

"Resolved, That it is the sentiment of this conference association that we urge our Representatives in Congress to support the bill 'To establish agricultural extension departments in connection with the agricultural colleges in the several States,' etc." (House bill No. 18160; Senate bill No. 4563.)

I take pleasure in acquainting you with representative Wisconsin sentiment on this measure.

Respectfully, yours,

C. J. GALPIN, Secretary.

BRIAR CLIFF LODGE,
Briar Cliff Manor, N. Y., May 8, 1912.

Hon. Mr. LEVER,
Member Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the members of the executive council of the American Bankers' Association in session here to-day, and are respectfully referred to you for favorable consideration:

"Whereas at least 20 State bankers associations in as many different States are appointing or have standing committees working for agricultural development and education; and

"Whereas the American Bankers' Association of 12,500 banks had shown its deep interest in agriculture and these efforts in its behalf by appointing a standing committee on agricultural development and education; and

"Whereas these committees and associations are working for the field demonstration bills now before Congress: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the executive council of the American Bankers' Association hereby recommends to the Congress of the United States now in session the adoption of legislation and liberal appropriations in aid of such work."

ARTHUR REYNOLDS,
Chairman Executive Council of the American Bankers' Association.

In addition to the above resolutions of indorsement, I submit the memorandum prepared for the President of the United States, referred to already by Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, upon the bill in question, as follows:

REGARDING NEED FOR AGRICULTURAL-EXTENSION WORK, WITH PARTICULAR REFERENCE TO THE LEVER BILL (H. R. 18160).

For 25 years or more there has been accumulating in this country a vast amount of agricultural information, secured as the result of investigations of the United States Department of Agriculture, the State experiment stations, and other organized agricultural bodies. Up to a few years ago it was generally believed among educators and others that the most satisfactory way of getting this information to the people was through the dissemination of bulletins and circulars, agricultural institute work, and other similar agencies. For the past 8 or 10 years there has been felt the growing need of taking the information secured as a result of scientific investigations and experiments directly home to the farmer on the land. Eight or nine years ago this idea was put into practical effect by the United States Department of Agriculture in meeting an emergency in the South caused by the invasion of the boll weevil. As a result of this farmers' cooperative demonstration work throughout the southern States great good has been accomplished and experiment-station workers, educators, and others have seen the necessity of further extending work of this kind.

From time to time during the past three or four years bills have been introduced in Congress having for their object agricultural-extension work, and upon these bills there has been considerable discussion. Public sentiment has gradually been crystallizing on the matter, until now we have before us in H. R. 18160, known as the Lever bill, a concrete proposition in regard to carrying the results of agricultural knowledge directly to the man on the land.

In brief, this bill provides for the establishment under each agricultural college of each State of the Union an agricultural-extension department for the purpose of giving demonstrations in agriculture and home economics, and it is to do this by imparting the information at hand through the medium of field demonstrations, publications, and in other ways.

It is proposed, in brief, to appropriate for each State the sum of $6,000 to inaugurate this agricultural-extension work. It is proposed further to make lump-fund appropriations, beginning in 1914, of $300,000 and increasing at the rate of $300,000 each year until 1923, when the sum appropriated will amount to $3,000,000 annually for the work in view.

Each State, in order to be entitled to any part of the additional lump-fund appropriations must establish an extension department in its college or colleges and provide for the support of this work an annual sum equivalent to the amount received from the Federal Government under the act. It is claimed by this plan that by 1923 it will be practicable to have a thoroughly competent agricultural adviser in nearly every county in the United States, whose work it will be to organize the farmers, conduct demonstration work, and in other ways bring directly home to the farmer on his own farm knowledge which will be of inestimable value to him, the expense of the work to be shared in part by the Federal Government and in part by the States.

Unquestionably such a plan if properly carried out would result in great good and would do much toward making useful and available the rapidly growing store of knowledge developed along agricultural lines.

There is appended hereto the findings of a committee appointed by the Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations to consider the whole question of Federal appropriations for extension work in agriculture in the United States. This committee reported in 1910, and in 1911 it practically reaffirmed its former conclusions.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Your committee recommends the adoption of the following resolutions as expressive of the views of this association on the subject of Federal appropriations for extension work.

I. That we again emphatically indorse the plan of Federal appropriations for extension work in agriculture in the several States, including demonstration and field instruction.

II. That in view of the present remarkable growth of interest in this work, and the need of a Nation-wide development of popular education in agriculture, we believe that congressional legislation granting aid to the States for this purpose is at the present of pressing importance for American agriculture, and the most approved method of reaching the masses of the people with the best ideals and practices of scientific agriculture.

III. That we reiterate our approval of a bill substantially embodying the principles of the bill indorsed by this association one year ago, and including the following provisions:

(1) An initial appropriation to each land-grant college for extension work in agriculture and rural life, irrespective of State appropriations for that purpose.

(2) Additional graduated appropriations, after a period of two years, to these land-grant colleges which have a definitely organized extension service, conditional on, at least, equal State appropriations for similar purposes with such maximum as Congress may determine.

IV. That the executive committee be urged to use every legitimate means to secure the passage of such legislation at the coming session of Congress.

In addition to these resolutions of indorsement, the agricultural press of the country, without exception, so far as I know, is unanimously in favor of this bill. More than that, I want to say to my Democratic associates that if they are doubting the wisdom of this proposition, or feel any inclination to vote against it, it would be well for them to take their book of party platforms to-night and take a glance at the Baltimore platform, which declares:

We recognize the value of vocational education, and urge Federal appropriations for such training and extension teaching in agriculture in cooperation with the several States.

Gov. Wilson, in his speech of acceptance, emphatically indorsed the idea in the following language:

There is another duty which the Democratic Party has shown itself great enough and close enough to the people to perceive, the duty of the Government to share in promoting agricultural, industrial, vocational education in every way possible within its constitutional powers. No other platform has given this intimate vision of a party's duty. The Nation can not enjoy its deserved supremacy in the markets and enterprises of the world unless its people are given the ease and effectiveness that come only with knowledge and training. Education is part of the great task of conservation, part of the task of renewal and perfected power.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, if I may be recognized I will yield the gentleman sufficient time in which to close.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did the gentleman have any indorsements of the bill from Pennsylvania agricultural colleges?

Mr. LEVER. I think I have. I will look.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will not press that question now.

Mr. LEVER. Just one moment. There is one from Edwin E. Spark, president of the State College, in which he says that he is anxious to assist in every possible manner, and further states that the State board of agriculture, at a meeting held in Harrisburg last week, adopted a resolution indorsing a Senate bill which is identical with mine.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman if he knows whether any of the colleges to which he has referred have farm lands upon which the youth attending the colleges are actually employed in practical farming?

Mr. LEVER. I think practically every agricultural college has some lands upon which they work out their theories.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman may have gathered from the questions I put to him awhile ago that it is the practical side of the question in which I am particularly interested. There is a farm school in the State of Pennsylvania where the boys are taught the chemistry of the soil and the chemical properties of milk and those other products that the people take from the farm. I want, if possible, to direct the gentleman's attention to the necessity for the practical training of the youth, as much as for the scientific training of the lecturer or expert who goes about teaching farming.

Mr. LEVER. I think there is no disagreement between the gentleman and myself on that proposition. The only disagreement possible would be as to the method by which they can be reached.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bill provides that at least 75 per cent of the money so appropriated by the Government of the United States or by the States shall be applied for field instruction and demonstrations, and that would seem to be lecturing.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, no; not at all. On the contrary, that provision was put into the bill for the very purpose of seeing to it that the money provided by this bill should not be used for lectures and the running of agricultural trains, and the like of that, but that there should be put into every agricultural community practical demonstrations of the best methods of agriculture. The remaining 25 per cent would go to extension work proper and to the teaching of home economics.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But at least 75 per cent must be applied to that purpose alone.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that there would be only 25 per cent available for the actual education of youth or other expenses.

Mr. LEVER. That will go for the purpose of conducting lectures and for carrying out the idea of the bill for instruction in home economics; but the purpose in the mind of those of us who are pressing this bill is that it shall be made obligatory upon the agricultural colleges to take out from themselves and from the experiment stations of the various States the information that they have been gathering together for 50 years and put it on the farm in a practical way with the farmer himself.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I am able to be here when the bill is read under the five-minute rule, I shall attempt to direct the gentleman's attention to the practical side of it by amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I will be very glad to have the gentleman do that.

Mr. Chairman, my time is practically exhausted. I have been interrupted so much that I have not been able to discuss the bill section by section, but I hope to be able to do that when the bill is considered under the five-minute rule, nor have I been able to discuss the matter in such a connected way as I had hoped to do.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I wish for a moment to direct your attention to the popular slogan "Back to the farm," which has caught the fancy of the unthinking and won the favor of those who know little of the actual conditions as they exist upon the farm. Those who so incessantly preach this doctrine seem to imagine that farm life is easy and that those who engage in this profession need only to own a piece of land and a team to reap unimaginable profits. There never was a more mistaken idea. The poet has sung and may continue to sing of the beauties of pastoral life, and no one is willing to say that there is any profession which brings to those engaged in it more of the real joys of life than come to one who has mastered the theories and best practices of the profession of agriculture, but I wish to emphasize this thought: As far as I am concerned, I have small sympathy and less patience with this "back to the farm" cry unless and until it is assured that farming is to become a profession affording to those who engage in it inducements not less attractive than is afforded to those who engage in the other professions of life. I do not hesitate to say that you will never, nor should you try to, induce the boy to go back to the farm until you have made it absolutely conclusive to him that the farm affords him a profession that is as profitable as he can find in the city or in the many other pursuits of life. I have no sympathy with this slogan unless you can show me that the boy who goes back to the farm shall have as many advantages on that farm in the way of education, the means of transportation, a good home, and the refining influences of society as may be possible to the boy of the city. [Applause.] Let those who sing of the beauties of farm life—and I think I have a full appreciation of them—not fail to remember the burdens and the drudgery, the toil, the ceaseless application, the long hours of labor, the isolation, the inconstancy of the weather, and the uncertainty of returns upon the investment incident to this vocation.

If you will make farming profitable, if you will make it enable him who engages in it to have as comfortable a home as can be had in a city for the same expenditure, if you will enable him to give his boy and his girl an equal showing in the world with the boy and the girl of the city, then I join you in the cry of "Back to the farm." I am pleading through this bill for such a revolution in agricultural conditions, for such a reformation in the home life of our farmers as will make agriculture as a calling profitable and country life attractive. Through the work contemplated by this bill we expect to increase the bank accounts of the farmer, to put him into position to have better roads, better schools, better churches, better homes. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we are spending hundreds of millions of dollars annually for the national defense. Our Army and Navy constitute one of the heaviest burdens upon the taxpayers of the land. We appropriate in one year for the support of the Army more than double the amount we have expended in aid of agriculture through agricultural colleges and experiment stations in the last 50 years; we put into one battleship, whose length of life does not exceed 20 years, almost as much as we appropriate for the support of the entire Department of Agriculture, and three times as much as we give to this department for work connected solely with agriculture. It may be a wise policy; I am not willing to put my judgment against the combined wisdom of so many eminent statesmen; but I do desire to suggest as emphatically as I may be able that the surest defense this Nation has as against foreign invasion is the prosperity and contentedness of its great agricultural classes. And more than that, Mr. Chairman, I am willing to venture the prediction that if representative government in this country is to be preserved unimpaired to the future it will be through the conservatism and patriotism of the American farmer. Let us not forget that every dollar invested in a thought is a dollar that lives on forever, because thought is immortal; that every dollar invested to demonstrate a fact lives through eternity, for facts demonstrated are imperishable. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the gentleman will move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges, etc., and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SHARP was granted leave to withdraw papers accompanying H. R. 20815, without leaving copies of same, no adverse report having been made thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Wednesday, August 14, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to state that I received a telegram this morning from the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], stating that on account of serious illness in his family he can not be here. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum. The roll of the absentees will be called.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. CATRON and Mr. OLIVER answered to their names when called.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. CLAPP, Mr. JONES, and Mr. SMITH of Arizona entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. BRADLEY entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the joint resolution may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas the Department of State of the United States detailed, upon the application of the Southern Commercial Congress, David Lubin, American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy, to direct a conference on agricultural finance held under the auspices of the Southern Commercial Congress in Nashville, Tenn., April 1 to 6; and

Whereas 27 States were represented through delegates in the conference; and

Whereas resolutions were unanimously adopted providing for an American commission to go abroad for the investigation of rural credits in Europe; and

Whereas the Southern Commercial Congress will send the commission abroad, composed of delegates from all States of the United States, to report to the International Institute of Agriculture (which, under treaty, is supported by the Government of the United States) at the time of the meeting of the general assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture, May, 1913: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States, in recognition of the valuable service to be rendered the United States in the investigation of the European systems of agricultural finance, hereby indorses the proposed American commission and invokes for it the diplomatic consideration of the countries to be included in the itinerary.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the Southern Commercial Congress was organized for the purpose, primarily, of advancing the material interests of the 16 Southern States, and as indicative of its broad spirit and extended lines of endeavor adopted as its slogan "A greater Nation through a greater South!" Realizing that unique conditions existed in the South, where serious interruption had for a time checked continuous development and where peculiar problems had to be met, it was conceived that some aggressive and constructive effort to make known the possibilities and opportunities to be found there and to push forward and emphasize the agricultural, industrial, commercial, climatic, and educational advantages in that region was a work which was called for and should be followed by rich results.

Accordingly, in an altruistic spirit, having nothing of its own to buy or sell, no ends to accomplish but the general good, that organization has been putting forth its energies along the various directions suggested, and already an enthusiastic awakening has taken place, land values have increased, new capital and new enterprises have been attracted, the unequaled natural resources and material advantages are becoming more justly prized and more widely known, misconceptions as to climate and social conditions are being swept away, accurate information is taking the place of ignorance and misinformation regarding what is called the South, in other portions of the country and abroad, and the day of unprecedented progress dawns.

Without attempting to set forth the practical results already accomplished, which but blaze the way for greater and more substantial achievements in the future, this organization is recognized by those acquainted with its purpose and endeavors and by the various departments of the Government as being engaged in a patriotic public work, in a practical way, for the accomplishment of desirable ends, and their cooperation is cordially extended.

It is now reaching out to promote friendly relations and commercial intercourse with Latin-American countries, and shaping routes and channels of trade which the Panama Canal will open up to us.

The Southern Commercial Congress holds an annual convention where the various subjects which affect the prosperity of the country and the welfare of the people are considered. Its last convention was held in Nashville, Tenn., April 9–10, this year. By permission of the State Department our minister to Denmark, Mr. Maurice Francis Egan, came across the ocean to explain to the people of this country the system of dairying as practiced in Denmark, and after addressing that convention he spent some weeks lecturing to agriculturists on that important subject.

Likewise, authorized by the State Department, Mr. David Lubin, of California, delegate of the United States to the International Institute of Agriculture, with headquarters at Rome, Italy—the institute participated in by 50 nations under treaty—came to this country to attend and address the convention of the Southern Commercial Congress and to conduct a conference on rural credits held in Nashville, April 1–6 last.

The institute had issued publications on the rural cooperative credit system in operation in certain European countries, and these had come to the notice of the Southern Commercial Congress, which took the matter up with Mr. Lubin last January and succeeded in bringing him to this country to guide and direct the conference on the subject mentioned and to address the congress. Twenty-seven States were represented at the Nashville conference, as shown by the minutes of the proceedings, which I will ask to affix as part of my remarks and mark Exhibit A.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. FLETCHER. Resolutions were adopted, as the minutes show, and steps have been taken in accordance therewith.

To investigate foreign systems of cooperative agricultural finance and the adaptability of some such system to the needs of this country, the Southern Commercial Congress will send to Europe in May, 1913, a national commission. This commission will comprise two delegates from each State. It will report to Mr. David Lubin, American delegate, International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy, and, accompanied by Mr. Lubin, will tour the European countries. The commission will report the result of its investigations to the Fifth Annual Convention of the Southern Commercial Congress, which will be held in Mobile, Ala., in September, 1913, about the time of the opening of the Panama Canal.

In the meantime the Southern Commercial Congress has commissioned Edwin Chamberlain, of San Antonio, Tex.; Clarence Poe, of Raleigh, N. C.; and George Woodruff and Frederick K. Woodruff, of Joliet, Ill., to make a preliminary investigation while they are in Europe this summer of agricultural cooperation and cooperative credit systems in Ireland, England, France, Germany, and Denmark. This subcommittee will report to the Southern Commercial Congress prior to the departure of the full committee.

DELEGATE LUBIN'S REPORT.

At the regular monthly meeting of the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture, May 11, 1912, Mr. Lubin made his report, which has been printed as a Senate document, being No. 855. This report was published in the languages of the 50 nations that, under treaty, comprise the International Institute of Agriculture.

WIDESPREAD INTEREST IN AGRICULTURAL FINANCE.

While the Southern Commercial Congress is given credit for the initiative in making an organized effort for the study of European rural credits, it should be understood that throughout the United States and in many countries of the world intense interest is centered on this subject for the solution of economic problems in the interest of the masses of the people who live in rural communities. The American Bankers' Association has appointed a committee composed of ex-Gov. Myron T. Herrick, of Ohio, recently appointed ambassador from the United States to France; B. F. Harris, president of the Illinois Bankers' Association; and Edwin Chamberlain, of San Antonio, Tex. This committee will also investigate the subject.

Secretary Knox, of the Department of State, has commissioned five ambassadors in Europe to make a study of and report to the department on the subject of agricultural finance. Ambassador Herrick is the chairman of this commission.

It is a notable fact that the National Republican Party, in convention in Chicago, adopted a plank pledging an investigation of agricultural finance. The following plank was written in the Democratic national platform by the Democratic convention recently in session in Baltimore:

> Of equal importance with the question of currency reform is the question of rural credits or agricultural finance. Therefore we recommend that an investigation of agricultural credit societies in foreign countries be made, so that it may be ascertained whether a system of rural credits may be devised suitable to conditions in the United States.

There is no more important question confronting the American people to-day than that of agricultural credits. It is basic, as the solution of the problem means relief for the American farmer and the uplift of the entire rural population of the United States. Farmers of the United States pay exorbitant interest on their loans, whereas in countries where cooperative societies are organized money is secured at from 2 to 4 per cent. In Germany alone in 1909 the total business done under the Raiffeisen system was 6,537,075,959 marks—$1,557,203,580. In 1910 the total business done under the Schulze-Delitzsch popular banks system was 13,566,182,463 marks—$3,231,801,035.

It will not do to say Europe can teach us nothing regarding agriculture or suggest to us what would be greatly to the advantage of our farmers.

Mr. Eugene H. Grubb, in World's Work for August, says that "American farm practice is 50 years behind European farm practice." He speaks of "Lord Rosebery's feat of growing 55 long tons—2,000 bushels, or more than 121,000 pounds—of potatoes to the acre on land that has been cultivated for a thousand years." He has studied the European methods and says, "I have increased my yield of potatoes from 100 bushels to 400 bushels an acre; my yield of oats from 40 bushels to 100 bushels an acre; and wheat from 25 bushels to 50 bushels. And I have eliminated crop failure from my experience."

Dr. Wiley is reported as saying that "American farmers are cheating themselves out of $1,500,000,000 a year by using inferior methods of cultivation, and at the same time are contributing materially to the cost of living. In agriculture we are fully 50 years behind Europe, and the better utilization of our farm resources is one of the most important problems before the country."

One thing which will make farming more attractive and contribute immensely to disenthrall the farmer and place him on the new highway of progress will be the adoption of the cooperative idea and putting into effect some such plan as that which rescued the agriculturists of Europe at a time when they were much more in need of encouragement than are the farmers of the United States.

In 1848, when distress prevailed throughout Europe and the money lenders held the poor in their grasp, that system of cooperative credit, which was to influence the agricultural world beyond all estimate, was devised. Raiffeisen and Schulze, German burgomasters, led the way. They were pioneers in the organization of credit societies which brought relief to the people.

Two systems were evolved. The Raiffeisen banks are purely agricultural banks, small farmers and agricultural laborers forming their membership.

The Schulze banks are situated in urban districts chiefly, embracing small men of every class, and are commonly called now "town banks."

Without attempting to examine the two systems in detail, I should imagine we would be more particularly interested in the cooperative credit banks which Raiffeisen established. He worked among the German farmers who were deeply in debt and paying usurious interest, and he solved the problem of agricultural credit by utilizing the personal pledge of the small farmer, supported by the guaranty of his neighbors. Without subsidy or assistance from the State or other aid these banks have met the demand not only in Germany, Belgium, Italy, Austria, Prussia, France, and other countries of Europe, but wherever they have been tried, with unquestioned success.

From a small beginning midway through the nineteenth century, which these courageous pioneers, Raiffeisen and Schulze, made, there has developed "a vast system of more than 15,000 separate offices of which over 13,000 are of the Raiffeisen type." In 1908 we are informed these banks held over $400,000,000 in current accounts and savings, while they had granted over $250,000,000 credit, and during the year of the panic, 1907, while the Imperial Bank was demanding 7 per cent interest, the cooperative banks maintained a rate of 4 per cent. Some cooperative societies have become successful agents for the sale of farm products and the purchase of supplies at wholesale.

German husbandry has been benefited beyond calculation.

Wherever our farmers are prosperous we want to keep them so; wherever they are not, we want to help them to become so.

Agriculture is not only our most important industry, but it is the basis of all others.

Germany may boast of her military supremacy; England may claim first place in the naval world, but America surpasses them all in the commercial world.

Our national prosperity rests on our power to produce what we need. We shall be in a position of supreme power among the nations of the world when they must come to us or go hungry and unclothed.

That nation which produces a surplus of prime necessities of life, which the other nations must have, is in position to dictate, without bullying, in times of peace or war, armed only with the weapon of trade and will not likely need any other.

The European cooperative rural credit systems which we shall examine and endeavor to apply here are substantially in the hands of farmers, operated by farmers, for farmers.

Clearly and persistently this must be borne in mind. The research and study it is proposed to make and the data it is desired to collect and collate and utilize are intended primarily for the advantage and benefit of the American farmer.

Closely related to, if not actually identified with, agricultural finance in the countries of Europe is the practice of cooperative effort by those engaged in agricultural pursuit. We find that course pursued by the dairymen of Denmark in a way which has made that industry, under marked adverse conditions, one of greatest importance.

In Holland, Ireland, and to some extent in England, the cooperative societies have accomplished most satisfactory results.

In France such societies are strengthened by the Government's aid. We have noted how cooperative endeavor has solved the problem of the German agriculturists.

It is believed that the commission which will go to Europe next May, and under the guidance of Mr. Lubin will spend some 70 days in the countries where the most successful and well-tried cooperative systems are in operation, will extend its inquiry beyond the subject of credits and finance, and into the realm of marketing crops, procuring supplies, and other subjects affecting the farmers. It is believed a study of the methods employed there, the practices of prosperous agricultural communities, and especially the subject of agricultural finance, will enable that commission to report facts and findings from which can be devised and formulated a workable plan and system adapted to this country, in a practical way, of inestimable value to all our people, and particularly to those who live nearest the fountain of life in the divine economy.

In 1872 the German Landwirtschaftsrat was formed to look after the interests of agriculture. It is composed of 74 members (25 for Prussia and 49 for the German States), elected by the central associations and is officially recognized by the Imperial Government and the governments of the several States as the representative of the interests of German agriculture. It grew out of the agricultural associations which exist throughout Germany. It addresses itself direct to the chancellor or to the Imperial Parliament on the subject of legislative or administrative measures affecting the interests of agriculture. It publishes a yearbook and fortnightly review and weekly and even daily reports, giving information on prices in each province and throughout the country and abroad, and distributes these to all agricultural associations. We shall have occasion to look into the workings of that system and see whether some adaptation of it not already covered by the splendid service of our Department of Agriculture may not be practicable and useful in the United States. There is every reason to believe that development may be not the least important in this undertaking.

The Southern Commercial Congress will take care of the total expenses of the commission and make all arrangements for the tour and study. In order to give the commission its proper standing with and insure its proper recognition by governments it will come in contact with, it is thought the adoption of the resolution proposed by the Congress of the United States would be in order.

The United States is in no way responsible for the commission; incurs no obligation in connection with it or its service. It is a voluntary commission, raised by the Southern Commercial Congress, will bear its own expenses, and devote its time and labors to the work; and as that work is intended solely for the public good, it is entitled to such encouragement by the Congress of the United States as will promote its strength and add to its usefulness. As to the personnel of the committee, it will be the purpose to observe the injunction of Mr. Lubin, to wit:

> We may materialize a committee, but that committee may be composed of exploiting bankers, and that would be a sad error; or the committee may consist of sight-seeing dilettantis, and that would be a grievous mistake; or it might be formed of cantankerous cranks, and that would be disgraceful; or it may be so loosely coherent as to render it a heterogeneous mob, and that would mean chaos.
> We have a good cause—a cause now indorsed by the two great political parties in our country; by a very large proportion of the people of our country; by the economic and political needs of our country; and we have a sufficient basis of facts in the European systems to justify the efforts we have in hand.

In this connection, I ask to attach as a portion of my remarks a circular issued by Mr. Lubin, which has just come to hand, designated as Exhibit B.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

EXHIBIT A.

CONFERENCE ON AGRICULTURAL FINANCE CONDUCTED BY THE SOUTHERN COMMERCIAL CONGRESS, NASHVILLE, TENN.

The conference on rural banking systems of Europe, called by Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, of Florida, president of the Southern Commercial Congress, met in Nashville, Tenn., April 1 to 6, 1912.

The conference organized with the following officers: Chairman, G. Grosvenor Dawe, managing director of the Southern Commercial Congress; secretary, Clarence J. Owens, secretary-treasurer of the Southern Commercial Congress. The following delegates enrolled:

Hon. David Lubin, American delegate, International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy.

Mr. G. Grosvenor Dawe, managing director, Southern Commercial Congress.

Dr. Clarence J. Owens, secretary-treasurer, Southern Commercial Congress.

Mr. J. D. Eggleston, jr., superintendent public instruction, Richmond, Va.

Mr. Olaf Olsen, assistant cashier First National Bank, Boston, Mass.

Mr. B. F. Harris, president Illinois Bankers' Association, Chicago, Ill.

Mr. George A. Hubbell, president Lincoln University, Cumberland Gap, Tenn.

Mr. Harvie Jordan, president Farmers' Gin Compress & Cotton Co., Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. C. F. Meek, district manager the United States Mercantile Co., Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. Warren H. Wilson, superintendent Presbyterian Department of Church and Country Life, New York, N. Y.

Mr. T. G. Garrett, manager and examiner Nashville Clearing House, Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. F. M. Mayfield, secretary Tennessee Bankers' Association, Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. L. R. Neel, editor Southern Agriculturist, Nashville, Tenn.
Mr. A. P. Foster, secretary Nashville Industrial Bureau, Nashville, Tenn.
Mr. Jackson Davis, State superintendent of rural schools, Richmond, Va.
Mr. F. M. King, Chicago, Ill.
Mrs. Willoughby Williams, Southern Agriculturist, Nashville, Tenn.
Mr. Charles H. Reiffeisen, real estate dealer, Sedalia, Mo.
Mr. J. C. Hardy, president Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, Agricultural College, Miss.
Mr. George P. Phenix, vice president Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va.
Mr. E. W. Gist, United States Department of Agriculture, Nashville, Tenn.
Dr. H. B. Frissell, Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va.
Mr. T. S. Settle, State supervisor rural schools, Richmond, Va.
Mr. Harlan Updergraff, United States Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C.
Mr. E. C. Brooks, Trinity College, Durham, N. C.

Mr. W. L. English, State agent Department of Agriculture, Clemson College, S. C.
Mr. W. H. Lippold, educational secretary Young Men's Christian Association, Louisville, Ky.
Mr. Charles G. Maphis, professor of secondary education University of Virginia.
Mr. H. H. Williams, extension department Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College, College Station, Tex.
Mr. C. M. Evans, superintendent extension work Agricultural and Mechanical College, College Station, Tex.
Mr. O. B. Martin, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.
Miss Jesse Fields, superintendent of schools, Clarinda, Page County, Iowa.
Mr. J. J. Vernon, dean College of Agriculture, University of Florida, Gainesville, Fla.
Mr. H. D. Tate, State agent farm demonstration work, Memphis, Tenn.
Lilian W. Johnson, Central High School, Memphis, Tenn.
Dr. J. F. Duggar, director experiment station, Auburn, Ala.
Mr. J. L. Quicksall, United States Department of Agriculture, Waco, Tex.
Mr. F. M. Jeffords, Boys' Demonstration Clubs, Little Rock, Ark.
Mr. Herbert Myrick, president Orange-Judd Co., Springfield, Mass.

The following letter from Mr. Lubin, addressed to the managing director of the Southern Commercial Congress, was read:

ADAPTATION AND ADOPTION OF THE RAIFFEISEN SYSTEM OF RURAL CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT IN THE UNITED STATES.

(Proposal of a committee of inquiry for that purpose. Correspondence with the Southern Commercial Congress.)

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE,
Rome, Italy, January 11, 1912.

To the MANAGING DIRECTOR SOUTHERN COMMERCIAL CONGRESS,
Southern Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DAWE: I am in receipt of your valued letter of December 26 on the subject of the Raiffeisen system, and wish to say that I have given the same my careful attention. As the subject of this correspondence is of keen interest to several sections of the United States, I shall take the liberty of framing this reply as a public letter.

You say:

"I have now consulted with the executive officers of the Southern Commercial Congress and write you more fully than I was able to do in my letter of the 4th of November.

"That phase of cooperative rural life which is involved in the Raiffeisen system is basic; for it shows the farmers how they can be their own regenerators. Consequently, as we are very seriously addressing ourselves to the task of stimulating efficient rural life in the South, our survey of coopertive systems would be incomplete unless we familiarize the thought of the South with the wisdom of Europe as it has been shown through the pioneer work of Raiffeisen."

Since the institute has sent out its publications on the Raiffeison system (3 volumes in 1910 and 10 volumes in 1911) inquiries are reaching it from all sections of the United States. The inquiries come from the agricultural press, the leading universities, the farmers' institutes, members of the grange, cooperative associations, State institutions, etc. They all express keen interest in the question of cooperative rural credit, and inquire for further data and suggestions with a view to advancing and introducing the Raiffeisen system to meet the needs of the various sections. And now comes your great organization, with an outspoken recognition of the importance of this Raiffeisen system for the economic revival of the South, and, after consulting your executive officers, you suggest that I "be present" at your congress at Nashville, Tenn., on April 8, 9, and 10, "to take the initial step" toward its introduction into America.

Upon consideration it would appear, however, that the question is more complexed than it seems to be at first sight. While the adoption of the Raiffeisen system in the United States would be of incalculable economic benefit to the American people, we must not be unmindful of the grave and serious dangers besetting the path in an attempt to bring this about. There is the danger of untried enthusiasm; of hasty, ill-advised progress thrust forward on receptive minds; and, last but not least, the danger of cunning, cupidity, and downright dishonesty. All of these dangers should be placed in relief and extreme care should be taken to employ the right means toward the desired end.

No mere address delivered from a platform, no mere reading of printed reports, can suffice to obviate the dangers above referred to, and to insure the safe introduction into the United States of the European systems of cooperative rural credits.

There is, however, a way which suggests itself to me as at once conservative, effective, and safe; and that is to follow in the footsteps of the recess committee. The recess committee, formed in 1896, consisted of a number of leading Irishmen who were looking for similar economic ends for Ireland to those which are occupying the attention of your organization in the interest of the Southern States. Their first step was to form a committee of inquiry to travel through the several continental countries where the Raiffeisen and similar systems were in operation; and to make a thorough personal investigation and study of same with a view to adapting them for introduction into Ireland.

The recess committee, consisting of 22 members, was accordingly formed, under the leadership of Sir Horace Plunkett, and as the result of its inquiries in the principal European countries, it was able, in about four months, to hand in to the secretary of state for Ireland a report embodying a scheme for legislation and administration which called for the adoption of the Raiffeisen system of cooperative rural credits. This report has been the starting point toward the economic upbuilding of modern Ireland, resulting in 1908 in the existence of 268 cooperative credit banks in Ireland, as shown by the "Bulletin of the International Institute of Agriculture."

The action of the recess committee, just referred to, offers a valuable example; one which, if followed by the Southern Commercial Congress, would enable it to pioneer the way for the introduction of the Raiffeisen system in the South, thereby supplying, as you say in your letter, the basic means through which "the farmers of the South could be their own regenerators."

Let, then, the Southern Commercial Congress arrange for a representation of at least two members from each of the 16 Southern States affiliated to its organization, making a minimum representation of 32 members. Let these 32 members meet at a time and place to be designated when the subject of the Raiffeisen system may be taken up, and a motion discussd for the appointment of a committee of inquiry to visit the continental countries of Europe, devoting, say, two months to the study of the Raiffeisen system in the countries in which it is in operation, and then proceed on to Rome and continue its studies for another month in the International Institute of Agriculture. The result of these investigations should then be embodied by the committee in the form of a report to the Southern Commercial Congress.

This report could then be given out for public discussion, and would afford a safe and sound basis for a conclusion, a conclusion for final action.

Now, you ask me to attend your congress at Nashville, Tenn., to present the Raiffeisen system, and you further say:

"If, in addition to addressing the congress in Nashville, you should desire to make an extended tour through the South, explaining more in detail the wonderful propaganda you are carrying on, I believe such a trip to America would be regarded as of value in the extreme; for you would be conferring a benefit upon a region that is ready to learn, but that has been very largely, since the time of the war, set aside from the main line of national development."

In replying to this invitation, allow me to again draw your attention to the following statements in my letter to you of November 18, ultimo, wherein I said:

"My duties here to the institute are too important to allow of my employing the time necessary for going and coming, unless it be made clear that so doing would result in greater service than remaining here. * * * If it could be arranged to bring up the Raiffeisen matter for consideration before your Congress, it would offer a good reason for my accepting a formal invitation."

With this end in view, I now make you the following proposals:

First. That the Southern Commercial Congress arrange for a meeting of a select committee of its members representing the 16 Southern

With this end in view, I now make you the following proposals:

Second. That said select committee hold a special session for a week, exclusively for the purpose of considering the Raiffeisen and other European systems of rural cooperative credits, and introduce and vote on a motion for the appointment by the Southern Commercial Congress of a traveling committee of inquiry for the purposes already outlined in this letter.

If your association or its executive committee decide to act on this proposal, I shall be glad to come on, mainly for the purpose of attending the sessions of the said select committee. In addition to this function, I would also, with the approval of your executive committee, attend your meeting in Nashville to address it on the subject under discussion, and would, furthermore, comply with your request to present the matter to the people in an "extended tour through the South," as suggested in your letter.

In view of the widespread and general interest taken in the issue before us, it may not be out of place for me to suggest that if your organization act on this proposal it should invite the presence and participation at the meetings of the proposed select committee of representatives from the National Grange, the National Farmers' Congress, representation from the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce and Labor (officially or semiofficially appointed), economists from the leading universities, representatives of the Nebraska Rural Life Commission (appointed by the Nebraska Legislature), the Trans-Mississippi Congress, the Irrigation Congress, the Dry-Farming Congress, and similar organizations.

Or, if it be not deemed expedient or practicable for representatives of these bodies to be present at this proposed session of the select committee, I would then suggest that the committee appointed as the result of its deliberations be authorized to subsequently add to its number representatives of such organizations as those I have named.

It must be obvious to all who give thought to the matter that the action here proposed—the calling of the select committee by the Southern Commercial Congress, the appointment of the committee of inquiry, its investigations in Europe, its report, and the publicity which all this would engender—must tend toward the solution of the question at issue in the most prudent, conservative, and effective manner.

Such action would not alone be calculated to bring about the best results, but it would also be of great value in preventing mistakes, mistakes that would be likely to prove grievous and dangerous to the economic interests of the people; and it would be especially valuable in preventing attempts by incapables, whilst tending effectively to ward off that army of rapacious and dishonest adventurers who are always eager to avail themselves of the opportunities afforded them by any overhasty or ill-judged initiative, especially so when exerted in such a new field as that of starting in the United States the European systems of rural cooperative credits.

Awaiting the decision of your committee on the proposal I have made, I remain,

Yours, very truly, DAVID LUBIN,
Delegate of the United States,
International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy.

Hon. David Lubin, American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome Italy, prior to his departure from Rome published the following notice from the International Institute of Agriculture:

THE RAIFFEISEN SYSTEM—ITS ADOPTION IN THE UNITED STATES.

The inclosed leaflet is a brief summary of information on the Raiffeisen and other European systems of rural cooperative credit published by the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy.

The keen interest awakened in these systems by the regular publications of the institute has widened the circle of inquirers to an extent which renders this brief summary of the information necessary.

It will also serve as a ready memorandum at the meeting to be held under the auspices of the Southern Commercial Congress at Nashville, Tenn., in the early part of April, 1912, when these systems are to be brought up for consideration and action.

The Southern Commercial Congress has called a special session of a select committee of representatives from various sections of the Union to meet the American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture for the exclusive consideration of the Raiffeisen and other European systems of rural cooperative credit. Said select committee is to introduce and vote on a motion for the appointment of a traveling committee of inquiry to investigate the operation of those systems in Europe. The result of these investigations is to be embodied in the form of a report for public discussion, so as to afford a safe and sound basis for final action toward the introduction or adaptation of these systems in the United States.

DAVID LUBIN,
Delegate of the United States,
International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy.

Upon the organization of the conference Mr. Lubin, who was present by permission of the Department of State to guide the deliberations of the body in the study of the question of agricultural finance, submitted as a basis of study the following outline of the European cooperative credit systems:

An outline of the European cooperative credit systems.

INTRODUCTION.

Since the early part of the nineteenth century European farmers have been struggling against adverse economic conditions. Chief among the difficulties against which they have had to contend has been the competition of new countries of immense territory and virgin soil, which, owing to the improvement in the means of transport, have been able to flood the markets of Europe with agricultural produce. Even in the most perishable products the competition has been severe, for the development of cold storage has enabled them to be brought to Europe from the most distant parts of the world.

To make headway against this competition an economic transformation has been necessary, comparable to the transformation which has taken place in industry. The European farmers have accordingly reorganized not only their technical but their business methods.

The new business methods, which have spread all over Europe and have been adopted even by the new countries (the United States and the British colonies), as well as by Asiatic countries, such as India and Japan, consist in the main in the application of cooperation and mutuality—combined efforts and the acceptance of mutual obligations—to the various branches of the business of agriculture, of which the following are the most important:

(1) The provision of capital.
(2) The purchase of agricultural requirements.
(3) The preparation and sale of agricultural produce.
(4) Farm insurance.

It is with the application of cooperative and mutual methods to the provision of capital that we are here concerned, and we will endeavor to trace not only the principles of cooperative credit, but the methods in which those principles have been applied in various countries.

The main principle underlying all forms of cooperative credit is that if a group of persons combine to furnish a collective guaranty they can, on the security of that guaranty, obtain money at lower rates of interest than they could obtain it individually.

The collective guaranty may be that of real property. A number of landowners may obtain capital on the security of a collective mortgage of their lands. This is the basis of German Landschaften, one of the oldest forms of cooperative credit institutions.

Or, again, the collective guaranty may be a personal one. A number of persons may obtain capital by making themselves jointly responsible for its repayment. Such liability may be unlimited or limited.

Unlimited liability is a fundamental part of the Raiffeisen system, but in the Schulze-Delitzsch system the liability of the members of the group is usually limited. Where the members are landowners the collective personal guaranty becomes indirectly a property guaranty.

Upon such guaranties capital may be obtained in a variety of ways. In Germany the Landschaften issue bonds, but the Raiffeisen banks derive their working capital mainly from the deposits they are able to attract. In France the rural banks depend mainly upon capital advanced by the State. In all countries the credit societies are able to obtain capital from the larger banking institutions or from the investing public, derive their working capital mainly from the deposits they are able to lend it to one another at a rate of interest only slightly in excess of the rate which they pay collectively. This requires two conditions—(1) that the expenses of management shall be small in proportion to the business done, and (2) that the risk of loss shall be reduced to a minimum.

Where the business is very large, the expenses are not proportionately high, even if the undertaking be conducted on ordinary commercial lines, as we shall see in the case of the Schulze-Delitzsch banks. Where, however, the business is small there must be no attempt to pay high dividends and the management must be largely voluntary. In the banks formed on the Raiffeisen system (which are individually small, though in the aggregate they do an enormous business) the payment of dividends is either prohibited altogether, or it is limited to a small percentage, while the management is almost entirely gratuitous.

To reduce the risk of loans to members, many safeguards have been devised which are adopted to varying extents in the different systems.

Where the members are landowners and can give mortgages of their property, it is only necessary to insure that the amount of the loan shall be fully secured by the mortgage, allowing for any possible depreciation in the value of the property. Loans on mortgage are, however, an inconvenient form of credit, where capital is only required for a comparatively short period, and the following are the principal safeguards for loans given on personal security:

(1) That loans are only made to members of the group and that only persons known to be trustworthy are admitted.

(2) That membership is confined to persons residing within a small district and that, therefore, the members are personally known to one another.

(3) That the members being mutually responsible, it will be to the interest of all members to keep an eye upon a borrower and to see that he makes proper use of the money lent to him.

(4) That, in like manner, it is to the interest of all members to help a member when he is in difficulties.

(5) That the borrower is required to find sureties or give other collateral security for the repayment of the loan.

(6) That the borrower binds himself to apply his loan to a specific purpose which will bring in a monetary return sufficient to enable him to repay the sum borrowed, to pay the interest charged, and to leave a profit for himself.

It is not to be supposed that the whole of these safeguards are adopted in all cases. Loans, for example, are sometimes given on the borrower's mere note of hand, without any collateral security. The fixing of the application of the loan, again, is most important where the borrowers are small cultivators unaccustomed to commercial methods, and is usually relaxed as their economic education becomes more advanced. We thus find it more generally insisted upon by the Raiffeisen banks in Austria and Italy, where they are of more recent introduction than in Germany, where the members have now become familiarized with the commercial uses of credit.

We shall now see how these principles are applied in practice. In the survey which follows of agricultural cooperative credit in various countries we shall begin with Germany, since it was in that country that the three most important forms of cooperative credit—the Raiffeisen banks, the Schulze-Delitzsch banks, and the Landschaften—were originated. We shall then deal with Austria and Italy, in which countries the systems adopted are mere modifications of the German systems, and it will only be necessary for us to indicate in what respects they depart from the German model. Then will follow chapters on France, where cooperative credit is based largely upon an elaborate system of State aid, and Belgium, where we shall note the existence of a form of organization not found in other countries. The last two chapters will relate to Great Britain and Ireland, where cooperative credit is not as yet highly developed, and to British India, where it has been promoted directly by the Government.

CHAPTER I.

RURAL BANKS IN GERMANY—THE RAIFFEISEN SYSTEM.

In the first half of the past century the small farmers and small artisans of Germany, who could not have recourse directly to capitalists or to banks, suffered severely at the hands of the usurers, from whom they procured the credit which was indispensable to the exercise of their business. The seriousness of the situation, rendered more acute by the economic transition which was taking place, and was bringing with it a great and urgent need of credit, was clearly recognized by two men, who have deserved well not only of Germany but of the whole civilized world, by devising and putting into practice the best methods of remedying the evil. These were Frederick William Raiffeisen, burgomaster of Weyerbusch, and Francis Frederick Schulze, better known by the name of Schulze-Delitzsch. The former was the originator of the rural cooperative banks, which have spread into all civilized countries, the latter of the urban popular banks.

These two forms of cooperative banks, although somewhat different in their organization, are based on the common fundamental principle of organizing the would-be borrowers themselves in order that they may obtain by combination the credit facilities which they would have sought individually in vain.

Such cooperation has made possible, on the one hand, the collection among the members themselves, in the form of shares or of small deposits, of a considerable amount of capital, which serves to supply the credit requirements of their fellow members. On the other hand, the cooperative credit societies, being regularly managed and subject to rigorous supervision, have been able to procure credit on favorable terms from outside sources of capital.

The credit given by the Raiffeisen banks, which are rural in character, and by the Schultze-Delitzsch, which are mainly urban, is usually personal credit. Although they occasionally grant loans on mortgage for long periods, they generally confine themselves to the making of loans for comparatively short periods (in the Raiffeisen banks usually for one year, with a maximum of three or five years; in the Schulze-Delitzsch banks, three or six months) on personal security or on the security of personal property.

Loans on mortgage for long periods are, however, granted by another type of cooperative credit society, of which we shall have occasion to speak later, viz, the Landschaften and Ritterschaften. These are associations formed by landowners with the object of obtaining credit for land improvement by the issue of mortgage bonds.

We shall describe in this chapter the organization and working of the Raiffeisen banks.

1. ORGANIZATION OF THE RURAL BANKS.

The fundamental principles of the Raiffeisen system are:

(1) Unlimited liability of the members.
(2) A restricted area of operations.
(3) Gratuitous management.

To these principles, which he wished to be always applied with the utmost rigor and without allowing any exception, Herr Raiffeisen added a body of moral and educational doctrines.

In addition to the rural banks which follow strictly the Raiffeisen principles, and are combined in a national federation with headquarters at Neuwied (now removed to Berlin), there have also arisen other organizations which, although adopting the fundamental ideas of Raiffeisen, have not accepted the excessive strictness of his rules, and have treated as superfluous the mystical doctrines which he had introduced into cooperation. The societies of this type, after having long hesitated between a separate organization and the Schulze-Delitzsch Federation, were finally collected under the guidance of William Haas into a separate national federation, which had its headquarters first at Offenbach and then at Darmstadt.

The former of these federations became affiliated to the National Federation in 1904, and to indicate the rapid development of the rural banks we may here state that the number of societies embraced within the National Federation increased from 10,786 in 1904, with a membership of 954,000 and a total business (incoming and outgoings) of 2,490,000,000 marks (a mark is equivalent to 0.238 dollar or 0.0489 pound sterling), to 12,614 in 1909, with a membership of 1,163,000 and a total business of 4,456,000,000 marks.

Certain differences (not, however, very serious) continue to exist between the pure Raiffeisen banks and the societies established on less strict lines. We shall have occasion to speak of these differences in outlining, as we now proceed to do, the leading features of the organization of the Raiffeisen banks. The statements are based upon the reports of the National Federation and the figures relate (except where the context otherwise indicates) to the year 1909 and to the 12,614 rural banks embraced within the National Federation in that year.

Membership.—The members are farmers, usually peasant-proprietors. The 12,614 rural banks existing in 1909 numbered in all 1,163,186 members—that is, an average of 92 members per bank. The number of members per bank varies considerably, however, in different regions, the highest average being in Westphalia, where it reaches 160 members per bank. The minimum number required by the legal constitution of the banks is 7, and some of the recently-formed banks have exactly this number of members. The highest number of members contained in any one bank is 1,400, but this is a very exceptional case.

Liability.—The principle maintained by Raiffeisen was that of the unlimited joint and several liability of the members. While for other forms of rural cooperation the system of limited liability is increasingly adopted, the system of unlimited liability is still regarded in Germany as the system best adapted to rural cooperative credit. Of the banks existing in Germany 92 per cent are based upon unlimited liability and about 8 per cent upon limited liability. A fractional percentage of the banks were based upon an intermediate system, known as the system of unlimited liability to make supplementary payments.

Shares.—Raiffeisen commenced by excluding shares altogether, in order to avoid any danger of capitalistic speculation and, in fact, up to 1876 none of his banks had shares.

Being obliged in that year to comply with the imperial law which compelled cooperative societies to have foundation capital, he sought to evade the law as far as possible and fixed the shares at a maximum value of 10 marks. The Darmstadt Federation, on the other hand, recommended comparatively large shares, but in no case higher than 500 marks. In very few cases, however, does the value of the share exceed 100 marks.

In 1909 the average paid-up capital per member amounted to 19 marks. But in this regard also there are great differences as between different regions. The necessity of forming a foundation capital is, in fact, not so great in the case of the exclusively agricultural banks, the operations of which are guaranteed by the lands of the members, as in the case of banks which can only offer a personal guaranty.

Thus in Rhenish Prussia and Hesse, which are mainly industrial, the average paid-up share capital is respectively 103 and 86 marks, while on the other hand, the average is lowest in other regions, such as Westphalia and Oldenburg, where it hardly reaches 4 or 6 marks.

In the societies where the liability is unlimited a member can not take more than one share; in societies with limited liability, however, ha may taken many. The value of the shares and, in the latter case, also their number, are fixed by the rules. The shares are repayable to the members upon withdrawal from the society, and interest is paid upon them at a rate which must not in any case exceed the interest which borrowers pay upon loans from the society.

Entrance fees.—The pure Raiffeisen system does not admit of any entrance fees, as being contrary to the lofty conceptions of mutual responsibility which inspired Raiffeisen's propaganda. Raiffeisen wished that his banks should be open to anyone who required to have recourse to them. The Darmstadt Federation, however, allows small entrance fees, which are immediately carried to the reserve fund.

Area of operations.—Another fundamental principle of the Raiffeisen system is that the area of operations should be limited to a commune or a parish. The system of the rural banks is, in fact, founded on mutual confidence and collective liability; the members must not only know each other personally but must also be able to see from day to day the manner in which their money is employed.

Management.—The organization of the rural banks being, so to speak, familiar and friendly, their management is very simple. The administrative functions are divided between the committee of management, the council of supervision, and the general meeting. The executive work is carried out by the treasurer, who is often the only employee of the bank, and in any case is responsible for the work of the other employees.

The general meeting appoints the committee of management, the council of supervision, and the treasurer. The conduct of the business is intrusted to the committee of management, upon which often sit the best educated persons of the district, such as the schoolmasters or priests; for these, however, actual farmers are being more and more substituted.

The committee of management usually give their services gratuitously. This, too, is one of the principles of the pure Raiffeisenism, which, however, permits in any case the remuneration of the treasurer. The Darmstadt Federation also allows the committeemen to be paid for their services when the business of the bank is fairly large.

In 1909 the expenses of management amounted, on the average, to the modest sum of 638 marks per bank. Here, too, one finds marked differences between the various federations. In Ermland, in East Prussia, and in West Prussia the average expenses of management are rather high, ranging from 1,200 to 1,400 marks. The lowest average is found in the Upper Palatinate, where it is 244 marks. If again we consider the general expenses in proportion to the total business done (i. e., the sum of the incomings and outgoings), we find an average percentage of 0.18, with a maximum of 0.53 per cent in the Nassau Federation (Frankfort on the Main) and a minimum of 0.04 per cent in Schleswig-Holstein.

2. THE BUSINESS OF THE RURAL BANKS.

Let us now examine first the sources from which the rural banks draw their working capital and then the methods of advancing the capital so obtained to their own members. We shall thus follow the complete cycle according to which the business of the rural banks is conducted.

Working capital.—The capital which the banks have at their disposal for making loans to their members is composed of the shares paid up by the members, the reserve fund accumulated in previous years, the savings deposits and deposits on current account, and, lastly, the sums which the bank procures by means of loans from central cooperative banks, other banks, or private individuals.

In the balance sheet, the working capital is approximately the same as the total liabilities. It is true that in the total liabilities are also included items, such as bills issued, which appear in equal amounts on both sides of the balance sheet, and figures relating to certain operations (e. g., property deposited, payments, etc.) which are not part of the capital at the disposal of the bank. However, not being able to eliminate such items, and taking into consideration that they are comparatively unimportant in the case of the rural banks, we can consider the working capital as being roughly equivalent to the total liabilities.

The total liabilities amounted in 1909, for the whole of the German Empire, to 1,900,000,000 marks, being an average of 153,000 marks per bank and 1,664 marks per member. These averages varied between rather wide extremes. The average per bank reached almost half a million marks in the Ermland Federation, while it was as low as 67,000 marks in the Grand Duchy of Baden. The average per member was highest in Rhenish Prussia (the Bonn Federation), where it reached 3,000 marks, and lowest in the Grand Duchy of Baden, where it was 700 marks.

Let us now analyze the total working capital according to the items which compose it:

	Marks.	Percentage of the total.
Share capital	22,358,433	1.2
Reserve	50,981,069	2.6
Deposits on current account	189,077,842	9.8
Savings deposits	1,455,618,456	65.2
Other liabilities	217,487,462	11.2
Total working capital	[1] 1,935,523,262	100.0

[1] $461,089,632, or £94,744,821.

Under the head of "Other liabilities" are included, besides other items, the sums which the banks have procured by loans from banks and individual capitalists.

The share capital together with the reserve funds form the banks' own capital; the remainder is capital from outside sources. Following this simpler classification we find that the former amounts to 73,339,502 marks, or 3.8 per cent of the total, and the latter to 1,862,183,760 marks, or 96.2 per cent.

These figures suggest some interesting considerations. We see, first of all, that the rural banks succeed in carrying on an enormous business on the foundation of an extremely slender capital. The current accounts and savings deposits furnish, however, the greater part of the working capital, viz, 85 per cent of the total. As against this the loans from third parties only form a relatively small figure, which demonstrates the capacity of the rural banks to provide, for the most part, by the ordinary means, for their operations without having recourse, to too great an extent, to loans from outsiders. Out of nearly 2,000,000,000 marks placed at the disposal of the farmers, only 11.2 per cent was furnished by outsiders, while 88.8 per cent was provided by the savings and deposits of the farmers themselves or of the local public.

To the capital of the society we have referred when speaking of the shares; of the reserve fund we shall speak when dealing with the distribution of the profit. We need only remark here that the capital obtained from outside sources is twenty-five times as large as the societies' own capital (share capital and reserve). This proposition is generally considered too high. There is a tendency, therefore, at present to increase the value of the shares, raising it to 50 or 100 marks, in order to provide the rural banks with a wider margin to cover possible fluctuations in the deposits.

In regard to the deposits it should be noted that savings deposits may be made either by members or by nonmembers, but that deposits on current account can only be made by members. In 1909 the savings deposits averaged 115,000 marks per bank. In the various federations this average reached a maximum of 447,000 marks in the Ermland Federation and was lowest in Federation of Alsace-Lorraine, where it was 43,000 marks. The averages of the deposits on current account were lower, being 22,905 marks per bank and 247 marks per member. The highest averages were found in the Grand Duchy of Hesse, viz, 84,466 marks per bank and 684 marks per member, and the lowest in the Federation of Posen (No. II) and in the Raiffeisen Federation of Alsace-Lorraine, being, respectively, 4,398 marks and 4,643 marks per bank and 49 marks and 27 marks per member.

We have said that 11 per cent of the working capital is drawn from outside sources. These include the central cooperative banks, the banking institutions, and the private individuals with whom the rural banks contract debts by means of banking operations. Since the development of the central banks, however, the business of this kind with other banks or with private individuals has greatly diminished. It will be more convenient to speak of the business done with the central banks when we are dealing with these latter, but we may here remark that since the working capital of the central banks is formed to a large extent by the funds received from the local rural banks the proportion of the money provided by the farmers themselves to be employed in loans for the benefit of agriculture is really even larger than would appear from the figures previously given.

The granting of loans, etc.—The business of the banks consists, for the most part, in making advances to members. Surplus money is deposited with the central banks or invested in banking operations with third parties. With regard to the loans to members, we will speak first of their character and then of the security upon which they are made.

The rural banks make loans of two kinds, viz, loans on current account and loans for fixed periods. At the end of 1909 the loans to the members outstanding were thus classified:

	Marks.	Percentage of total.
Loans on current account	425,995,403	28.3
Loans for fixed periods	1,082,446,388	71.7
Total loans outstanding	1,508,441,791	100.0

The loans on current account were, therefore, about a third of the total loans. In all the banks there is a tendency to extend the practice of giving loans on current account. This is generally the most convenient form of loan for the members, for whom the small rural bank serves as banker, just as the great banking institutions do for the merchants and manufacturers of the city. But this form of loan requires a higher economic education in the members and more advanced social conditions.

The members guarantee the fulfillment of their obligations to the bank by finding sureties, by the deposit of valuables (share certificates, etc.), by giving a mortgage or by their mere promise. The finding of sureties is the form of security usually preferred.

The period of the loans varies from six months to two or three years and even more in exceptional cases.

Various other arrangements have been thought out to diminish the risk of the loans granted by the rural banks. Thus, for example, the law relating to cooperative societies lays it down that the general meeting shall fix the maximum limit beyond which loans must not be made to the members, whatever may be their financial position or whatever the security offered.

The principal safeguard, however, for the success of the rural banks lies in their very constitution. The limited area of operations and the nature of rural life make it possible for each member to keep an eye upon the affairs of his fellow members, in which, moreover, he is directly interested, so that he can easily judge at any moment of their solvency and of the manner in which they are utilizing the money obtained from the bank.

Profits.—The object of the rural banks is to give credit to their members on favorable terms and not to make a commercial profit.

The Raiffeisen system, accordingly, does not admit of any distribution of dividend, all the profits realized being carried to the reserve fund or to the creation of institutions of public utility. The Darmstadt Federation, on the other hand, allows a distribution of dividend on the shares, which, however, must not exceed the maximum rate of interest charged to borrowers.

In 1909 the net profit realized by the rural banks was more than 7,000,000 marks. This is sufficient evidence of the flourishing condition of these institutions. Of this enormous profit only a small fraction was distributed as dividend. In no case, in fact, did the dividends distributed exceed 4 per cent of the paid-up shares, and in many cases no dividends at all were distributed. In this manner the banks are continually strengthening their financial position. This is demonstrated by the steady increase of the reserve funds. In a single year, from 1908 to 1909, the aggregate reserve fund was increased by 7,000,000 marks, while the profits realized at the end of 1908 were about 8,000,000 francs. Thus seven-eighths—that is, 87 per cent—of the profits made in that year were carried to the reserve.

3. STATISTICS OF THE RURAL BANKS.

The following statistics will show, better than it can otherwise be indicated, the great development in Germany of the rural banks, which were so modestly initiated in 1862.

We give first a table relating to the number of banks legally established in Germany, as shown by their registration in the Gazette of the Empire.

TABLE I.—Number of rural banks in Germany on June 1 in each year from 1890 to 1910.

	Number.
1890	1,729
1891	2,134
1892	2,647
1893	3,040
1894	3,850
1895	4,872
1896	6,391
1897	7,612
1898	8,595
1899	9,208
1900	9,793
1901	10,487
1902	11,121
1903	11,750
1904	12,477
1905	13,181
1906	13,635
1907	14,096
1908	14,709
1909	15,158
1910	15,517

We now give some figures showing the business done by the 12,614 rural banks embraced in the National Federation in 1909. It should be noted that while the figures in the preceding table are derived from information which the societies are bound by law to publish, the following figures are privately collected by the federations (of which we shall give an account presently), and more particularly by the National Federation.

TABLE II.—Business done by the rural banks in 1909.

4. THE FEDERATIONS AND CENTRAL INSTITUTIONS OF THE RURAL BANKS.

(We adopt here a distinction which is not in general use in English. The word "federation" will be employed to indicate a central organization of cooperative societies for such purposes as propaganda, education, supervision, and mutual defense. By "central institution" we shall mean a central organization of cooperative societies for business purposes.)

The rural banks felt from the beginning the need of combination amongst themselves for common purposes. The need was twofold. On the one hand, a common organization was required to direct the movement and to give it uniformity; on the other hand, there was need of central institutions which might equalize the need of credit of the individual banks, supplying them with money when required and employing their surplus funds.

For the first of these objects the federations were formed; for the second, the central institutions.

(a) The federations.—The federations of cooperative societies are unions formed for propaganda, education, and mutual defense. They embrace not only rural credit societies, but rural cooperative societies of every kind.

We have already mentioned the existence of two great federations which embrace the whole Empire within their sphere of operations—the Federation of Agricultural Cooperative Societies, with headquarters at Neuwied, founded by Raiffeisen in 1877, and the National Federation of German Agricultural Cooperative Societies, which was founded in 1883, and has its headquarters at Darmstadt. For a long time these led a separate existence, each propagating its own ideas; sometimes, too, there was hostility between them. Finally, in 1905, the Neuwied Federation became affiliated to the National Federation of Darmstadt. There is now, therefore, a single organization, the National Federation of Darmstadt, which embraces a very large majority of the German agricultural cooperative societies. It contained on June 1, 1910, no less than 18,962 cooperative societies, including 78 central cooperative societies, 12,894 cooperative credit societies, 2,077 cooperative distributive societies, 2,028 cooperative dairies, and 1,885 cooperative societies of other kinds.

The national federation is, in reality, composed of provincial federations. In fact, only five cooperative societies, of which four are central institutions, are directly affiliated to the national federation, while all the rest are indirectly attached to the national federation by being affiliated to the respective provincial federations. These are federations which embrace the cooperative societies in a defined portion of the territory of the Empire, and which, although affiliated to the national federation, enjoy a large degree of autonomy.

Besides the work of instruction, organization, and propaganda, they fulfill the very important function of inspection, assigned to them by the law of 1889. For this purpose they employ inspectors, who, by frequent visits, supervise the management and the conduct of the business of the affiliated societies.

To indicate the importance of the provincial federations, it is sufficient to say that of the 23,845 rural cooperative societies existing in Germany in 1910, no less than 21,830 (i. e., 92 per cent) were organized in federations. The number of provincial federations affiliated to the national federation is 41. Besides these, there are some independent federations which embrace a limited number of cooperative societies and of which the most important is the Federation of Wurtemberg, containing 1,383 cooperative societies in 1908.

(b) The central banks.—As we have already indicated, the second method of centralizing rural banks and cooperative societies in general is the formation of central banks. Between these and the federations there is no confusion of functions, but they mutually support one another. The central banks undertake the provision of capital for the rural banks and the utilization of their surplus funds, when they have any, always keeping in touch with the corresponding federation, to which they are usually linked by the fact that the same persons manage the business of both institutions. Further, the central banks, as a rule, only admit cooperative societies which already belong to the federation of their province.

The provincial central banks are cooperative societies with limited liability. The Bank of Darmstadt alone is a company with liability limited by shares, having been founded before the law of 1889 allowed the formation of central cooperative societies composed of other cooperative societies.

In 1910 there were affiliated to the national federation 36 provincial central banks, of which 35 were distributed throughout the various regions of Germany, and one was in the German colony of Southwest Africa.

Speaking broadly, it may be said that the central banks fulfill the same functions for the rural banks which the rural banks fulfill for their members.

As in the case of the rural banks, the working capital is furnished by the share capital, by the deposits of the cooperative societies, and by the sums which they procure by loans from the general central banks, or the Prussian Central Bank (of which we shall speak presently) and from other banks, or private bankers. In like manner as we have seen in the case of the separate rural banks, the most important part of the working capital is formed by the deposits of the members. This is clearly shown by the following table, which indicates the working capital of the provincial central banks at the end of 1909:

	Marks.	Percentage of total.
Paid-up capital	21,493,532	8.2
Reserve funds	4,321,500	1.6
Deposits of the members	187,345,775	71.3
Loans from the general central banks and the Prussian Central Bank	19,047,687	7.2
Loans from other banks or from private individuals and liabilities in respect of bills	28,616,979	10.9
Other items	1,990,123	.8
Total	[1] 262,815,596	100.0

[1] $62,609,191, or £12,864,953.

From these figures we see that of the working capital of the provincial banks 9.8 per cent is formed by the funds of the banks themselves (share capital and reserve), 71.3 per cent by deposits, and 18.9 per cent by loans contracted with third parties. If we compare these percentages with the corresponding figures for the rural banks, we shall see that the funds of the banks themselves, though representing in both cases only a small proportion of the total available capital, is appreciably higher in the central banks than in the rural banks, while the proportion of the deposits is less and of the loans from third parties greater. Accordingly the central banks, by regulating the rate of interest, endeavor to increase the amount of the members' deposits, and thus to lessen the necessity of having recourse to outside sources of capital.

The central banks utilize their working capital in making loans to the cooperative societies either in the form of advances on current account or of loans for fixed periods. The first kind is by far the most usual, unlike what we have seen in the case of the rural banks. This is explained by the fact that the central banks are dealing with economic organisms which are more developed, and therefore better adapted to this more advanced form of credit. At the end of 1909 the provincial central banks had about 182,000,000 marks outstanding on loan, of which 173,000,000 marks (that is, 95 per cent) were loans on current account and 9,000,000 marks (5 per cent) loans for fixed periods. The remainder of the capital was invested in securities or in discounting bills of exchange, or deposited with the general central banks or with other banks or private bankers.

Besides the provincial banks of which we have spoken, there are also two general central cooperative banks which, unlike the provincial banks, have a sphere of operations which is not limited to that of a provincial federation, but extends over the whole Empire. These are the Central Agricultural Loan Bank of Germany, with headquarters at Berlin, which was founded by Raiffeisen in 1876 and until recently had its headquarters at Neuwied, and the National Bank for Cooperative Societies, with headquarters at Darmstadt, established in 1902 by the national federation. Both of these banks are companies with liability limited by shares.

The Darmstadt bank deals almost exclusively with the 36 provincial central banks. To the Berlin bank, on the other hand, are affiliated 4,399 rural banks of the pure Raiffeisen type scattered over the whole of Germany. The loans granted to members amounted, in the case of the Berlin bank, to 74,600,000 marks (of which 2,000,000 were loans for fixed periods) and in the case of the Darmstadt bank to about 11,000,000 marks, all being loans on current account.

The following table gives aggregate statistics of the provincial banks and separate statistics of the two general banks for the financial year 1909:

CHAPTER II.

POPULAR BANKS IN GERMANY—THE SCHULZE-DELITZSCH SYSTEM.

The rural banks and their central banks are not the only cooperative societies in Germany which provide agriculture with personal credit; we must also take account of the popular banks on the Schulze-Delitzsch system. (We employ the expression "popular banks," although this is not the title usually adopted in Germany, where they are known as "savings and loan banks." English writers usually describe them as "urban banks," but we avoid this title, as we are considering the banks in relation to agriculture. The title "popular banks," given in Italy to the Luzzatti banks, seems equally appropriate for the Schulze-Delitzsch banks upon which the Luzzatti banks were modeled.)

These banks, which were formed before the rural banks and served as models for the first banks founded by Raiffeisen, assisted largely at the beginning of the cooperative movement to combat usury, even in the country. Even now, notwithstanding the great development of the rural banks, they are largely utilized by farmers, many of whom belong, as we shall now see, to the banks themselves.

While Raiffeisen adapted cooperation to the needs and to the mental attitude of the farmers, Schulze-Delitzsch devised organizations specially suited to the needs and economic character of town dwellers. The Schulze-Delitzsch banks have, therefore, unlike the rural banks, a large range of business in an extended area of operations; they accumulate a considerable quantity of capital and they distribute fairly high dividends. They do not follow the principle of unpaid management; on the contrary their management is rather costly and is conducted on strict business lines. They are very often based on limited liability and they carry on a series of banking operations which the rural banks only undertake exceptionally, if at all. In fact, their business approaches more closely than that of the rural banks to banking business properly so called.

The greater number of the Schulze-Delitzsch banks are affiliated to a general federation, of which we shall speak in due course. The number of banks affiliated to this federation increased from 904 in 1901 to 939 in 1910, while the membership increased during the same period from 527,000 to 600,000; the loans granted in 1901 amounted to 2,525,500,000 marks, while the loans granted in 1910 amounted to 4,015,900,000 marks.

There exist also a certain number of independent banks, unattached to the federation. Of 1,035 banks which furnished particulars of their working in 1910 to the federation 939 were affiliated to the federation and 96 were independent of it. The particulars which follow refer exclusively (except where otherwise indicated) to the 939 banks affiliated to the federation.

1. ORGANIZATION OF THE POPULAR BANKS.

There are marked differences between the popular banks and the rural banks, both in regard to the character of the members and to the size of their shares.

Membership.—The average membership of the popular banks in 1910 was 639, a figure considerably higher than the average for rural banks.

Whilst the rural banks draw their members exclusively from farmers, the Schulze-Delitzsch banks include members of various occupations. This is, indeed, a fundamental principle of the system, which regards an equitable representation of the various occupations and social classes as a factor making for the stability and prosperity of the popular banks.

In the following figures are shown, by percentages, the different classes which composed the membership of the popular banks at the end of 1910:

	Per cent.
1. Independent agriculturists (farmers, etc)	26.57
2. Wage-earning agriculturists (laborers, etc.)	2.41
3. Artisans	23.03
4. Merchants, manufacturers, etc	19.72
5. Workmen, apprentices, and wage earners generally	10.55
6. Professional men, civil servants, clerks, etc	8.93
7. Persons living on pensions or possessing independent means	8.79
	100.00

The class most largely represented are the independent agriculturists, who are usually farmers cultivating small or medium-sized holdings. Next come the artisans. These two classes together furnish about half the total membership. Considering the members from the point of view of social status, we may say that the popular banks contain principally persons belonging to the lower middle classes, without, however, excluding either the working classes or the persons who, like civil servants, manufacturers, etc., occupy a higher economic and social position.

Liability.—In 1910, out of a total of 939 banks, 567 (that is, 60.3 per cent) were based on unlimited liability and 372 on limited liability.

Although the system of limited liability is steadily increasng, unlimited liability is still considered the best system on which to establish popular banks in districts which are not yet familiar with cooperative credit.

Shares.—The shares of the members are, as we have already remarked, rather high. The general congress of the popular banks of 1896 recommended that the shares should be at least 300 marks. A subsequent congress recommended for banks with limited liability a minimum of 500 marks, limiting the liability of the members to three times the amount of the shares. At present the average share capital per member is 360 marks, but there is a constant tendency to increase it. In 1882 the average was 223 marks, increasing successively to 226 marks in 1892 and to 276 marks in 1902, finally reaching the present figure. It may be anticipated that this tendency will continue in the future, in view of the desire to insure for the popular banks a greater stability and independence.

2. THE BUSINESS OF THE POPULAR BANKS.

Working capital.—The aggregate working capital of the popular banks was nearly 1,500,000,000 marks at the end of 1910, giving the truly remarkable average of 1,500,088 marks per bank. This average, which shows the financial importance of the popular banks, is the result of a continuous upward movement. In 1886 it was only 617,000 marks; in 1898 it rose to 800,000 marks and in 1902 it reached the million. In the last 20 years the aggregate funds at the disposal of the popular banks has therefore been trebled.

Examining the sources from which these funds are derived, we find the following figures in 1910.

	Marks.	Percentage.
Share capital	216,330,103	14.8
Reserve funds	94,187,564	6.5
Capital from outside sources	1,145,014,688	78.7
Total working capital	[1] 1,455,532,355	100.0

[1] $346,743,897, or £71,249,028.

The proportion of the banks' own funds (21.3 per cent) is therefore appreciably higher than in the case of the rural banks. The sources of information at our disposal do not distinguish between the funds derived from deposits and those obtained from third parties. The sum stated as "capital obtained from outside sources" includes, therefore, the savings or deposits on current accounts as well as the sums which the banks obtain from other institutions or from private individuals by contracting loans at sight or for fixed periods against acceptances or mortgages of their property.

Banking operations.—Speaking broadly, the Schulze-Delitzsch banks carry on every kind of banking business.

Their primary object is, however, that of granting loans for short periods to their members. For this purpose they used 4,000,000,000 marks in 1910, of which at the end of the year, 1,200,000,000 marks were still outstanding.

In regard to the period of the loans, we find that of the sums advanced during the year 41.5 per cent were on current account. The remainder was lent for fixed periods by means of discounting bills of exchange or giving loans on pledge or on mortgage. This last form of loan is, however, from the very nature of the popular banks, comparatively rare; at the end of 1910 the loans on mortgages amounted to scarcely 10 per cent of the total loans granted.

Where special guaranties, such as pledges or mortgages, are not given, the loans are guaranteed by sureties or by acceptances, sureties being usually preferred. A small number of loans are granted without guaranty of any kind.

Surplus funds are deposited with other institutions or invested in securities of first-class bills (bankers' acceptances), which represent the safest means of realization in case of any unforeseen eventuality. At the end of 1910 the popular banks possessed 61,000,000 marks deposited with other institutions, 98,000,000 marks in securities, and 22,000,000 marks in first-class bills, making a total of 181,000,000 marks of easily realizable assets. They also possessed 51,000,000 marks in real property, including office buildings and property acquired as the result of loans not repaid.

Profits and losses.—The gross profits realized in the year 1910 amounted to more than 76,000,000 marks. Of this sum 43,000,000 marks was required to pay the interest on the capital obtained from outside sources. The gross profit represented 5.23 per cent of the working capital; the sums paid, however, by way of interest on the capital obtained represented only 3.76 per cent of the working capital. The popular banks have therefore been able to procure the funds which they employ at a rate which is not too high and to realize a moderate margin of interest. From this margin must still be deducted the management expenses, which exceeded 12,000,000 marks. This was equivalent to 16.51 per cent of the total gross profits and to 0.09 per cent of the total business done (incomings and outgoings).

The net profit available for distribution, after deduction of interest on borrowed capital, depreciation, and the various losses, exceeded 18,000,000 marks, representing 8.6 per cent on the share capital.

The greater part of the net profit was distributed as dividends; the remainder was carried to the reserve funds, or, to a small extent, devoted to objects of public utility. The rate of dividend distributed varies considerably from bank to bank, ranging generally from 5 to 7 per cent of the paid-up share capital. There were, however, 19 banks which distributed a dividend of more than 10 per cent and 1 in which a 25 per cent dividend was paid.

3. STATISTICS OF THE POPULAR BANKS.

The popular banks for which statistics for the year 1910 are available are shown in the following table:

	Number of banks.	Number of members.	Number of members who have taken part in the credit business.
Affiliated to the national federation	939	600,387	358,649
Not affiliated to the national federation	96	44,955	23,394
Total	1,035	645,342	382,043

It is worth noting how these banks really apply cooperative principles in relation to their members. More than half of the members took advantage, during the course of the year, of the credit facilities which they offered.

The following table contains particulars of the business done by the popular banks in the year 1910:

4. FEDERATIONS AND CENTRAL INSTITUTIONS OF THE POPULAR BANKS.

(a) Federations.—The great majority of the Schulze-Delitzsch banks are affiliated to provincial federations (32 in number), which in turn are affiliated to the General Federation of German Cooperative Societies.

The provincial federations include, besides the urban cooperative credit societies, cooperative distributive societies, cooperative productive societies, and cooperative building societies. In 1911 the federations embraced 1,514 cooperative societies, of which 973 were credit societies, 290 distributive societies, 63 productive societies, and 188 building societies.

(b) Central institutions.—For the popular banks the need of central banks has not been felt so strongly as for the rural banks. The popular banks have, in fact, by their very nature, greater facilities for obtaining access to the open money market, and the promoters of the movement even hold that to be bound closely to specific central banks would be a hindrance rather than an advantage to the development of their business. Up to now three provincial federations have established central banks. These banks are companies with limited liability. Their importance is not great.

To equalize the funds of the popular banks there exists a special section of a private bank—the Dresden Bank—with which the cooperative societies have current accounts so as to facilitate the movement of their funds and to equalize the various debits and credits. The same institution also serves to facilitate the cashing of bills and checks, which are immediately honored and credited to the respective accounts. In the year 1910 the total value of the bills cashed was 748,000,000 marks.

CHAPTER III.

THE PRUSSIAN CENTRAL BANK FOR COOPERATIVE SOCIETIES AND OTHER STATE BANKS IN GERMANY.

We have had occasion to refer to the Prussian Central Bank. This bank, which itself is in no wise cooperative, is a State institution which serves not only the rural cooperative societies, but also the popular banks and the savings banks.

Founded by the law of July 31, 1895, it received from the Prussian Government an initial foundation capital of 5,000,000 marks, which has been successively increased to 20,000,000 marks in 1896, to 50,000,000 marks in 1898, and finally to 75,000,000 marks in 1909. This capital has been furnished by the State by means of the deposit of Prussian consolidated stock at 3 per cent. The affiliated banks can further contribute to the increase of the foundation capital by taking shares.

Although placed under the direct control of the State, the bank is an independent corporate body, with its own administration, composed of a committee of management, appointed for life by the King, assisted by a council of experts, consisting of representatives of the cooperative societies, chosen by the King. The functions of the council of experts are merely consultative.

The object of the bank is to provide working capital for the following institutions:

(1) Central banks (not for the cooperative societies separately) of any kind of cooperatiove societies legally established; not only, therefore, for the provincial or general central banks of the rural banks, but also of every other kind of cooperative society.

(2) The loan banks attached to the cooperative land-credit institutions (landschaftliche Darlehenskassen).

(3) The provincial or communal personal-credit institutions.

(4) The public savings banks.

From all these institutions the bank also receives deposits on current account or savings deposits.

At the end of 1909 the bank had business relations with 52 central cooperative banks, of which 19 were rural and 33 urban. Besides these it counted amongst its ordinary clients 8 loan banks attached to land-credit institutions; 6 provincial-credit institutions, etc.; 744 public savings banks and 684 other corporate bodies or individuals.

The means for carrying out its objects the bank derives from the 78,000,000 marks intrusted to it by the Government, from the deposits of the affiliated corporations, and from loans contracted with other banks.

The bank can not lend to cooperative societies individually, but only to unions of cooperative societies or to central banks composed of local cooperative societies. It fixes for every central bank a maximum limit of credit, based upon the financial condition of the bank, of the societies which compose it, and of their members. Within these limits loans are granted according to the available capital and to the guaranties offered.

In regard to the form of the loans they are either given on current account, on the security of bills of exchange (which the bank discounts), or against the deposit of goods or securities. The following are the most important particulars relating to the working of the bank during the year 1909:

	Marks.
Total business done (incomings and outgoings)	15,197,809,000
Total liabilities	199,725,926
Paid-up share capital	76,400,000
Reserve funds	5,400,000
Deposits in hand at end of year	102,740,303
Loans to cooperative societies and similar institutions outstanding at end of year	40,279,662
Loans granted to cooperative societies and similar institutions during the year	737,268,000

In several other States of the Empire similar institutions have been founded on the model of the Prussian Bank and endowed with capital out of the public treasury, either gratuitously or at a low rate of interest. We may mention amongst these the Central Bank of the Agricultural Cooperative Societies of Bavaria, which received a grant of 100,000 marks and advances of 4,000,000 marks, and the Agricultural Bank for the Cooperative Societies of the Kingdom of Saxony, to which advances of 6,000,000 marks were made at various times.

CHAPTER IV.

COOPERATIVE LAND CREDIT SOCIETIES IN GERMANY—"LANDSCHAFTEN" AND "RITTERSCHAFTEN."

Besides the cooperative banks of which the preceding chapters give a summary, there is another very characteristic form of cooperative credit in Germany, that of the Landschaften and Ritterschaften, cooperative institutions, organized generally for a Province or some other administrative unit. Their object is to obtain for their members the credit they require for land improvement by means of bonds guaranteed by the landowners of the Province collectively. The foundation of the first of these German institutions goes back to the end of the eighteenth century. There are now 25.

It is in Prussia, and above all in the five eastern Provinces, the ancient nucleus of the monarchy, that they have always flourished best. Even to-day, 18 are in Prussia and 10 of these in the five eastern Provinces. The bonds issued by the 10 Landschaften in the eastern Provinces in 1908–9 amounted to a total of 1,633,135,940 marks. (Not counting the new Institute of Credit for Brandenburg, which only issues bonds of the Central Landschaft.)

This is a sufficient proof of the usefulness and of the vitality of this form of cooperative credit, but it will give an even better idea of the important part played by the Landschaften and Ritterschaften to state that the total bonds in circulation, issued by the Landschaften in Prussia, amounted to 2,742,344,385 marks ($653,294,429, or £134,239,113) in 1909, while the total amount of bonds issued by other German institutions, more or less of the same type, was 787,856,425 marks ($187,686,697, or £38,565,913) at the same date.

In other terms, this form of cooperation furnished German agriculture in 1909 with a total of loans on mortgage of more than 3,490,199,810 marks. This is a considerable sum, which it would obviously not have been easy to obtain from the private and purely capitalist banks, and above all at so low a rate of interest, for these societies are satisfied with an interest which does not generally exceed 3½ to 4 per cent.

1. COOPERATIVE LAND CREDIT SOCIETIES FOR LARGE ESTATES IN PRUSSIA.

In Germany, the first of these societies was founded in Prussian Silesia. After the Seven Years' War (1756–1763), the great military King and administrator, Frederick II of Prussia, saw that this Province, formerly rich and flourishing, was in a deplorable condition. The continual wars, the successive alterations of the currency, and the high price of land, followed by an alarming fall in its price, had almost ruined the landowners.

In 1767 a Berlin merchant, named Büring, presented to the King a scheme for an administrative and financial innovation, based upon the fact that it is the soil itself which represents the greatest part of the nation's wealth. He showed that the land is an asset, and that to obtain for the farmer the credit he required, it was enough to give this asset currency, according to the expression of the day. It was, in fact, an anticipation of the fundamental principle underlying the "assignats" which he wished to put in practice in favor of the proprietors of the "noble" estates. (In German "Rittergüter." They are the estates belonging to the "Ritterschaft"; that is, the nobility and landed gentry. Such estates were originally held by military service and the proprietors had manorial jurisdiction and certain administrative privileges.)

To surround these new mortgage bonds with sufficient guaranties and also to gain the confidence of the capitalist, he depended on the principle of cooperation, and proposed to the King to combine the noble proprietors of Silesia in a compulsory cooperative society in which, in exchange for the duties they would have to fulfill, they should be granted the enjoyment of certain privileges.

This scheme of Büring's, at first rejected by the minister, Von Hagen, was accepted in its entirety in the royal decree of August 29, 1769. The regulation of July 9, 1770, combined in compulsory cooperative societies the noble landowners of each principality of Silesia. The union of these societies formed the Generallandschaft of Silesia.

The success obtained by this system was more than satisfactory. The Generallandschaft of Silesia has now been in existence for 140 years, and during that time its energy has permitted it to overcome and almost to avoid the difficulties which generally arise in enterprises of this nature where the interests of the State and those of individuals have to be reconciled. It has been able also to obtain for its members sufficient credit, and always at a rate of interest far lower than that paid in countries and districts where this system of cooperation does not yet exist.

Encouraged by these results, several other Provinces soon followed the example of Silesia.

On June 15, 1777, the "Kur- und Neumärkische Landschaft" for the nobility of the Province of Brandenburg was created by royal charter.

Other charters established one in each of the following Provinces: In Pomerania, on March 13, 1781; in West Prussia, on April 19, 1787, and in East Prussia, on February 16, 1788.

In 1821 the Landschaft of Posen was founded. It was, however, dissolved in 1877 and the New Association of Credit (founded in 1857) took its place.

These Landschaften, to which the title of "old-established" is given to distinguish them from the others, have all a semiofficial character. On the one hand, the inspection of their business is conducted by the State, which generally intrusts it, in the first instance, to the president or perfect of the Province, and, secondly, to the Prussian minister of agriculture. On the other hand, they possess certain prerogatives usually reserved to the State; thus, for example, in case of nonpayment, they have the right to proceed to the administration of the mortgaged lands or to compulsory sale by auction, without recourse to the law courts.

The employees of the Landschaften are indirect employees of the State, and generally they have authority to sign certain public documents.

These Landschaften have constitutions varying considerably from each other, being adapted to the special needs of their Province or to those of the moment of their foundation. They have, however, this in common, that each has a committee of management and a general assembly of landowners. The syndics—that is to say, the members of the committee of management having legal knowledge—receive pay. The other members of the committee and of the general assembly are landowners, who receive only an annual indemnity corresponding to their traveling and incidental expenses.

Four of the five old-established Landschaften, those of Silesia, of Brandenburg, of Pomerania, and of West Prussia, are decentralized. In other words, they are composed each of several cooperative societies or of several almost independent administrative sections. In Silesia each of these cooperative societies disposes of a separate fund, and the engagements undertaken are for this reason covered by a double guaranty, first by the society of the principality and then by the Landschaft of the Province.

The 5 Landschaften of which we have spoken were formed directly by the State. Of the 10 other societies of this type in Prussia, 9 were formed by the Provinces, and 1 by private initiative. Three Landschaften, formed in Hanover before its union with Prussia, differ from the other Landschaften in that they do not issue bonds, but obtain directly from capitalists the money which they require to lend to their members.

The societies formed by the Provinces did not enjoy the legal advantages enjoyed by the old-established Landschaften. Not till the Prussian law of August 3, 1897, were their legal rights extended. This law also conceded to all the Landschaften that should be founded before the 1st of January, 1900, the privileges of forced administration of estates, of forced sales, and even of the seizure of the movable property of the debtor in case of an estate already mortgaged having deteriorated. These privileges had, however, to be conceded by royal decree in each new case.

The same law recognized the bonds of the Landschaften as a trustee investment.

When we consider the whole class of Landschaften we see that they have in their organization and in the management of their affairs certain features in common. The total number of landlords of a district collectively grant a loan to the proprietor applying for it, the object of the loan being stated in detail in the application. He can not be refused this demand. His land serves as security to the Landschaft.

To be quite safe, and not to risk losses, the body of proprietors do not grant loans exceeding a certain percentage of the value of the land, varying with the Provinces and according to the method of fixing the rate of interest. As the body of landlords possess real estate of enormous value, but have seldom large sums of money at their disposal, they have to get from third parties the sums needed for loans to the landowner borrowing. For that they have recourse indirectly to the capitalists, offering them, as investments for their money, bonds issued by the collective group. In order to render the negotiation of this paper easier for the lenders, special banks have been instituted in connection with the Landschaften dealing with this business, under the control of the society itself and without any intention of making a profit. The profits go to the Landschaft as such. Formerly it was the mortgaged land that served as security under a secondary security of the Landschaft. To-day this is no longer the case. The capitalist who has bought the bonds and is the creditor of the borrowing landowner has nothing to do with him. He receives his interest from the Landschaft and the whole of the estates of the Province forms his security.

This general security of the "Kreditverbundenen" (credit leagues) was not, however, considered sufficient. To protect the legitimate interests of the creditors as well as those of the other guarantors, a complicated system was elaborated. First, the value of each property in need of a loan had to be estimated by competent employees of the Landschaft. Generally they contented themselves with the valuation of the revenue made for the land tax and they granted loans to the extent of fifteen times this net revenue. Only in exceptional cases, for example, when the proprietor wanted to burden his land beyond a certain degree, he must even to-day, at his own expense, get a special valuation made of the present worth of his land.

At first most of the Landschaften only gave mortgages for one-half of the estimated value. Now they generally go as far as to give them for two-thirds of the value. Land already burdened with other mortgages can not receive any loan from the society. The Landschaften, however, help proprietors when, in order to obtain a loan, they desire to pay off previous mortgages.

Except in the case of the three institutions of Hanover, the loans are not granted in money, but in bonds.

The interest the debtor must pay the Landschaft is generally from one-half to 1 per cent higher than what the Landschaft itself pays its creditors.

This difference serves to cover the expenses of administration, to constitute special funds created in the interest of all the members of the society, as well as for the creation of reserve funds and for the gradual extinction of the debt. The Landschaft generally renounces its right of calling up the money it lends, but the debtor can always repay the money borrowed. Generally this repayment takes place by gradual extinction, which is often even obligatory for a certain proportion of the debt. The sums so repaid must be considered at the same time as reserves in case of possible losses to be incurred.

Nowadays the tendency is to decrease these various guarantees. Perhaps they are no longer necessary. The new Landschaften, for instance, no longer have the general guaranty. In the Mark and in Neuvorpommern the security is limited to the whole of the lands really mortgaged. In other Provinces there are special reserve funds, or rather the obligation for the proprietors to pay in case of need a certain fraction, generally from 5 to 10 per cent, of the sum borrowed. Consequently, we find in these Landschaften the principles sometimes of the cooperative society with unlimited liability and sometimes of the cooperative society with limited liability.

The public accepts the bonds of all these institutes with equal readiness, for the form taken by the security offered does not affect their credit.

The total circulation of bonds issued by the Prussian Landschaften increased from 469,407,530 marks in 1866 to 2,507,164,675 marks in 1906 and 2,742,344,385 marks in 1909. This would seem to represent an astonishing increase of debts on mortgage, but it is difficult to know whether, before the landowners availed themselves of the credit offered on such easy terms by the Landschaften, their properties were already burdened with other debts, perhaps on less favorable conditions, or if their debt is of more recent origin. It is noteworthy also that while the increase of the debt recorded in the Landschaften books has increased fivefold in the 40 years from 1866 to 1906, in the same period the funds for its extinction have increased from 20,512,945 marks to 169,901,635 marks, or in the proportion of 1 to 8. This mode of extinction, besides, was unknown to the old-established Landschaften and was only introduced in the last century. It may, therefore, be expected that this progress will continue.

The rate of interest on the bonds has always been very moderate. Issues at the rate of 5 per cent were only made from 1868 to 1878, a period of trouble and unrest, in spite of abundance of capital. Generally there has been a very marked tendency to follow the conditions of the market and as soon as possible to reduce the interest on the bonds. In 1901 we no longer find bonds at 4½ per cent. These at 3½, 3¾, and 3 per cent increase already in 1896 in proportion as those at 4 per cent decrease, though the latter show a further increase in 1901.

The bonds have always been well received on the national market. To open the international market to them in 1873 certain Landschaften, with the authorization of the Government, founded a Central Landschaft for the Prussian Provinces, with its headquarters at Berlin. The Landschaften that now form part of it are allowed to issue provincial bonds and also bonds of the Central Landschaft. In issuing these last, however, they are bound to observe certain rules as to the method of valuing the lands.

The bonds of the Central Landschaft were well received on the exchanges, where they had almost the same standing as the Imperial and Prussian bonds, but, generally speaking, the Central Landschaft had not the success that was expected. That was due, no doubt, to the fact that the societies already had a sufficiently large clientele or that they did not wish to have their liberty of action interfered with. Its issue of bonds up to the end of 1909, amounting to 437,814,250 marks, was rather less than that of the Landschaft of East Prussia alone, which reached the figure of 443,839,850 marks.

2. LANDSCHAFTEN FOR SMALL ESTATES IN PRUSSIA.

Although the Landschaften and Ritterschaften were at first exclusively intended for supplying the needs of the nobles' estates, which were generally of considerable size, some of them have extended their credit facilities to small proprietors and peasants. This was the case with the Landschaften of East Prussia and of Silesia. This latter issues special bonds for peasants' lands.

Others founded separately, with special funds, new Landschaften and new institutes. Most of the new societies, such as those of Westphalia and Posen, were, moreover, from the start meant to represent both classes.

Since these new institutions only wish to serve the farmer, there is always a limit to the minimum value of land that can be mortgaged. This limit corresponds to that amount of land on the produce of which the owner can live. Generally it is required that it produce a net income calculable for the land tax at a minimum from 75 to 150 marks. In Silesia they go below this limit and are content that the land be reckoned as bringing in from 15 to 30 marks.

To make it easier and less complicated for the peasants, instead of their having to go to the central office the Landschaft of East Prussia periodically sends employees of its own into the villages, previously notifying their advent. These employees give all necessary information gratuitously and receive applications for loans. The Landschaften have, generally speaking, also had good results in their work on behalf of the peasants, but there still remains much more to be done in the future.

3. LANDSCHAFTEN IN THE OTHER STATES OF GERMANY.

The example set by Prussia has been followed in some other States. Thus a credit association for the nobles' estates of the two Mecklenburgs was founded in 1818 at Rostock on the model of the old-established Landschaften. On December 13, 1825, the credit association for Wurttemberg was founded at Stuttgart. It is the only semiofficial institution of the kind to be found in south Germany. Others were subsequently formed in the Kingdom of Saxony and in the Duchy of Brunswick.

Only a few of these institutions possess much importance, and all conform more or less closely to the type of Landschaften already described.

1. PRIVATE INSTITUTIONS OF THE LANDSCHAFTEN TYPE.

Besides the semiofficial Landschaften there are two private institutions of a similar kind.

These are:

1. The National Society of Mortgage Credit, formerly at Stettin, and now in Berlin, founded under rules dated March 3, 1870, and August 11, 1871.

2. The Bavarian Agricultural Bank, at Munich, founded on December 2, 1896.

Both are, in the eyes of the law, private cooperative societies. The first is a cooperative society in which the liability of the members is unlimited, while in the second their liability is limited.

The Berlin association also grants loans upon town lands. The total number of loans of every kind to the credit of this society in 1907 was 651, for a total sum of 20,367,673 marks ($4,852,685), which gives an average of 31,268 marks per loan.

The Bavarian bank grants loans to communes and to country landowners. At the date of its foundation it received from the Bavarian State the grant of a loan on favorable conditions of 1,000,000 marks. It is also in enjoyment of another loan, at reduced interest, and a subsidy for the expenses of its management. The total number of loans of every kind outstanding at the end of 1907 was 14,675, amounting to 91,337,893 marks ($21,773,244).

The two institutions are most important, particularly in presenting a new method, which permits the farmers, and especially the small farmers, to obtain a large share of the advantages given by the Landschaften.

The Bavarian Agricultural Bank, particularly, has had excellent results and under circumstances of some difficulty, if we consider how the land is parceled out in small holdings in south Germany, and especially in Bavaria. Between 1897 and 1907 the Bavarian bank granted 14,585 loans on mortgage to a total amount of 103,367,250 marks. Of these, 287 loans were on mortgage of holders less than 1 hectare in extent, 8,653 between 1 hectare and 10 hectares, 5,605 between 10 hectares and 100 hectares, and 38 over 100 hectares. These figures indicate how well it has been able to adapt itself to the needs of different classes of agriculturists.

CHAPTER V.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL CREDIT IN AUSTRIA.

In Austria both the Raiffeisen and the Schulze-Delitzsch system have been adopted as means of giving personal credit to the agricultural population. The Raiffeisen banks are, however, in relation to agriculture, much the more important.

Cooperative credit societies began to be formed in Austria about 1850, and they had at first the character of mutual aid societies. Toward 1870 the earliest societies on the Schulze-Delitzsch system were formed, the majority were based on unlimited liability.

At first the cooperative credit societies developed slowly, and up to 1880 only 15 had been formed. After this they began to be formed more rapidly, reaching the number of 943 in 1872. Then again followed a period of slow increase, the number only rising to 1,363 in 1888. At this period, however, the Raiffeisen system began to be promoted, and the cooperative credit societies increased rapidly in number. At the end of 1906 they had reached 7,886; in 1909 they had risen to 10,097, and in 1910 to 10,893.

1. THE RURAL BANKS.

The Raiffeisen banks, first formed in 1886, began to be promoted rapidly in 1889, reaching the number of 7,631 in 1911.

The Raiffeisen banks in Austria being modeled upon those of Germany it is sufficient to remark that each member is required to take a share, which varies in amount from 10 to 20 crowns (a crown is equivalent to $0.2026 or £0.0416), but the liability of the members is unlimited. At the beginning of November, 1911, the Austrian Government presented to Parliament a bill for modifying the law relating to cooperative societies. The main purpose of this bill is to substitute for the present form of unlimited liability the system of unlimited liability to make supplementary payments. The difference between the two systems consists in the fact that, according to the new proposals the creditor would not be able to have direct recourse, in case of the liquidation of the bank, to any particular member to demand the payment of the sum which remains due to him; it would be the society which would be responsible to the creditor and it would have the right to demand pro rata payments from the members until the creditors were completely satisfied.

The interest paid on the shares is equal to that paid on the savings deposits.

The working capital of the banks is formed by the shares, the savings deposits, and the loans which the banks obtain from the central banks. The Raiffeisen banks have been very successful in attracting savings deposits. In Bohemia alone, the sums deposited by boys and servants occupied in agriculture amounted in 1908 to 5,588,078 crowns.

Many banks required the applicant for a loan to declare the purpose which it is to serve; sometimes it is provided that if a member applies a loan to any other than the declared object, he shall be excluded for a time (or, in case of a second offense, forever) from receiving further loans.

The profits are carried entirely to the reserve fund which, in case of the dissolution of the society, is devoted to some work of public utility.

As in Germany, the Austrian rural banks are affiliated both to central banks, with which they deposit their surplus funds, or from which they obtain loans when required, and to federations, which look after their interests.

The establishment of Raiffeisen banks is greatly encouraged by most of the provincial governments, which make grants of from 200 to 300 crowns for the initial expenses and loans for long periods without interest. In 1909, for example, the Diet of Galicia placed at the disposal of the provincial government a sum of 2,000,000 crowns for the benefit of the cooperative credit societies. Ten years later the Diet established the Provincial Bank for Cooperative Credit Societies at Lemberg, by which the fund is now administered.

The following figures will give an idea of the development of the Raiffeisen banks since 1900:

	1900	1904	1907
Number of banks	2,906	4,557	5,880
Number of members	261,589	504,589	725,066
Number of loans granted	59,531	208,883	.....
Amount of loans outstanding at the end of the year.....crowns	122,501,009	258,329,000	[1] 428,242,262
Amount of deposits.....do	155,281,000	335,620,000	556,319,245

[1] $86,772,253, or £17,829,986.

In 1890 there was one Raiffeisen bank for every 131,294 inhabitants; in 1900, one for every 9,002; in 1902, one for every 6,884; and in 1910 one for every 4,018 inhabitants.

2. THE POPULAR BANKS.

It is not necessary to speak at length of the popular banks, since they have only a minor importance as far as agriculture is concerned. Until the formation of the Raiffeisen banks, the Schulze-Delitzsch banks afforded credit to farmers to a considerable extent, but now the Raiffeisen banks have almost completely taken their place. Even up to now the Schulze-Delitzsch banks make loans for fairly large amounts to farmers known to be of good financial standing; the small loans of a few hundred crowns required by the peasants are made exclusively by the Raiffeisen banks. Only in Bohemia, in Moravia and in Galicia are the Schulze-Delitzsch banks at all numerous amongst the farmers and serve to supply their needs.

At first in the Schulze-Delitzsch banks unlimited liability was the rule, but from 1882 onward this was less and less frequently adopted, and now new banks are founded almost exclusively with limited liability. In 1910 there were 2,674 banks with limited liability and 588 with unlimited liability.

Of 2,323 Schulze-Delitzsch banks which furnished particulars of their working in 1908, the membership was 1,479,947; the share capital, 158,000,000 crowns; the loans granted during the year, 1,737,000,000 crowns ($356,610,738, or £73,153,183); the loans outstanding at the end of the year, 1,704,000,000 crowns ($345,271,661, or £70,946,514); the deposits in hand, 1,587,000,000 crowns; the loan capital 234,000,000 crowns; and the reserve funds, 94,000,000 crowns.

CHAPTER VI.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL CREDIT IN ITALY.

The principal agricultural cooperative credit institutions in Italy are the rural banks and the popular banks. The former are modeled on the Raiffeisen banks and were introduced into Italy by Leone Wollemborg; the latter are modeled on the Schulze-Delitzsch banks, adapted to the special circumstances of Italy by Luigi Luzzatti. The principles upon which these two forms of credit society are based have, therefore, been already described, and we will confine ourselves to indicating how they are organized and how they operate in Italy.

1. THE RURAL BANKS.

Rural banks were first advocated in Italy in 1880, but it was only in 1883 that Wollemborg, after a series of lectures and publications, succeeded in founding the first rural bank at Loreggia, in the Province of Padua, with 30 members. In 1884 other banks were founded at Cambiano di Castelfiorentino, at Trebaseleghe, and subsequently in other parts of Venetia. The banks formed by Wollemborg and his associates were unsectarian in character, but from 1892 onward many banks were formed as a result of the propaganda of the Catholic party with a sectarian character. These have steadily increased in number and now form the largest group of rural banks in Italy. In fact, out of 1,800 rural banks, about 1,200 are sectarian. The Catholic banks are found chiefly in Venetia, in Bergamasco, in Emilia, and in Sicily.

While the rules of all the rural banks insist upon honesty and good character as a condition of becoming a member, the Catholic banks insist also upon certain religious observances, or, at any rate, upon respect for religion.

The liability of the members is unlimited. This is found, in Italy as elsewhere, to prevent the misuse of loans by compelling the members to keep an eye upon one another; it also gives the bank the confidence of the public which deposits its savings.

For their sphere of operations the rural banks restrict themselves to a commune, to a portion of a commune, or to a parish.

As a rule the rural banks have no real initial capital. They receive savings deposits from both members and nonmembers (chiefly the latter), on which they pay an interest varying from 3½ to 4 per cent. It is the deposits which furnish the means for making loans, and only in so far as the deposits are insufficient do the rural banks have recourse to other sources of capital. On December 31, 1910, the aggregate amount of the deposits held by rural banks was 60,000,000 francs. (A franc is equivalent to $0.1929, or £0.0396.) In process of time the banks create a capital of their own, formed of the small payments made by the members upon entrance, or upon taking out their first loan.

The loans, which are generally made on the security of bills, are of two kinds. They are either for short periods, not exceeding 2 years, or for longer periods, extending to as much as 10 years. The first kind are ordinarily renewed every 3 months; the second are repaid by installments. The interest on loans for long periods is slightly higher than the usual rate of interest on loans, which varies between 5½ and 7 per cent. The difference between the interest charged on loans and the interest paid on deposits covers the management expenses and enables a reserve fund to be built up, which, in the event of the dissolution of the society, is devoted to some object of public utility.

The societies enjoy certain exemptions from taxation. Thus their notes, bills, etc., are exempt from taxation for 10 years and until the capital of the bank reaches 30,000 francs.

There are no recent statistics embracing all the rural banks, unsectarian or Catholic, in Italy. The latest official statistics, collected by the minister of agriculture, industry, and commerce, gives the financial position of 1,257 banks out of 1,386 existing on October 31, 1905. This shows that of total liabilities amounting to 46,665,607 francs ($9,004,450, or £1,850,239), 32,499,462 francs were in respect of deposits, while 4,855,456 francs were in respect of loans on current account and 6,392,654 francs of loans on the security of bills. The loans outstanding were as follows: On bills, 33,464,274 francs; on mortgage, 897,493 francs; on simple note of hand, 369,041 francs; on current account, 5,978,556 francs; total, 40,709,364 francs ($7,855,152, or £1,614,080).

Since 1906 no official statistics have been published, but the National Federation of Italian Rural Banks, which has its headquarters at Rome, has compiled a list of rural banks and agricultural cooperative credit societies in existence on December 31, 1911, from which it appears that there were then 1,855, of which about one-third were unsectarian and the remainder Catholic.

Though complete statistics are wanting, there exist partial statistics, compiled by regional or provincial federations, from which we take the following figures:

Name of federation.	Date to which the figures refer.	Number of affiliated rural banks of which particulars are given.	Membership.	Loans outstanding.	Deposits in hand.
				Francs.	Francs.
Federation of the Rural Banks of the Province of Bologna	June 30, 1911	80	6,505	2,263,762	2,608,945
Federation of the Rural Banks of Romagna	Dec. 31, 1910	57	4,723	2,909,040	2,825,671

Economico-Social Federation of the Catholics of the Diocese of Adria	....do.....	52	3,945	2,595,424	1,795,004

2. THE POPULAR BANKS.

Unlike the rural banks, which carry on their work in country districts and have a restricted area of operations, the popular banks are formed in urban centers and have a large field of operations. In the popular banks, too, the liability of the members is limited.

They preceded the rural banks, but even after the appearance of the latter they continued to be of service to agriculture in various ways. Not only do they lend money directly to farmers, but they make advances at low rates of interest to agricultural syndicates, agricultural cooperative societies, and even to the rural banks.

The popular banks are composed of members belonging to many different classes; large and small farmers, farm laborers, artisans, small shopkeepers, clerks, and professional men. But the larger number of members belong to the lower middle classes; 23 per cent are artisans or small shopkeepers and 22 per cent small farmers. Clerks and professional men form 17 per cent and the percentage of the other classes of members is much smaller than these.

The value of the shares also varies greatly; it ranges from a minimum of 5 francs up to 100 francs, the maximum allowed by the commercial code; the lower values are the more usual.

The paid-up share capital is usually but little less than the subscribed capital, because many banks allow the payment by installments of the shares subscribed.

The banks work in the first place with the capital which comes in spontaneously, the shares and the deposits, and, secondly, with money which they obtain by rediscounting their bills or contracting loans.

As to the deposits, they are of various forms. The humbler classes, not used to business methods, intrust their savings to the banks as savings deposits; the commercial and industrial classes prefer to lodge money on current account and to withdraw it by means of checks; the workmen's unions and mutual-aid societies deposit funds not immediately required for fixed periods and draw good rates of interest. This variety in the deposits contributes to give elasticity to the operations of the popular banks. The interest paid on deposits varies from 3 to 4 per cent.

The Italian popular banks give credit principally in the four following forms: Loans on the security of bills or the discount of bills; loans against the deposit of securities, goods, or valuables; loans on guaranteed current account; and loans for holding over delivery of securities. In order to increase the capital at their disposal they have the greater part of their bills rediscounted by larger institutions. Against this must be set, however, the bills which they themselves rediscount for other smaller popular banks and for rural banks.

The rate of interest on loans is usually from 4 to 6 per cent. Sometimes it is less than 4 per cent, and there are cases in which it is as much as 7 or 8 per cent.

The latest official statistics of the popular banks relate to the 10 years from 1899-1908. From these we find that in 1908 there were 736 popular banks; of these 699, which furnished the particulars of their working, had a paid-up capital of 98,310,108 francs and reserve funds amounting to 57,354,279 francs. The total deposits in hand at the end of the year were 971,167,644 francs and the capital obtained from outside sources (other banks and private capitalists, etc.), 230,152,110 francs. This gives a total working capital of 1,356,984,141 francs ($261,830,430 or £53,802,887). The loans outstanding at the end of the year amounted to 881,502,350 francs ($170,091,946, or £34,950,572) and the profits during the year to 13,679,929 francs.

CHAPTER VII.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL CREDIT IN FRANCE.

The first experiments in agricultural credit in France date back to the middle of the past century, but its real development only begins after the promulgation in 1884 of the law on professional syndicates.

In 1894 the law which instituted local agricultural mutual credit banks gave a powerful impetus to agricultural credit, and in 1899 the law on regional banks, which authorized the giving of State aid, consolidated agricultural credit in France into an organic system which to-day spreads over the whole country.

The characteristics of this system are the following: Decentralization, mutuality, organization according to occupation, and State aid. Its object consists, in the first place, in supplying farmers with the means necessary for carrying on the ordinary agricultural operations by means of loans for short periods; in the second place to facilitate cooperative societies and individual farmers in carrying on operations extending over long periods.

Besides the cooperative credit encouraged by the State there exist also various minor groups of cooperative institutions which have wished to remain entirely independent and which rely solely on their own resources.

1. STATE-AIDED COOPERATIVE CREDIT.

The fundamental laws which regulate the State-aided system of agricultural cooperative credit are those of November 5, 1894, and of March 31, 1899.

The former instituted the local mutual agricultural credit bank; the latter the regional bank, which groups together the local banks of a given district, either the region, the department, or a special area determined by its agricultural characteristics.

The State has placed at the disposal of the regional banks, in order that they may in their turn finance the local banks, considerable sums, which the Bank of France is bound to pay to them as a condition of the renewal of its privileges. The law of November 17, 1897, in fact, laid it down that the Bank of France must advance to the State, without interest, for the whole period of its concession (that is, to the end of 1920), a loan of 40,000,000 francs, and that it must also make an annual payment (calculated according to the business done) which must not be less than 2,000,000 francs, and is, in fact, between 3,000,000 and 5,000,000 francs. These sums form the State fund, out of which the agricultural credit system is aided.

(a) The local banks.—The local banks may be composed either of the whole or of a part of the members of one or more agricultural syndicates, or of the members of one or more mutual agricultural insurance societies. The object of this provision is to strengthen their characteristic of mutuality and solidarity and to facilitate mutual acquaintance and confidence amongst the persons composing the credit society.

The objects of a local credit society are to facilitate or to guarantee the operations either of the societies mentioned or of the members.

The local banks have a restricted area of operations, limited to the commune, the canton, or the village. The formalities of registration are reduced to a minimum, and they are exempted from certain taxes.

Their initial capital is formed by shares ("quotes-parts"), subscribed exclusively by the members; it is sufficient if one-fourth is paid up. The shares, which are generally of the value of 20 or 40 francs each, do not give any right to dividend, but bear a fixed rate of interest which must not exceed 4 per cent. The societies can receive deposits with or without interest.

As to the liability of the members, the law allows the utmost latitude to the societies to decide its character and extent by their rules, according to local conditions. In the majority of cases the societies have decided that their members shall be liable up to the amount of the shares subscribed. Some have fixed upon a wider liability, either unlimited liability of all the members, such as is found in the Raiffeisen banks, or unlimited liability of a certain number of members (for example, the members of the committee of management), or a liability extending to two, three, or four times the nominal value of the shares of each member. Amongst the promoters of these societies, however, there is now manifest a tendency to adopt unlimited liability as the best safeguard for healthy cooperation.

The society is managed by a council and by a committee, which generally comprises a president, a vice president, and a secretary. As soon as it is established it becomes affiliated to the regional bank of the department. To do this it must subscribe for a certain number of shares in the regional bank. It is then admitted to partake in the credit facilities afforded by the regional bank, which discounts its bills or grants loans to it to form its working capital.

In the first case, when a member applies for a loan from the local bank it requires him to sign a bill, which is then sent to be discounted to the regional bank, which immediately forwards the amount applied for, less the discount. In the second case, the regional bank grants to the local bank a loan which is usually proportionate to the amount of the shares subscribed. The local bank, when it does not immediately require the money so obtained, deposits it with the savings bank and withdraws from time to time such sums as may be necessary.

The first system, which is simpler and allows of a greater measure of control by the regional bank over the affiliated societies, is adopted in the great majority of cases. Thus, for example, in 1910 the regional banks discounted bills to the amount of 67,000,000 francs and only granted loans of 1,250,000 francs.

The rate of interest on the loans must naturally be higher than the discount required by the regional banks. The latter being 3 per cent, the greater interest demanded by the local banks does not usually exceed 4 per cent. The margin of 1 per cent serves for the payment of the expenses of management and for the formation of the reserve fund.

As to the size of the loans, in some societies the sums which may be advanced to members are proportionate to the shares which they have subscribed, and may be ten, fifteen, or twenty times their amount. In other societies it is laid down that the loan shall not exceed a fixed sum, 1,000 or 2,000 francs, according to the kind of cultivation prevailing and to the solvency of the applicant.

There are different kinds of guarantee, varying according to circumstances. Certain banks insist in every case upon a surety or a "warrant" or upon the deposit of securities. Others only require such guarantees when the loan is of a certain amount. If the object of the loan is the purchase of live stock, the animals must always be insured.

The period of the loans varies, according to the nature of the operations to be undertaken, from three months to a year. The period of the bills varies according to the period of the loan and according to the system adopted by the regional bank to which the local bank is affiliated. Many regional banks only allow bills of three months, with two, three, or four renewals; others allow bills for a period equal to that of the loan. In the case of renewals an installment is almost always required.

At least three-fourths of the profits of the society are allocated to the formation of a reserve fund until that fund is equal to half the paid-up-share capital. The balance, if the general meeting so decide, may be divided amongst the individual members in proportion to their dealings with the society.

When a society is dissolved, the reserve fund and other assets are divided amongst the members in proportion to their shares unless, as is generally the case, the rules have provided for their application to some work beneficial to agriculture.

The local banks have spread rapidly since 1900, as the following figures indicate:

Year.	Number of local banks.	Membership of local banks.
1901	309	7,998
1905	1,335	61,874
1909	3,338	151,621

The following figures give an idea of the business done by the local banks in recent years:

	1909	1910	Increase.
Number of local banks	2,983	3,338	355
Membership	133,382	151,621	18,239
	Francs.	Francs.	Francs.
Subscribed capital	13,111,206	14,210,598	1,099,392
Paid-up capital	8,470,754	9,916,611	1,455,857
New loans granted during the year (exclusive of renewals)	63,742,093	[1] 70,533,340	6,791,247
Loans outstanding at the end of the previous year	40,126,197	42,671,323	2,545,126
Total	103,868,290	113,204,663	9,336,373
Repayments received	60,889,309	61,388,806	499,497
Loans outstanding on Dec. 31	42,978,981	[2] 51,815,857	8,836,876

[1] $13,609,893, or £2,796,567. [2] $9,998,226, or £2,054,440.

The official reports do not indicate the capital of the local banks separately, nor the business done by them, but limit themselves to giving such particulars for the groups of local societies affiliated to each central bank. From these data, however, it is evident that the capital of the local banks is not very large, and the same may be said of their reserve funds. The statistics give no information regarding the deposits, but it may be assumed that they, too, are not very large in amount.

The interest paid on the shares varies from 2 to 5 per cent; the rate of discount from 3 to 5 per cent.

(b) The regional banks.—The agricultural credit banks of the second degree, called regional banks, are regulated by the law of March 31, 1899. They receive from the State, out of the funds furnished by the Bank of France, loans without interest, up to the amount four times their paid-up capital, for a period of five years, subject to renewal. If, for example, there are in a department 10 local banks which have each subscribed 10,000 francs, their shares form an initial capital of 100,000 francs for the regional bank; the Government will then make an advance of 400,000 francs.

A special committee, nominated by the minister of agriculture, distributes such sums amongst the regional banks, and a body of inspectors supervises their working.

The regional banks are based upon the same principles as the local banks, and they enjoy the same privileges. They are composed of local banks and of individual farmers, but two-thirds of the shares are reserved by preference to the former. The local banks usually pay up their shares in full; the individual members as a rule only pay up one-fourth. Each member is liable up to the amount of the shares subscribed. The committee of management of a regional bank is elected from the representatives of the local banks.

The law limits the interest on the shares to a maximum of 5 per cent and fixes the maximum of the deposits which the regional banks can receive and the bonds which they may issue at three-fourths of the amount of the securities which they hold.

The regional banks can, moreover, have their bills rediscounted by the Bank of France or other credit institutions.

The profits are carried to the reserve fund, which serves, in due course, to repay the State loans.

To the primary object of the regional banks have in recent years been added others, namely, the making of loans to cooperative societies for the production and sale of agricultural produce and of loans to individual farmers for the acquisition and improvement of small holdings. For these purposes special advances are made by the State to the regional banks out of the fund provided by the Bank of France.

The number of regional banks has increased from 9 in 1901 to 66 in 1905 and 96 in 1910.

The State has placed at the disposal of the regional banks in the period 1900–1910 the following sums:

	Francs.
1900	612,250
1901	2,611,210
1902	1,304,337
1903	1,858,262
1904	5,437,969
1905	5,430,301
1906	3,747,530
1907	5,860,157
1908	8,750,717
1910	9,825,260
1911	11,386,815

On December 31, 1910, the regional banks had at their disposal State loans to the amount of 57,177,425 francs, of which 50,442,585 had been advanced to them for the purpose of financing the local banks. Sixty-seven of the regional banks received advances not exceeding 250,000 francs; 33 sums varying between 250,000 francs and 1,000,000 francs and 15 sums between 1,000,000 francs and 4,000,000 francs.

The working capital at the disposal of the regional banks in 1910 for the financing of local banks was 71,423,930 francs (as compared with 61,823,926 francs in 1909) and may be thus classified:

	Francs.
Paid-up capital	15,912,801
Reserve funds	2,868,544
State advances	40,442,585
Mean amount of deposits	2,200,000
Total	71,423,930

The subscribed capital amounted in the aggregate in 1910 to the sum of 17,493,225 francs. Of this sum about two-thirds is represented by the shares subscribed by the local banks. In the separate banks the paid-up capital ranged from a minimum of 7,175 francs to a maximum of 1,021,400 francs; about half have a paid-up capital of less than 100,000 francs.

The interest paid upon the shares varies from 3 to 4 per cent.

The aggregate amount of deposits received by the regional banks up to December 31, 1910, was 16,500,000 francs, the average amount of the deposits in hand being about 2,200,000.

The discounts and loans made in 1910 by the regional banks, in accordance with the law of 1889, including renewals, reached the sum of 130,865,263 francs, as compared with 123,222,174 francs in 1909. The majority of the regional banks (55) have adopted a rate of discount of 3 per cent.

The general expenses amount to 0.32 per cent of the loans.

Without taking into account the renewals, the following figures show the loans made by the regional banks, etc., in 1910, as compared with 1909:

	1910	1909
	Francs.	Francs.
Direct loans for working capital	1,251,220	[1] 1,480,180
Loans in the form of discounts of new bills	66,957,353	[2] 61,262,856
Loans outstanding at the end of the previous year	40,971,508	38,022,643
Total	109,180,081	100,765,679
Repayments received during the year	59,887,572	59,502,992
Loans outstanding at the end of the year	49,292,509	[3] 41,262,683

[1] $285,611, or £58,687. [2] $11,821,090, or £2,429,033. [3] $7,961,913, or £1,636,009.

If to the loans for short periods are added those for long periods advanced to cooperative societies and individual farmers, we have the following figures:

	Francs.
Loans for short periods	109,180,081

Loans for long periods to individuals	864,190
Total ($21,674,564, or £4,453,699)	112,328,536

To the end of 1910, 131 cooperative societies had received 4,405,849 francs in loans at rates of interest varying from 1 to 2 per cent.

(c) General results.—The general results achieved in the first decade in which the system of State-aided agricultural credit has been in force are most satisfactory. The local banks are constantly increasing and respond ever better to the new needs of agriculture. In the period from 1900 to 1910 they have placed about 384,000,000 francs at the disposal of farmers; the 2,000,000 francs advanced in 1900 have risen to 70,000,000 francs in 1910.

It is noted, however, that many regional banks, trusting too much to State aid, are not sufficiently careful to make the quinquennial repayments of the loans advanced by the State, and neglect to form resources of their own, other than the sums carried automatically to the reserve, by making efforts to attract deposits. The remark also applies to some of the local banks. In view of this, closer Government supervision is recommended, and meanwhile the ministry of agriculture has reorganized and strengthened the service of inspection.

2. INDEPENDENT COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL CREDIT.

We have seen that, besides the State-aided cooperative credit banks, there exist cooperative credit institutions which have wished to remain independent of any financial aid from the State. Let us examine briefly the character and results of the principal groups of these societies:

(a) Rural banks of the Raiffeisen-Durand type.—The rural banks promoted by Louis Durand are modeled on the pure Raiffeisen type, and are markedly catholic in character. Their members take no shares and receive no dividend. For their working capital they avail themselves of deposits, loans from members and others, and the accumulated profits which form the reserve. When the reserve fund reaches a fourth of the capital deemed necessary for the working of the society, the rate of interest on loans is reduced to a figure just sufficient to cover the general expenses.

Loans are only granted to members, who are usually small proprietors or tenant farmers, for a definite purpose. They are granted on personal security or on mortgage, often for rather long periods, with repayment by annual installments, at a rate of interest varying from 3½ to 4½ per cent. The interest paid on deposits varies from 2½ to 3½ per cent. The members are liable to the full extent of their possessions for the debts of the bank.

The rural banks have adopted the commune as their sphere of operations, and are combined in regional or diocesan groups, called central banks, which, besides acting as propagandist and supervising bodies, receive the surplus capital of the richer banks and pass it on to those which have need of it. The rural banks are also affiliated to a central federation, the Central Union of Rural and Workmen's Banks with Unlimited Liability, with headquarters originally at Lyon, but now at Paris.

In 1893 the number of the Durand banks was 17; in 1905 it had risen to 443. The statistics for 1910 give their number as 672, but the Union states that this does not include all the existing banks.

The 672 banks of which particulars are given contained 28,570 members, did a total business (incomings and outgoings) of 19,241,503 francs, collected 11,300,450 francs in deposits, and granted 9,390 loans; their total assets amounted to 12,569,915 francs and their profits to 49,124 francs. The business of the banks is based almost entirely upon deposits; they obtained only a small sum (935,000 francs) from the central banks.

(b) Mutual banks of the Rostand type.—With the idea of directing local savings to local work, Eugène Rostand urged the Savings Bank of the Bank of Rhone, of which he was president, to establish local mutual banks and to finance them with loans. The law of 1895, which authorized the savings banks to allocate part of their funds to agricultural credit, permitted the bank to advance 20,000 francs to the local banks by way of loans.

In the period from 1894 to 1909 there were thus created 22 banks. The Savings Bank of Marseille granted them in 1909 loans to the amount of 45,000 francs. From 1901 to 1909 the Rostand banks had distributed 1,142,663 francs to farmers.

(c) Other cooperative agricultural credit societies. Amongst the cooperative credit institutions which have risen through private initiative we may mention the cooperative credit banks of the Alpes-Maritimes, promoted by Rayneri, and the Popular Bank of Mentone. These follow the unlimited-liability system, and are to-day combined in the Regional Bank of Mentone.

There also exist some isolated credit institutions which act in complete independence, such as the Mutual Credit Society of Senlis (Oise), which granted loans in 1908 to the amount of 438,888 francs, and the Agricultural Bank, founded in 1898, at Boulogne-sur-Mer, which up to 1909 has discounted bills to the value of 1,734,000 francs.

(d) The urban popular banks and agricultural credit.—In France there are some popular banks of the Schulze-Delitzsch-Luzzatti type. They are fairly numerous in the south, and are combined in the Federal Centre of Popular Credit managed by M. Rayneri. Although primarily intended for the industrial and commercial middle classes, they encourage agricultural credit in a variety of ways. Of late a new tendency has manifested itself to bring about closer relations between the urban and rural cooperative credit institutions.

CHAPTER VIII.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL CREDIT IN BELGIUM.

Not many years ago the Belgian farmers in general, and more particularly the small farmers, were absolutely without any credit institutions to which they could have recourse to obtain capital on equitable terms. In 1884, however, a law was passed with the object of providing them with credit facilities.

Under this law the General Savings Bank was authorized to employ a part of its funds in making loans to farmers and to agricultural cooperative credit societies. The loans to farmers were to be made through the medium of a special kind of association known as "comptoirs," which we shall describe later. The results of this law were, however, disappointing. A few "comptoirs" were formed, but very little use was made of the credit facilities which the law provided.

1. THE RURAL BANKS.

It was generally felt, therefore, that a better system of agricultural credit was required, and the Abbé Mellaerts set himself to adapt the Raiffeisen system to local circumstances and to the requirements of the Belgian laws. As the law stood the rural banks were obliged to take the form of cooperative societies, since it was requisite that they should have the power of admitting new members and of varying the capital without the legal formalities with which commercial companies were obliged to comply. But, contrary to the strict Raiffeisen principles, the law dealing with cooperative societies did not allow such societies to dispense with foundation capital nor to make their reserve funds indivisible. In order not to depart too far from the Raiffeisen model, the Abbé Mellaerts decided that the shares should be very small (2 francs); that the dividend payable on the shares should not exceed the rate of interest charged on loans; and that there should be two reserve funds, the "real reserve," composed of the share payments and entrance fees, and the "conditional reserve," to which the net profits should be placed. The "real reserve" should serve to pay possible losses, and in the event of the dissolution of the society any sum still standing to this reserve should be distributed amongst the members. The "conditional reserve," on the other hand, should be returned, in case of dissolution, to the central bank from which the society had borrowed its working capital.

Except for these slight modifications, the rural banks in Belgium follow closely the Raiffeisen system.

Notwithstanding the difficulties and prejudices which had to be overcome, the rural banks spread rapidly over the country. The first was formed by the Abbé Mellaerts at Rillaer in 1892, and in 18 years no less than 643 banks were established.

The following figures relate to the year 1909:

Number of banks furnishing information		458
Membership		25,762
Paid-up share capital	francs	72,071
Loans granted in 1909 ($803,262, or £165,055)	do	4,162,911
Loans outstanding on Dec. 31, 1909 ($2,110,292, or £433,624)	francs	10,936,597
Deposits received in 1909	do	9,742,693
Total working capital, including deposits in hand Dec. 31, 1909	francs	22,020,786
Reserve fund	do	440,707

2. THE CENTRAL BANK.

All the rural banks in Belgium are affiliated to regional central banks, which are cooperative societies with limited liability. Only recognized local banks and the persons who are intrusted with the management can become members of the central banks. The latter are nominated by the general meetings.

Each member subscribes for one share of the value of 100 francs and is liable up to the amount of 1,000 francs. The dividend on the shares is fixed at 3 per cent and the balance of the profits is carried to the reserve.

The central banks in Belgium, besides accepting deposits from and making loans to local banks, supervise their management and inspect their accounts. They not only make loans directly to the local banks, but guarantee loans made to them by the General Savings Bank, which, in conformity with the law of 1894, set aside a sum of 1,000,000 francs to be lent at 3½ per cent interest to rural banks affiliated to a central bank and guaranteed by it. The General Savings Bank has also agreed to accept on deposit from the central banks at 3 per cent interest the sums which they are not able to employ in lending to the local banks.

Where a central bank guarantees a loan made to a local bank, the General Savings Bank allows it a commission equal to one-twelfth of the interest charged.

There are seven central banks in Belgium, the most important of which is that of Louvain, known as the "Boerenbond." In 1910, out of the 643 Raiffeisen banks in Belgium, 304 were affiliated to the Boerenbond. For several years past the Boerenbond has been practically independent of the assistance of the General Savings Bank, having received sufficient deposits to enable it to grant all the loans applied for by the local banks. In 1910 it granted loans to the total amount of 225,000 francs.

Recently, with the object of extending its utility and to find a safe investment for its capital, the Boerenbond has organized a system of land-improvement credit.

3. THE "COMPTOIRS AGRICOLES" AND THE POPULAR BANKS.

As we have already indicated, the rural banks are not the only institutions in Belgium which provide credit facilities for agriculturists, the "comptoirs agricoles," formed in virtue of the law of 1884, having the same object. The "comptoirs agricoles" are small corporate bodies, consisting of at least four persons, which guarantee the loans granted to individual farmers by the General Savings Bank, receiving a small fraction of the interest as commission.

From 1884 to 1909 only 16 "comptoirs" were formed in the whole of Belgium. On December 31 of the latter year there were 3,605 loans outstanding guaranteed by the "comptoirs," 684 of which had been granted in 1909. Only 104 of these 684 loans were less than 1,000 francs in amount, so that it is clear that the "comptoirs" serve rather the large farmers than the small holders. The "comptoirs," in fact, do not care to guarantee small loans, as they do not find such business sufficiently remunerative. It is, too, less hazardous to make loans to large farmers who own their land than to small farmers who can not furnish adequate security.

Not the least difficulty in the way of forming "comptoirs" is that of finding men who, for such a slender return, are willing to undertake the liability of acting as sureties.

Another form of agricultural credit to be met with in Belgium is the popular bank of the Schulze-Delitzsch type. In the whole country, however, there are only two such banks, which are mainly concerned with agricultural credit—those of Goe-Limbourg and Argenteau. In 1909 these two banks granted 40 loans of the total value of 50,136 francs.

CHAPTER IX.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL CREDIT IN GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

In Great Britain the number of agricultural cooperative credit societies which has been formed is comparatively small, but in Ireland such societies are more numerous.

Cooperative credit was introduced into Ireland by the Irish Agricultural Organization Society, aided by grants from the Congested Districts Board for Ireland and, subsequently, from the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland.

In England and Wales credit societies were promoted first by the Agricultural Banks' Association and afterwards by the Agricultural Organization Society. The latter in recent years has received grants from the board of agriculture and from the development commissioners.

With few exceptions the form of society adopted has borne a close resemblance to the Raiffeisen banks of Germany. The area of operations is limited to a parish or to two or three adjoining parishes. The members are elected by the committee. Loans are only given to members and for reproductive purposes approved by the committee. There are no shares, but the liability of the members is unlimited. Each member pays a small entrance fee.

In some cases "guarantee members" have been admitted whose liability is limited to a specified sum, but this practice is rare.

A small number of agricultural credit societies in which the liability of the members is limited has been formed in Ireland, but the societies of this kind do not seem likely to increase.

In Ireland the credit societies have obtained working capital from the following sources:

1. Deposits of members.
2. Advances from local landowners or other persons interested in the well-being of the farmers.
3. Advances from the Congested Districts Board for Ireland and the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland.
4. Loans from the ordinary joint-stock banks.

The last named is now the most important source of capital. Nearly all the large Irish banking companies have recognized that the cooperative credit societies can serve as auxiliaries to them, doing business with a clientele which the large banks can not reach without their intervention. They have, accordingly, consented to advance money to the credit societies at moderate rates of interest.

Proposals have been made for establishing a central bank in Ireland, but the need is not a pressing one.

In England and Wales greater difficulties have been experienced in obtaining working capital. The large banking companies have not recognized the credit societies, and no Government department has made advances of money to them. The Central Cooperative Agricultural Bank (Ltd.) has been formed to assist the societies in finding capital. This is a cooperative society, with limited liability, containing both individual members and society members. Before obtaining advances from the central bank a credit society must take at least five shares of the value of £1 each. The central bank also receives deposits from societies which have surplus capital not immediately required for lending to members. As yet the transactions of the central bank have been on a very small scale.

The rate of interest charged by credit societies to their members is usually in the neighborhood of 6 per cent. Sometimes they are able to lend at lower rates than this, but in Ireland the Irish Agricultural Organization Society urges the credit societies to charge even more than 6 per cent in order quickly to build up a reserve fund.

The following are the latest available statistics of the agricultural credit societies (1) in Ireland and (2) in England and Wales:

CHAPTER X.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL CREDIT IN BRITISH INDIA.

In British India the promotion of cooperative credit, both rural and urban, has been undertaken directly by the State. The cooperative credit societies act, passed in 1904, authorized the appointment by the various provincial governments of officials known as registrars of cooperative credit societies, with wide powers for the promotion and supervision of credit societies.

For the "rural" societies, defined as societies in which not less than four-fifths of the members are agriculturists, the broad lines laid down are those of the Raiffeisen system, but considerable latitude is allowed.

Save with the special sanction of the provincial government, the liability of the members of "rural societies" must be unlimited. All profits must be carried to the reserve fund until it has reached a certain proportion of the total liabilities and until the rates of interest on loans have been reduced below a certain percentage.

In practice the great majority of the rural societies are societies with unlimited liability, but some societies with limited liability have been formed. Even where the liability is unlimited, members are usually required to take shares besides paying an entrance fee. Loans are almost always for reproductive purposes, but loans for other purposes are occasionally allowed.

The progress made since the passing of the act of 1904 has been rapid. On June 30, 1910, there were in India 3,145 rural societies, 321 urban societies, and 32 "central" societies.

The so-called "central" societies, of which the object is to provide capital for the local societies (rural and urban), show great diversity of character. In some cases they are strictly federal, consisting solely of affiliated local societies. In such central societies the liability of the society members is usually limited to a certain multiple of the shares which they have taken up in the central society. A type of central society also exists in which the liability of the society members is unlimited.

Other central societies contain both individual members and affiliated societies, while yet others contain only individual members.

The following tables contain the principal statistics for 1909–10 of the rural and central societies:

TABLE I.—Number, membership, loans granted, etc., 1909–10.

[1] A rupee is equivalent to $0.324, or £0.66. [2] $1,761,676, or £362,297.

TABLE II.—Sources of capital, June 30, 1910.

	Rural societies.	Central societies.
	Rupees.	Rupees.
Loans from nonmembers	1,082,697	889,225
Loans from other societies	2,787,798	85,797
Loans from Government	596,194	60,374
Share capital	923,677	445,448
Deposits by members	977,236	829,802
Reserve fund	205,446	11,373

The latter table is interesting as showing to what a large extent the societies have become independent of advances from Government in finding the necessary working capital. It will be remarked that for the rural societies the principal source of capital is "other societies"—that is, not only central societies, but urban societies and other rural societies. The money provided by the members themselves in shares or in deposits also forms a considerable percentage of the working capital, and the societies have been able to obtain money largely from the general public.

In the case of the central societies it is not possible to distinguish between the capital provided (as shares or as deposits) by individual members and society members, but a large proportion of the capital is provided by the two classes of members together, and another large proportion is obtained from the general public. The amount which the central societies have obtained from the Government is comparatively trifling.

Thus, while the initiative in forming societies has been taken by the Government, the societies are very far from being dependent upon the Government for the working capital which they require.

CONCLUSION.

In the foregoing chapters we have seen that in different countries and in different circumstances cooperative agricultural credit has developed along different lines.

In no respect are the differences more remarkable than in the source of the capital. In Germany the Landschaften obtain the capital they require from the investing public by the issue of bonds. The Raiffeisen banks, too, are almost independent of advances from the State; they find nearly all their working capital in the deposits of members and others and in the loans which they obtain from their central banks and from other banking institutions. In France, on the other hand, it is the State which finds the bulk of the capital for the cooperative banks.

Great variations, too, may be remarked in the liability of the members. While the principle of mutual responsibility is always carried out to a greater or less extent, the liability of the members ranges from the unlimited liability of pure Raiffeisenism to a liability limited to the nominal value of the shares. It seems, however, that unlimited liability, or a near approach thereto, is found by experience to be the soundest basis of cooperative credit, especially where the borrowers are small cultivators.

Again the methods of granting loans and the security demanded vary greatly. The effort to reduce risk of loss is everywhere apparent, but there is a tendency to relax precautions which prevent the system from being elastic. This can, it is clear, be most safely done when the uses of credit are better understood. Where stop-gap borrowing has been prevalent, for instance, credit societies must naturally insist upon the borrower binding himself to apply his loan to a reproductive purpose. In time, however, the credit societies themselves so far educate their members that they only borrow money for investment as capital in their business, and more elastic forms of loan, such as loans on current account, become more usual.

In introducing cooperative credit into any country or agricultural district where it has not been previously practiced it is necessary to take the social and economic conditions into account. It must be inquired: Who are the persons for whom the credit facilities are intended? Are they large farmers or small cultivators? Are they proprietors of the lands they cultivate or only tenants? Are they all approximately upon the same social and financial level or are there wide differences between them? Do they require the loans for long periods for making permanent improvements or for short periods for use as working capital? Are they accustomed to borrowing for reproductive purposes or have they borrowed chiefly for stop-gap purposes? Are they already heavily indebted?

Upon the answers to these questions will depend, to a large extent, the form of cooperative credit to be adopted. The most important consideration is whether the capital is required by landowners for improving their property or by farmers to carry on the ordinary operations of cultivation. In the former case the German Landschaften furnish a model which should not be difficult to adapt to the circumstances of any other country. In the latter case the Raiffeisen system, or some modification of it, is generally the best, but in advanced economic conditions a modification of the less paternal Schulze-Delitzsch system might, perhaps, be adopted with advantage.

It is also important to inquire whether the persons for whom it is desired to provide credit facilities are approximately on the same social and financial level or if there are wide differences between them. It can not be expected, for example, that large farmers will generally be willing to join with small farmers in a society where the liability of the members is unlimited. Where there are great differences of financial status, some limitation of the liability must be adopted in order that it may not press too heavily upon the more well-to-do members.

To attract deposits, the best and most elastic source of capital, a credit society must be founded on a basis which will inspire public confidence and make the risk of a general withdrawal of deposits almost negligible. In large societies it may be possible to keep a considerable proportion of liquid assets, but, speaking generally, the funds of a credit society must, for the most part, be employed in making loans to members on terms which do not admit of their being readily realized. Where credit societies are numerous and are combined together to form central banks a greater elasticity is obtained in this respect.

The security which suffices to attract deposits usually suffices also to enable a credit society to obtain advances from banking institutions or capitalists. In availing itself of this source of working capital a credit society must so conduct its business as to be able to repay the money when it becomes due. It can not, for instance, borrow money for one year and lend it out for two. This, however, is a question of common sense in doing business which does not affect the form of organization.

We conclude this brief study of agricultural cooperative credit with the warning that the systems which we have described have been devised with the object of bringing credit facilities, such as exist in advanced commercial communities, within the reach of persons who individually were not able to obtain them. It is not to be supposed that the adoption of any such system will appreciably diminish the rate of interest at which a person can borrow money who can offer substantial security and has direct access to banks or capitalists.

The following letter from Mr. Louis Dop, vice president of the International Institute of Agriculture, and delegate of France, was read:

"The organization of agricultural credit, whatever be the system adopted, implies the recognition of certain fundamental principles. In fact, the various systems which may be adopted are but the result of the application of these fundamental principles. Therefore a clear explanation and right understanding of these principles is essential to success.

"I would draw Mr. Lubin's special attention to this point as the American people should clearly understand that the solution they will give to the problem of agricultural credit will depend on the nature of the principles from which they start.

"Granted this premise I deem it essential for all who wish to work in the field of agricultural credit to define clearly the distinctive characteristics of this kind of credit.

"The distinctive feature of agricultural credit may be treated under three heads.

"First, the juridical; second, the economic; third, the social.

"If due consideration be given to these three aspects of the question, the United States will be able to solve the problem of agricultural credit for the American people in the most satisfactory manner.

"First. Let us first examine the question from the juridical standpoint. In all countries agricultural credit is classified, from a juridical point of view, according to the nature of the security offered. Until recently most writers and economists who made a special study of agricultural credit, defined it, from a juridical standpoint, as personal credit, i. e., credit granted on personal security guaranteed by movable property.

"This was the generally recognized definition of agricultural credit. But this definition, which I believe a mistaken one, has been almost set aside as the result of the several studies which I have published on this question. Thus, in 1897 I published a study on agricultural credit, in which I pointed out that it was inaccurate to limit the definition of agricultural credit to those transactions which embraced exclusively personal credit, made on the security of crops, implements, etc.; in short, on the security of the personal estate of the farmer.

"In 1901, when I published my chief work on agricultural credit, I again studied this juridical aspect of the question, and I think I proved what is now accepted as a fact by all modern jurists, that agricultural credit embraces not only personal credit but all credit transactions made for the purpose of carrying out agricultural improvements, whether these improvements refer to movable property, such as machinery, implements, live stock, crops, or whether they refer to the amelioration of the estate itself, of the land, which is the primary source of all production.

"Thus, in my opinion, agricultural credit embraces not only personal credit, but also real estate credit. That is to say, agricultural credit is credit granted not only on the security of crops, implements, machinery; in short, on all forms of personal security, but also credit granted on the security of the land itself. In short, agricultural credit, juridically defined, extends to all credit transaction which aim at the improvement of the farm.

"Mr. LUBIN. Then you refer to mortgage credit?

"Mr. DOP. No; not specifically. A distinction used formerly to be drawn between mortgage, or land credit, and personal agricultural credit. I maintain that even mortgage credit, which is secured by the land, comes under the head of agricultural credit, because, when you make a loan to a farmer or landowner the money is generally borrowed for agricultural improvements, which may consist in improving the estate itself; for instance, by irrigation, drainage, and other works carried out to increase the yield of the soil or in the purchase of live stock, machinery, or agricultural implements. Therefore all these transactions should be considered juridically as agricultural credit transactions.

Second. I will now define agricultural credit from an economic standpoint. This standpoint is important and even essential in organizing agricultural credit. For the problem of agricultural credit arises from the desire to improve the general status of farming, increase production, and insure the greater prosperity of the agricultural classes.

This point of view has guided the action of most Governments which have undertaken the organization of agricultural credit. And as far as agricultural credit is concerned, the economic standpoint is in direct relation with the general prosperity of the country.

The best solution of this problem, from an economic standpoint, will be that which will take into due consideration the general status of the country, its commerce, its industries, and the special conditions governing its agricultural production. In short, from an economic standpoint, agricultural credit is one of the essential branches of the political economy of a country.

Third. I will not pass in review the social aspect of the question.

From a social point of view, agricultural credit is one of the essential elements in the prosperity of a country, for the increased prosperity of the farming and rural population will increase the prosperity of the State as a whole, and national revenue will grow, and the status of the rural population will improve.

So true is this that most countries which have organized a system of agricultural credit have faced the problem more from the point of view of its social than of its economical and juridical bearings; and most of the writers who have dealt with this question conclude that a sound system of agricultural credit is a valuable factor in the conservation of the State. For, by keeping the rural population on the land, by enabling it to realize profits, by safeguarding it from exploitation by speculative concerns, its independence and prosperity is secured. It is attached to the fundamental principles of the State, and interested in the progress of the various branches of national production.

Therefore, a country, government, individual, or economist interested in the organization of agricultural credit must study the problem from these several points of view—the juridical, the economic, and the social.

In my opinion, it would be a gross error to believe that agricultural credit can be judged by the same standard as ordinary commercial credit.

Let us examine commercial credit. This form of credit is based on the volume of business done by the merchant. The credit of the merchant increases in proportion as his business prospers, and as the value of the security he can offer increases. The measure of his credit will therefore be determined by the importance of his business, by the excess of his assets over his liabilities.

But the characteristic feature of agricultural credit, the bases on which it rests, is quite different. Of course credit is always credit; that is to say, it is a proof of confidence given to an institution or an individual; but the nature of such credit differs widely. In the case of agricultural credit, the main point taken into consideration is the personality of the borrower, his labor capacity, his power of production, his family traditions, the confidence he inspires in his neighbors. In short, all the personal and moral qualities which distinguish a man from his fellows are studied.

In the case of commercial credit these personal qualities, though they have their value, are but secondary considerations. The banker who gives credit to a merchant is primarily interested in his balance sheet. If a firm is not making a profit, it will not obtain credit, and the greater the difficulties besetting the merchant, the smaller the credit facilities afforded him.

But, in the case of agricultural credit, personal qualities have the upper hand, provided the banker or the credit association recognize that the working capacity of the borrower, and the returns that work can earn, place him in a position to return the loan within a more or less lengthy period. It is on the strength of these personal qualities that a certain measure of credit can be granted to the farmer.

These considerations are essential, for they show that in giving a sound organization to agricultural credit one must not consider merely the wealth or the general credit capacity of the individual, but the system selected must give due importance to personal qualities and be adapted to the character, customs, and general laws of the country in which it is to operate.

For these reasons I have always maintained that, in my opinion, the organization of agricultural credit is, above all, the outcome of social consideration, and that its aim and purposes are to improve the social status of the individual, the district, the country.

I am confirmed in the justice of this opinion, for examination of the history of the organization of agricultural credit in the different countries in which it is in operation shows that it has been modeled and adapted in accordance with the customs and national legislation of each.

Let us glance at some of the systems now in operation. Take, for instance, the Raiffeisen and the Schulze-Delitsche system of Germany, and the Luzzatti banks in Italy. Each of these systems have taken as basis of its organization the characteristics and customs of the people it is intended to serve.

What is the main characteristic of the Raiffeisen system?

The spirit of association. What has made it possible to introduce successfully this system in Germany? The fact that the spirit of association is a characteristic German trait. This is exemplified by the saying that whenever two Germans meet it is to form an association.

These details, which may seem puerile, are nevertheless important, for they show that the spirit of association is at the basis of the German character. And this spirit of association has come into play in the field of agriculture as in all other spheres of economic activity in Germany.

These Raiffeisen credit associations are, as you know, based on the spirit of cooperation, of reciprocity, of each of their members. A certain number of persons come together and decide that they will found an agricultural-credit bank, based on the solidarity of the members, with unlimited liability. As this system is in harmony with the special customs and characteristic traits of the German, it is only natural that it should have attained a very high degree of development in a short time, and that it works successfully, because it corresponds to the fundamental essence of the German character.

The deduction to be drawn is that in organizing agricultural credit the first thing to take into consideration is the mental outlook, the customs of the country in which it is to work.

The Schulze-Delitsche system differs little in essentials from the Raiffeisen system. In the Schulze-Delitsche rather more importance is given to the commercial side than in the Raiffeisen, but both systems are based on the spirit of reciprocity, of solidarity of the members, and they have been successful in Germany because the spirit of association is highly developed in the German. And thus Germany has had at its service a system adapted to its customs and national character.

I shall now compare the German system with that of a country in which the national character is somewhat different. I will take the case of France. The Frenchman is more independent in character; individualism and personal rights play a more important part in France than they do in the case of the Germanic people. In fact, this spirit of independence and individualism make the French somewhat similar in character to the English, in whom individualism prevails over all other considerations.

Nevertheless the spirit of association is well developed in France, for the great advantages derived from it abroad has become known.

Several attempts were made to organize agricultural credit in France as the result of private initiative, as in the case of the banks of the Rhone and of the southeast, based on the Raiffeisen system. But the results obtained by these private efforts were inconsiderable, for the French are so individualistic that they can never make up their minds to join an association unless the safety of the transaction is fully guaranteed by official authorities.

Nevertheless the organization of agricultural credit in France has been based on thoroughly scientific principles, which have led to very satisfactory results in a short time. These results are due to the fact that the political, religious, and social bias which distinguished the earlier efforts made in France in this direction have been entirely set aside.

The agriculturists of France, interested in the organization of agricultural credit, have been anxious, above all, that the organization should be in the hands of the agriculturists themselves. And this because some 40 or 50 years ago attempts were made to organize agricultural credit by ordinary commercial banks. But the efforts made by these banks failed, because they looked principally after their own interests and not after those of the agriculturists, and the French farmers said: "We require a system of agricultural credit organized in the interest of agriculture, in our interests, and which shall yield no illigitimate profits to speculators or outsiders who draw dividends on what ought to go to our advantage."

The main difficulty in organizing such a system of agricultural credit was due to the fact that private capital, bank capital, was unwilling to invest in agricultural credit, as the interest earned on such transactions was insufficient.

It was, therefore, necessary to find a system by which, while securing the lender against loss, the farmers could obtain the requisite capital at a very low rate of interest, and which would also make it possible for agricultural credit to be organized for the benefit of agriculturists themselves and not for the benefit of the capitalists.

To insure these results and to make sure that agricultural credit should remain exclusively in the hands of agriculturists, it was decided that it should be organized exclusively by the agricultural unions (syndicate agricoles). These unions, in accordance with the act of April 5, 1884, consisted exclusively of agriculturists.

Mr. LUBIN. Are these unions corporations or free associations?

Mr. DOP. Free associations, but legally recognized under the act of 1884. All syndicates or unions, including those which are not agricultural, are required to observe the provisions of this act.

Mr. LUBIN. But are they corporations or free associations? If several commercial houses work together they form a free association, but if these firms decide to form a corporation, they have to ask for a charter, and they become mutually responsible for their transactions. Limited liability companies, in short.

Mr. DOP. No; these unions are not that. The law of 1884 is a general law regulating the formation of unions or syndicates. Persons belonging to the same profession, farmers, workmen, etc., have the right to form a professional syndicate, as long as they conform to certain regulations laid down in the act of 1884.

Mr. LUBIN. Then they are trades-unions?

Mr. DOP. Yes; trades-unions. It is the same thing. Any association conforming to the provisions of the act of 1884 can form a union. These unions may be formed by merchants, workmen, or farmers, but the members must all belong to the same calling. That is their characteristic features. Consequently agricultural credit in France has taken as its basis these unions formed exclusively of farmers.

Mr. LUBIN. Are these unions incorporated? Can they sue at law?

Mr. DOP. Yes; they are incorporated.

Mr. LUBIN. Are they unlimited-liability associations?

Mr. DOP. Most of the agricultural unions which open credit banks are unlimited-liability associations. But this is determined in each case by their statutes. These syndicates all have to conform to the common law. When a syndicate organizes an agricultural credit bank, the basis of the bank is the syndicate, and formation of the bank subjects all the members of the syndicate to unlimited liability. But it must be remembered that each of these agricultural banks formed by an agricultural syndicate or union draws up its own by-laws, and the by-laws provide either for limited or unlimited liability of members. Great freedom is left to each of these banks. The system most generally adopted is that of unlimited liability, but in some cases provision is made for limited liability.

The essential point to which I wish to draw Mr. Lubin's particular attention is the following, which I believe to be of great importance for any country anxious to introduce a system of agricultural credit: In France agricultural credit is limited exclusively to agriculturists, and the attention of those who organize these credit associations is mainly concentrated on the exclusion from the benefits and profits accruing from these associations of all parties who are not directly engaged in farming.

On the other hand, in other countries, and more especially in Germany, the Raiffeisen or Schulze-Delitsche systems sometimes admit persons who are not agriculturists. As a result the character of these associations, which was at first agricultural, may be transformed, and agriculturists end by playing only a very secondary part. This is the main point which I wish to emphasize.

You thus see that the spirit of freedom and individualism of the French farmer finds a free play in his right to regulate according to his wishes the by-laws of each of these agricultural credit associations.

You are already acquainted with the broad lines of the organization of agricultural credit in France. The system is both scientific and practical. Scientific, because the organization is uniform, and regulated by organic laws applicable to all similar associations. You know that at the basis of this system are the local credit associations. The first step in the organization is the local rural bank, formed by an agricultural syndicate or union. This means that the local agricultural credit bank is formed exclusively of farmers, as only agriculturists can belong to an agricultural syndicate.

You will have seen by the last number of the Institute's bulletin the nature of the business transacted by these local banks. After the local banks come the regional or district banks of agricultural credit, which generally, step by step, centralize the agricultural credit business for a whole region. We have not yet got the national bank of agricultural credit, but the Bank of France discounts the bills of the farmers, backed by two signatures. The Bank of France itself, under the terms of the act of 1897, by which its charter was renewed, is bound to place at the service of agriculturists a sum of 40,000,000 francs.

Mr. LUBIN. Is that Government money?

Mr. DOP. It is money obtained from the profits realized by the Bank of France. The Bank of France is not a Government bank; it is a bank authorized by Government and which obtains its charter from the State. It is an official bank, but not a State bank. And this bank, the Bank of France, has given an initial sum of 40,000,000 francs.

Mr. LUBIN. In short, this is a subsidy which the bank pays the Government and which the Government uses for the benefit of agriculture.

Mr. DOP. Yes; the Government made the renewal of the charter of the Bank of France conditional on the payment of a subsidy of 40,000,000 francs to be used for the benefit of agriculture, and besides these forty millions the Bank of France is required to set aside, for the purpose of agricultural credit, an annual sum deducted from its profits; and this sum, which is variable in amount, was 2,000,000 francs to begin with, and now amounts to 4,000,000 francs a year.

Mr. LUBIN. Has this money got to be repaid to the Bank of France?

Mr. DOP. This money is to be repaid to the Bank of France at the end of a certain number of years as fixed by law. It is to be repaid by the agricultural credit banks. The money is loaned to these banks free of interest. I will not go into the details of this organization, as they are described in the bulletins of the institute.

What I wish to emphasize about this system is the following:

First. Private initiative, free associations, as represented by the agricultural syndicates or unions, is at the basis of this system of agricultural credit.

Second. To promote this spirit of association and to insure its yielding result of value to agriculture, the State intervenes by granting subsidies, so that this organization complies with the formula, "Help yourself and heaven will help you."

The State only grants its subsidy when private initiative has already founded the bank.

Third. The State makes sure that this organization does not depart from the duties intrusted to it, and that it confines itself strictly to agricultural credit transactions, as required by its statutes, by means of a special bureau of agricultural credit attached to the ministry of agriculture.

This bureau controls, by means of frequent inspections, the business transacted by the regional and local banks. In organizing this service the State was guided by the need of safeguarding agriculturists against imprudent action and of watching over these organizations to see that they do not degenerate into commercial or speculative institutions.

As we have seen, the French system, by combining private initiative with State aid, offers the advantage of giving full scope to private initiative, only intervening when this private initiative has already produced results.

Another important point which should be noted about this system is the very low rate of interest on the loans made to the agriculturists, varying from 2 per cent to a maximum of 4 per cent. This interest may never exceed that charged by the Bank of France for its commercial transactions.

These are the distinctive features of the agricultural credit operations in France. I will now give a rapid glance at the various purposes which this credit is designed to meet.

In the beginning such credit was only granted for such purposes as the purchase of farm requisites or stock required for the improvement of a farm. This was personal credit for agriculturists. In the beginning loans for such purposes were made for short terms—90 days, or 3 months at the most. But it was soon seen that the periods for which the loans were made were altogether too short for agricultural purposes, and the next step was to organize long-term credit to individuals, for periods of three, four, five, and six months, according to the nature of the transaction.

Here is a concrete example: A farmer wants a loan of 200 francs to buy sheep. If the loan is only granted for three months, the farmer is unable to increase the weight of his sheep to such an extent as to be able to sell them at a profit. He has to wait for them to grow, for the weight of meat to increase, for the wool to grow, and all this requires several months. The farmer is therefore unable to repay his loan until he has sold his sheep at a profit due to their increased weight or to the sale of their wool. I quote this instance to show that as a rule, in the case of agriculture, short term loans are insufficient and long-term credit must be provided for.

But agricultural credit in France is not restricted to loans made for the purchase of live stock, farm requisites, or other movable goods. Recent laws have extended these transactions to include land credit.

Thus the acts of 1909 and 1910 authorize the regional associations, and even the local associations, to make loans to farmers for the purchase of a homestead; such loans may amount to as much as 8,000 francs, repayable in 25 years. This is a form of land credit. I wish to lay emphasis on this form of credit, as it is characteristic of the French system, and no provision is made for it under the Reiffeisen system.

Such land-credit transactions are, however, restricted to providing the means to the farmer to become owner of his own homestead.

Besides this, agricultural credit, which at first was only granted to individuals, is now extended to collective bodies; that is to say, to associations formed to carry on a specific business, such as cooperative associations; thus, agricultural credit, which was individual to start with, has become collective.

For instance, a cooperative association is formed to run a winery, or to sell wheat collectively on the best terms. Well, the regional and local agricultural credit banks which grant loans to such associations no longer grant loans to the individuals composing them, but to the cooperative association in its corporate capacity.

This is another innovation and improvement introduced by the French system of agricultural credit, and such collective credit can also be granted for long as well as for short terms.

The above are the general remarks which I wished to place before Mr. Lubin as a basis for his study, so as to make it clear that, in considering the problem of agricultural credit, three points should be kept in mind:

1. In my opinion, a system of agricultural credit can only be practical, effective, and beneficial to the farmer if it is organized exclusively of farmers.

2. It is essential that such credit organizations be quite independent of speculators, i. e., of bankers who transact business with a view to personal profit.

3. That the farmer and agriculturist, who form these credit associations, must realize thoroughly that they are combining for reciprocal benefits, that they are not entering a profit-making business, but rendering each other a mutual service.

The deduction to be drawn from these three points is that the rate of interest charged for the loans made to the farmers must be the lowest current in the section. The rate of interest may vary from a minimum of 2 per cent to a maximum of 5 per cent, which should never be exceeded. The rate within these limits will depend on the length of time for which the loan is made.

In examining which system is most likely to be adaptable to the needs of the United States several points must be borne in mind.

The first question which comes up is the following:

Does the United States wish to plan an organization extensible to the country as a whole, or does it wish to organize State by State or district by district? Whatever be the answer to this question, and in all cases, the agricultural, political, economic, and social status of the territories to which the system is to be applied will have to be taken into careful consideration.

I am convinced that it is absolutely essential to give due weight to the habits of the agricultural population to be served. The organization selected should be adaptable to the daily life of the people. It is therefore impossible to state, a priori, what system is likely to be best suited to the United States. The answer depends on the way in which the organizers conceive this organization.

As far as my knowledge of America goes, I am led to the following conclusions:

1. If the American people wish to plan a national organization I consider that the National Congress should enact general legislation regulating the organization of agricultural credit, laying down the broad outlines and general principles on which such credit should be based. When once these general principles have been determined by law, it would be the duty of each State legislature to adapt them to local requirements, and to the habits, commercial usages, and economic status of the rural population of each State.

This would insure a very flexible system, which could be adapted to the needs of the various environments, whilst at the same time the interests of the rural population would be protected by the recognition of general fundamental principles enacted by law. This would, perhaps, make it possible to safeguard the cooperative credit movement from possible attempts on the part of financial organizations and trusts to get it in its power, and to convert them into purely business concerns.

2. Should the United States not intend to plan a national organization and should it be left to the farmers themselves to take the initiative in this direction, I should then conclude in favor of what is known in France as "organizing from below." In this case I should advise that in each township, in each rural center, an association of farmers be formed on the lines of the agricultural syndicates or of the Raiffeisen banks, but such organizations should always be formed by the farmers themselves. If the population amongst which such associations are formed is largely of Germanic origin it would then probably be preferable to adopt the Raiffeisen system; but if this organization is to be formed in the Southern States, where the Anglo-Saxon and, to some extent, the French spirit predominates, as in Louisiana, it is then probable that the tendencies of the population will be more individualistic.

In this case it would be preferable to follow the French plan and to form associations, consisting exclusively of farmers, which would organize local agricultural credit banks, and these local associations would federate into a central association for a whole district or State.

Such, in its main outlines, is the organization which I can foresee without a thorough study of the environments, legislative, judicial, and administrative conditions of the territories in which such an organization is to be started.

In my opinion, as a committee of inquiry is to be appointed, it is not opportune now to study one system rather than another. I think that Mr. Lubin's efforts should be directed mainly on having the fundamental principles which should underlie any system studied, and then, afterwards, the details of the system best suited to local needs can be taken up for consideration.

If I were at the Nashville convention of the Southern Commercial Congress I should say: We wish to organize agricultural credit for the United States on a sound basis; well, questions of detail in application will be thrashed out by practice, but we should start at once to study the general outline which will fit in with the condition under which farming is carried out in America, and with the character of our people, and when we have done this it will then be time to ask: Should we work for a system founded on the free initiative of local associations, or is national legislation required? All questions of detail can safely be left to be worked out subsequently.

LOUIS DOP,
French Delegate,
International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy.

The following letter from his excellency Hon. Prof. Louis Luzzotti to Mr. David Lubin on agricultural cooperative credit and its introduction into the United States was read:

ROME, March 11, 1912.

Hon. DAVID LUBIN,
Delegate of the United States,
International Institute of Agriculture, Rome.

MY DEAR LUBIN: You will express to the honorable delegates of the Southern States my profound regret at my inability to accept their cordial and most interesting invitation; but when one's country is engaged in a war, those who have held positions of grave responsibility in the State are not at liberty to leave it; they must remain at their post in the Chamber of Deputies and do their duty.

Ever since 1862 I have worked in the field of agricultural and land-mortgage credit, and I have had occasion, both out of the Cabinet and when in it, to spread ideas and promote institutions of various kinds, and it would have been a delightful task for me to discuss these questions with the Southern Commercial Congress. The best advice is that which results from actual observation of facts and from the generalizations deduced therefrom.

Just as each country has its special needs, arising from its own peculiar conditions, so, in the field of agrarian economics, each country organizes special forces and adopts special forms, but the same fundamental laws govern all the various types.

Now, the fundamental needs of agriculture are three:

1. Land-mortgage credit, based on the actual value of the estate or holdings, and bearing a certain ratio to that value.

2. Agricultural credit, i. e., credit granted to the farmer on his personal security for the improvement of his farming business.

3. Lastly, a form of credit which stands halfway between land-mortgage credit and agricultural credit, but which extend over a certain number of years.

Agricultural credit comprises loans for transactions which are completed within a year and which do not require the security offered by the land itself. But in carrying out such work as a change of cultures, improvements by means of irrigation, and such like, long-term credit is required, and often the double guarantee of both personal security and that of real estate.

Now, experience teaches that financial institutions for agricultural credit, that is to say, institutions promoted by financiers with a view to dividends rather than to the assistance of agriculture, do not secure the desired results. Their titles proclaim them the protectors of agriculture and agriculturists; in reality they aim at exploiting rather than assisting them.

If I were asked by the Southern States (which, from what you have told me, my dear Lubin, have the good fortune to come last and to profit by the experience of others) to advise an effective system, I should say exclude speculation and create mutual land-mortgage credit associations, mutual agricultural credit associations, linked with the State and with other public bodies which should grant them adequate and timely assistance.

A sound system of land-mortgage credit, one suited to meet the requirements both of the wealthy and the poor, both of large and small landowners, should, as is the case with the German, Austrian, and Australian systems, have as its basis land registers, from which the legal and economic status of each estate or holding can always be clearly ascertained.

These mutual associations of landowners would issue bonds on the joint security of their lands, bonds which could be purchased by the State and other public bodies. In Italy the savings banks, which are autonomous, prosperous, and flourishing institutions, and which have not to declare dividends, as they are impersonal corporate bodies, have for years past transacted and still transact land-mortgage credit business and purchase and sell mortgage bonds. An ideal organization would be that of mutual land-mortgage credit associations, connected up with savings banks, savings banks assisted and watched over by the State.

A whole scheme of legislation would have to be drafted for this purpose. The Federal Government could and should include among the various investments to which it gives its preference in placing the people's savings deposits the purchase of such land-mortgage bonds issued by mutual associations or by autonomous savings banks.

By the side of these mutual land-mortgage credit associations there should be mutual agricultural credit associations, agricultural cooperative banks for medium and large transactions, small rural banks for loans on personal security made to really poor people.

Such agricultural cooperative banks, organized on the basis of unlimited or limited liability, or on immediate systems between the unlimited and the limited, already extend throughout the European countries; and I, who have visited them nearly all and made use of them in my studies, should have had great pleasure in dissecting and analyzing these agricultural specimens before your Congress. But I may not do so, nor do I wish to write this letter in the tone of a university professor, which is always somewhat stilted, for your Congress consists of men who are studying facts with a view to the good of agriculture—that is to say, of eminently practical people.

I will only venture to give you one piece of advice—avoid high rates of interest. Agriculture, even the most flourishing, can not bear them.

Of course there is a half-way house between a profit-making speculation and loosing money, but it should always be borne in mind that the institutions we are considering are not ordinary financial institutions, but institutions for the redemption of agriculture.

If it is their duty to educate the farmer, who is often at fault on this point, to the need for punctuality in payments; it is also their duty to afford credit on conditions which by granting fair and reasonable terms for interest and repayment will abolish the usury exercised by others without replacing it by a usury of their own.

By working along these lines, which combine sound business principles with a soul of goodness, the Americans, who are now the last to enter the field, will soon succeed in surpassing us, and thus become the first.

Europe is accustomed to this spectacle in all fields of economic activity, and she has taken to applauding and admiring what she can not and does not wish to prevent.

I grasp your hand with fraternal affection, dear Lubin, and remain,

Yours, faithfully,

LUIGI LUZZATTI,
Italian Delegate International Institute of Agriculture.

RESOLUTIONS OF NASHVILLE CONFERENCE.

Herewith is a statement and resolution on the Raiffeisen and other systems of cooperative rural banking; a report of the special committee to the conference on the European systems of rural finance; a resolution commending other agencies making investigations of the European systems of finance; a resolution recognizing the valuable services of the King and Government of Italy; a resolution of thanks to Hon. David Lubin, American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy; and a letter to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States relative to the value of the English edition of the publications of the International Institute of Agriculture:

STATEMENT AND RESOLUTION ON RAIFFEISEN AND OTHER SYSTEMS.

This conference, consisting of representatives from 26 States of the Nation, was called into being by the Southern Commercial Congress in order that we might deliberately consider the evident weakness of rural finance in the United States, and in order that we might study, in advance of the general meetings of the congress, the various European systems of cooperative rural banking that have had so beneficial effects abroad. We consider it part of our function to make a recommendation to the directors of the Southern Commercial Congress, and to do so we reduce the recommendations to the form of a resolution:

Whereas the solution of the problems of rural finance lies at the basis of every attempt to improve rural conditions; and

Whereas the latent wealth of the farmer can only become active wealth through the possibilities of credit freely obtainable on the basis of his character and his assets; and

Whereas there are in operation in Europe the following systems and their variants, namely, Raiffeisen, Schulze-Delitzche, and Landschaften; and

Whereas these systems have during their existence greatly stimulated rural finance in these European countries; and

Whereas we are convinced that the system should be further studied by the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we recommend to the directors of the Southern Commercial Congress that a select committee on rural finance investigation, consisting of one or more, but preferably two, members from each State of the Union, go to Europe in the summer of 1912, under the general management of the Southern Commercial Congress and under the administrative management of an executive committee, to be elected by the members of the select committee, and under by-laws to be adopted by the committee as a whole; be it further

Resolved, That the daily findings of the select committee shall be recorded in such form that each member may return to his State possessed of one copy of said findings for publication and use in his State, and that a second copy be given to the Nation through publication, to be recommended to the Congress of the United States for general distribution; and be it further

Resolved, That we preferably recommend two members from each State for the reason that when the committee returns there will be in each State two men well informed on the whole subject and locally interested in solving the problems of rural finance as presented by the State of their residence, and for the additional reason that a large committee, bringing many minds to bear upon the phases of one subject, can be expected to produce greater national good than would be possible from investigation by a small committee not individually representative of the States of the Nation and in a measure unacquainted with the varying needs of the various sections.

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Your committee considered three questions to be transmitted to the directors of the Southern Commercial Congress as recommendations from our conference as a whole:

First. How shall the proposed select commission of investigation be selected?

Second. How shall it be financed?

Third. When shall it take the tour of investigation?

First. We regard the directors of the Southern Commercial Congress, by reason of having taken the initiative, as having the authority to select the members of the committee to come from the following States: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia, feeling confident that the directors will have the interest of the committee's successful mission at heart. We also expect the officials of the Southern Commercial Congress to correspond in all other States with agricultural colleges, the agricultural press, agricultural interests represented by farmers' organizations, and other active thinkers on rural problems, in order to secure from these suggestions as to the two men of each State best fitted for the investigation.

Second. We recommend that the directors of the Southern Commercial Congress in each Southern State act as the nucleus of a State committee to raise funds within each State for the purpose of sending two members of the committee from each such State, and appoint additional committeemen from each State. We also recommend that in States outside the South the nucleus of effort within each State be formed by those with whom the officials of the Southern Commercial Congress correspond. We also recommend that our conference, before adjournment, meet in executive session to place in the hands of the directors of the Southern Commercial Congress our personal suggestions as to important and appropriate men in each State.

Third. We recommend that the period covered by the select committee of investigation be preferably from June 15 to September 15, or as near to such dates as may be practicable, said variation of dates to be based only upon the failure of steamship sailing dates to coincide with the above. We also recommend that the select committee of investigation sail direct to Naples, report to the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, and then visit Italy, Austria-Hungary, Germany, Denmark, Ireland, and such other points as may be deemed necessary.

We are convinced that the plan adopted by our conference is essential. We can not make this clearer than by quoting from the resolution passed by our conference yesterday: "A large committee, bringing many minds to bear upon the phases of one subject, can be expected to produce greater national good than would be possible from investigation by a small committee not individually representative of the States of the Nation and in a measure unacquainted with the varying needs of the various States."

Transcending the limit of our instructions we wish, however, to place before the conference as a whole an emphatic opinion: We believe that in view of the vital relation of the whole subject of rural finance to the welfare and increasing development of American agriculture, and in view of the brief time at the disposal of the select committee of investigation its membership must be strictly held to those whose hearts are in the subject and who will be willing to reserve sightseeing for a more appropriate occasion.

INDORSEMENT OF OTHER AGENCIES.

The subject of cooperative agricultural finance is so vast, its importance is so great, the whole matter is so new to the American people, and the conditions under which these cooperative banking institutions will have to cooperate in the different States are so varied that the problem is worthy of the deepest study by a number of agencies. We observe with pleasure that some of the States are already taking action along this line. We are especially gratified that the Congress of the United States has under advisement the appointment of a national commission upon farm finance to employ experts for making elaborate inquiry into all the details of cooperative land mortgage banks and cooperative rural credit unions and to report thereon for the common good. We welcome all these and similar efforts, and the proposed select committee on rural finance to be appointed by the Southern Commercial Congress will be prompt to cooperate with any and all of the other agencies concerned in the same line of investigation.

TRIBUTE TO THE KING OF ITALY AND THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT.

Whereas the International Institute of Agriculture was established at Rome, in 1905, upon the initiative of His Majesty Victor Emanuel III, King of Italy, who provided it with land and buildings and is contributing with princely generosity toward its work in addition to the official support and participation therein by Italy, by the United States, and by 48 other Governments, together representing 95 per cent of the world's area and 98 per cent of the world's population; and

Whereas it is now realized that the International Institute of Agriculture is doing a work of incalculable value to the world as a whole, and to the United States of America: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Southern Commercial Congress, in convention assembled, with 24 States represented, voices the sentiments of the American people in hereby recognizing the valuable services of the King and Government of Italy in making possible that great world federation for progress, the International Institute of Agriculture.

We trust that the institute may continue to be increasingly successful in securing international cooperation in world crop reports, in disseminating agricultural intelligence, in promoting cooperative agricultural finance, in fostering more economic distribution of the world's agricultural production, and in facilitating better understandings between the peoples of the earth.

APPRECIATION OF HON. DAVID LUBIN.

Whereas the inception and organization of the International Institute of Agriculture, with headquarters at Rome, Italy, was largely the result of the foresight and untiring energies of Hon. David Lubin, of California; and

Whereas his persistent efforts induced the recognition and cooperation of the United States with leading European countries to foster and support this splendid institution in the interest of international agriculture, which is proving of vast benefit to this country through the gathering and publication of important data relating to the world's agricultural crops, and foreign agricultural credits, which are now commanding the serious attention of American farmers: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the delegates from all sections of the American Union at present in attendance upon the annual conference of the Southern Commercial Congress, at Nashville, Tenn., desire to hereby convey to the Hon. David Lubin an expression of their full appreciation of his earnest and valued labors in behalf of the Agricultural interests of American farmers, and to indorse and congratulate the wisdom of the United States Department of State in appointing and retaining the Hon. David Lubin as American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy.

LETTER TO UNITED STATES SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The conference on the Raiffeisen and other European systems of cooperative rural banking, held under the auspices of the Southern Commercial Congress, now in session and attended by delegates from Massachusetts to North Dakota and from Minnesota to Texas, earnestly asks reconsideration of the vote of the House throwing out item of $5,000 in diplomatic and consular bill for the cost of editions in English of publications of International Institute of Agriculture at Rome.

These publications are of incalculable value to the American farmer, as shown by the increasing demand from individual farmers and numerous other organizations.

The official language of the International Institute is French; the American farmers can not read French; so provision must be made for English editions or else the valuable work of the International Institute of Agriculture is lost to the American farmer.

We respectfully submit that it is unwise to vote some $18,000 for the support of the institute and then vote down the smaller appropriation which should go to make the work of the institute available to the American people.

Interpreting the needs and wishes of the American farmer through their delegated representatives here assembled, we submit that it would be much more desirable to increase the proposed $5,000 to $10,000 than to vote down the lesser amount.

If additional evidence is needed to show the value of these publications, we have it in the hearty indorsement in favor of this measure by the honorable Secretary of State, the honorable Secretary of Agriculture, and the honorable Secretary of Commerce and Labor. We earnestly hope that the $5,000 appropriation will be granted for the purpose desired, and that if possible the amount be increased to $10,000, so that a larger number of American people may be benefited by the vastly important labors of the International Institute of Agriculture.

A resolution was unanimously adopted extending thanks to the officers of the conference.

The statement and all resolutions above referred to were submitted to the committee on resolutions of the Southern Commercial Congress, reported on favorably, and unanimously adopted by the Congress in regular convention assembled.

The resolutions, as directed, were submitted to the board of directors of the Southern Commercial Congress in annual session and were unanimously approved. The managing director of the congress was instructed to take immediate steps to carry out the spirit of the resolutions.

Respectfully submitted.

CLARENCE J. OWENS,
Secretary-Treasurer Southern Commercial Congress.

APRIL 13, 1912.

EXHIBIT B.

We recommend and urge an authoritative investigation of agricultural credit societies and corporations in other countries, and the passage of State and Federal laws for the establishment and capable supervision of organizations having for their purpose the loaning of funds to farmers. (Platform, Republican Party.)

Of equal importance with the question of currency reform is the question of rural credits or agricultural finance. Therefore we recommend that an investigation of agricultural credit societies in foreign countries be made, so that it may be ascertained whether a system of rural credits may be devised suitable to conditions in the United States. (Platform, Democratic Party.)

Last year I made some investigations, which I am continuing here at the request of the Department of State, and as a result of all this I have arrived at the firm conviction that the establishment of a rural credit system or systems is an imperative need. There is nothing so important to-day before the American people, in my opinion—not even excepting the currency reform. Consequently, I shall most earnestly welcome your commission on its visit to Europe. I should be pleased to know your plans at as early a date as possible, in order that I may be in Paris to receive you. (Myron T. Herrick, American Ambassador to France, to the Managing Director of the Southern Commercial Congress.)

SELECT COMMITTEE TO GO ABROAD.

Acceptances of membership on the select committee, which will go abroad next May to study the European systems of cooperative agricultural credit, are now being received by Dr. Clarence J. Owens, managing director of the Southern Commercial Congress, Southern Building, Washington, D. C.

The select committee, national in scope, will undertake one of the most important investigations ever projected in this country, for it will bring back information regarding the European cooperative rural credit systems, suggesting modes for their adaptation suited to meet the needs of the American farmer. The importance of these systems is indicated in the table given below.

The select committee is the outgrowth of a conference held under the auspices of the fourth annual convention of the Southern Commercial Congress, April 1–6, in Nashville, Tenn., participated in by representatives of 27 States.

On invitation the American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, was present and explained the European systems from the publications of the institute. The conference resolved that an investigation of these systems should be made by an American committee, all with the end in view to their adaptation and adoption in the United States.

The select committee goes abroad next May, under the auspices of the Southern Commercial Congress. It will start from New York, direct to Rome, Italy, via Naples. It will arrive in Rome at the time when the General Assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture will be in session. The select committee will thus meet some of the most important experts on the European rural credit systems, who come as delegates to the sessions of the general assembly. Some of these experts will be asked to accompany the committee on its European tour.

On its return to the United States, the select committee will make a preliminary report to the fifth annual convention of the Southern Commercial Congress, at Mobile, Ala., 1913. The full report of the committee will be submitted to the people of the United States in accordance with paragraph 7 of the resolutions adopted at the Nashville conference, which reads as follows:

"The daily findings of the select committee shall be recorded in such form that each member may return to his State possessed of one copy of said findings for publication and use in his State, and that a second copy be given to the Nation through publication to be recommended to the Congress of the United States for general distribution."

The Southern Commercial Congress is now taking steps to have a bill introduced into each State legislature, providing for the expenses of two delegates to the select committee. In those States in which the legislatures will not be in session in time to allow of this—the State legislatures of the following States will not be in session at a date permitting of applying to them for appropriations for the traveling expenses of delegates to the select committee: Alabama, Arizona, Florida, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, New Mexico, Oregon, Virginia—the funds are to be raised by public subscription. The collective funds thus obtained will be employed by the Southern Commercial Congress to cover traveling and hotel expenses of the delegates from New York back to New York, and expenses incurred for interpreters, stenographers, printing, mailing, etc.

In order that the select committee may receive official recognition in Europe it is necessary that the credentials of State delegates be from the State governments, and the credentials of national delegates (delegates at large) from the National Government.

For publications on the European cooperative rural credit systems address the American delegate, International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy.

Correspondence in relation to the select committee, its membership, credentials, etc., should be addressed to the managing director, Southern Commercial Congress, Southern Building, Washington, D. C.

The following official figures, taken from an "Outline of the European Cooperative Credit Systems," published by the International Institute of Agriculture, show the number of institutions, their membership, and their total turnover for the three main systems in operation in Germany alone in 1909–10.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] takes up his matter, I want to prefer a request, which will take but a moment. I ask unanimous consent to consider House bill No. 21094, being an act to create a commission on industrial relations, and the amendments thereto, and vote upon the same on Thursday morning after the routine morning business.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is not in the Chamber, but I understand he desires to take up the cotton bill immediately after the morning business to-morrow. I also understood that there was to be a unanimous consent asked for the taking up of that bill.

Mr. BORAH. I have preferred a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. In view of the absence of the Senator from North Carolina, I shall object to the request.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was not present when the suggestion was made, and I do not know what it is.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the request for unanimous consent by the Senator from Idaho that we take up the bill referred to by him for consideration immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow, I simply called attention to the fact that I understood the Senator from North Carolina desired to take up the cotton bill to-morrow after the routine morning business, and as the Senator from North Carolina was out of the Chamber, I objected to the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was in the cloakroom when the request was made, and I am sorry I was not here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Utah objected?

Mr. SMOOT. I objected, Mr. President, but I want it understood in this way, that I am not objecting to the consideration of the bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can not make a conditional objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I was only going to explain it, Mr. President. If I can not do that, then I object.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say that I will object if it will interfere at all with the consideration of the cotton bill to-morrow after the routine morning business.

Mr. BORAH. I do not believe it will interfere with that bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not mean after the routine morning business, but immediately after the morning hour.

Mr. BORAH. I have preferred this request for consideration of the matter referred to immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection at all to that bill if it does not interfere with the unfinished business, which ought to be taken up at 12 o'clock.

Mr BAILEY. Is that the bill to create another Cabinet officer?

Mr. BORAH. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed unanimous-consent agreement will be stated from the desk. It has not yet been stated.

The Secretary read the proposed agreement, as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Thursday, August 15, 1912, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21094) to create a commission on industrial relations, and before adjournment on that calendar day will vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill, through the regular parliamentary stages, to its final disposition.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to prevent a unanimous-consent agreement being reached on this bill so far as the bill itself is concerned, but I am in charge of the fur-seal bill, which involves the carrying out of a convention with three other powers. We are now behindhand with our payments, and the situation is such that if we do not dispose of the bill it will be left to other powers to abrogate the treaty, as, technically, they could do. If we should lose the treaty, it would mean the resumption of pelagic sealing. I had hoped that we might dispose of that bill to-day, in which case it would not be in the way of the Senator from Idaho; but if the bill for the Coosa Dam is to take a long time, it may be impossible to reach the bill to which I refer to-day, and I do not like to mortgage the time ahead so that I can not get at that bill.

Mr. BORAH. I will modify my request so as to make it simply to take up the bill immediately after the routine business to-morrow morning, without the further request that we vote upon it. I think we can dispose of it in 20 or 30 minutes. I will not undertake to mortgage the entire day by that request, and the latter portion of the request can be stricken out if I can simply have consent to consider it to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request as modified?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I understand that it would not interfere with the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not at all. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered. The special order, which is——

Mr. LODGE. I was going to speak when the Chair put the question. If we can not dispose of the fur-seal bill to-day, I shall feel bound to move to take it up to-morrow and try to get the Senate to dispose of it at the earliest possible moment. I do not want to interfere with the other bill, but I can not consent to an agreement which deprives me of the right to make that motion. I do not know whether the agreement was modified so that I could do that or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The agreement as modified was that the bill should be taken up immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Massachusetts simply desires to make a motion to take up the bill, this agreement would not interfere with his doing it.

Mr. LODGE. If I retain that right, very well. I will try to have the fur-seal bill disposed of to-day.

COOSA RIVER DAM, ALA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the special order, which is Senate bill 7343.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 7343) to authorize the building of a dam across the Coosa River, Ala., at the place selected for Lock No. 18 on said river, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Ohio that there are amendments recommended by the committee, and that those should be acted on first.

Mr. BURTON. Very well; after those amendments are disposed of I shall offer an amendment.

The amendments of the Committee on Commerce were, on page 1, line 5, before the word "maintain," to strike out "and," and after the word "maintain" to insert "and operate"; in line 7, before the word "place," to strike out "the" and insert "a," and after the word "place" to strike out the words "selected by the engineers of the United States for the location of Lock and Dam No. 18 on said river and situated 7½ miles, more or less, above the city of Wetumpka, on said river, and all works incident thereto in the utilization of the power thereby developed" and insert "suitable to the interest of navigation about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Alabama Power Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successors and assigns, are authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across Coosa River, in the State of Alabama, at a place suitable to the interest of navigation about 7½ miles above the city of Wetumpka, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved June 23, 1910, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906."

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. BURTON. I ask that the amendment I send to the desk be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1 insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the rights here conferred shall not be assigned or transferred except upon the written consent of the Secretary of War: And provided, That the Federal Government reserve the right to control the charges for service to consumers in the event that the public interest may so require.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I think the bill as amended by the addition of the committee amendment does not sufficiently safeguard the public interest. I can find no fault with the author of the measure, because the bill in the form in which it was introduced conforms to regulations pertaining to dams in navigable streams which have usually been adopted by Congress. But the time has come when we should adopt more stringent rules in granting these privileges. Even the amendment which I have offered does not go far enough.

On this general subject I will say, Mr. President, that concerning no subject of legislation is there a more imperative need of a definite and comprehensive policy than in relation to the development and control of water power.

There are in this country something over 30,000,000 primary horsepowers, of which only about 5,500,000 have already been developed, much of this being the smaller developments in the more settled communities. The total amount of horsepower developed in the United States, according to the best estimates, is about 31,500,000—5,500,000, as I have stated, being supplied by water and 26,000,000 by steam.

The importance of this may be illustrated by the statement that about 340,000,000 tons of coal is consumed per annum in the creation of power. The total production of coal, both bituminous and anthracite, in the United States is about 500,000,000 tons annually. So, according to the best figures, two-thirds of the annual production is used for the development of power, while 30,000,000 horsepower of undeveloped water power, or a quantity nearly equal to the total amount of that now developed by all prime movers, is running to waste.

By the construction of reservoirs and other works necessary for the control of stream flow, there is a possible water-power development of one hundred and fifty to two hundred million horsepower. The magnitude of this industry is almost beyond comprehension. It will probably eventually become an industry of greater magnitude than any ever yet developed in this country, requiring not millions but billions of dollars for its control. Besides its enormous magnitude, this industry will become fundamental to many other industries which depend upon power for their operation and success. The possibility of a control of the business of the country through the agency of water power is more imminent than any other form of control ever attempted in the history of human endeavor. If the Federal Government is to exercise the control that it ought to exercise and must exercise to protect the public interest, further delay is very much to be regretted.

The need of an adequate governmental policy and the imminent danger that this great natural resource might fall into the hands of private interests for their exploitation has been realized by both President Roosevelt and President Taft, each of whom withdrew from entry many of the most valuable water-power sites on the public domain. Each of them did this with an express statement that they had no intention of preventing the development of these water powers for the benefit of the public interests, but felt compelled to withdraw them until such time as Congress should formulate a policy under which they could be developed in accordance with the public interests. To carry out this policy consistently, the officials of the Forest Service were instructed to cruise for water-power sites in order to forestall their location and exploitation for private gain. In the meantime special interests, in order to reap the harvest of the last of our great natural resources, have been grabbing for these water-power sites with a greed hardly paralleled in the history of this country, which has already suffered enough from the exploitation of our national resources.

The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has recently reported out an omnibus water-power bill, carrying a total of 10 projects.

The House not long ago commendably killed in summary fashion one such bill, and the President felt called upon to veto another which succeeded in running the gantlet of both Houses.

About three years ago Congress created the National Waterways Commission, and among the subjects referred to it for consideration was that of water power. The commission investigated this matter very thoroughly, calling before it officers of the Government having charge of public lands and the supervision of navigable streams, and also those interested in the development of water powers. As a result of these hearings, I introduced, nearly three months ago, water-power bills intended to establish something like a water-power policy, which would adequately protect the public interests and at the same time make possible the development of water power. The only way this great national resource can be conserved and rendered beneficial to the people is to use it. It is the one unrivaled natural resource the present use of which in no way diminishes its supply or its use by future generations.

Mr. President, I ask leave to print in my remarks, as I do not desire to detain the Senate by reading them, first the dam act of 1910, which expresses the present policy of the Government on this subject, and then Senate bill 6795 and Senate bill 6796. No. 6795 pertains to water power on the public lands. No. 6796 applies to water power developed in navigable streams.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Public, No. 246. H. R. 24375.]

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That when authority has been or may hereafter be granted by Congress, either directly or indirectly or by any official or officials of the United States, to any persons, to construct and maintain a dam for water power or other purpose across or in any of the navigable waters of the United States, such dam shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for such dam and all accessory works, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject have been submitted to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such dam and accessory works; and when the plans and specifications for any dam to be constructed under the provisions of this act have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War it shall not be lawful to deviate from such plans or specifications either before or after completion of the structure unless the modification of such plans or specifications has previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War: Provided, That in approving the plans, specifications, and location for any dam such conditions and stipulations may be imposed as the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States, which may include the condition that the persons constructing or maintaining such dam shall construct, maintain, and operate, without expense to the United States, in connection with any dam and accessory or appurtenant works, a lock or locks, booms, sluices, or any other structure or structures which the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers or Congress at any time may deem necessary in the interests of navigation, in accordance with such plans as they may approve, and also that whenever Congress shall authorize the construction of a lock or other structures for navigation purposes in connection with such dam, the persons owning such dam shall convey to the United States, free of cost, title to such land as may be required for such constructions and approaches, and shall grant to the United States free water power or power generated from water power for building and operating such constructions: Provided further, That in acting upon said plans as aforesaid the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War shall consider the bearing of said structure upon a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the waterway over which it is to be constructed with a view to the promotion of its navigable quality and for the full development of water power; and, as a part of the conditions and stipulations imposed by them shall provide for improving and developing navigation, and fix such charge or charges for the privilege granted as may be sufficient to restore conditions with respect to navigability as existing at the time such privilege be granted or reimburse the United States for doing the same, and for such additional or further expense as may be incurred by the United States with reference to such project, including the cost of any investigations necessary for approval of plans and of such supervision of construction as may be necessary in the interests of the United States: Provided further, That the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War are hereby authorized and directed to fix and collect just and proper charge or charges for the privilege granted to all dams authorized and constructed under the provisions of this act which shall receive any direct benefit from the construction, operation, and maintenance by the United States of storage reservoirs at the headwaters of any navigable streams, or from the acquisition, holding, and maintenance of any forested watershed, or lands located by the United States at the headwaters of any navigable stream, wherever such shall be, for the development, improvement, or preservation of navigation in such streams in which such dams may be constructed.

"SEC. 2. That the right is hereby reserved to the United States to construct, maintain, and operate, in connection with any dam built in accordance with the provisions of this act, a suitable lock or locks, booms, sluices, or any other structures for navigation purposes, and at all times to control the said dam and the level of the pool caused by said dam to such an extent as may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation.

"SEC. 3. That the persons constructing, maintaining, or operating any dam or appurtenant or accessory works, in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be liable for any damage that may be inflicted thereby upon private property, either by overflow or otherwise. The persons owning or operating any such dam or accessory works, subject to the provisions of this act, shall maintain, at their own expense, such lights and other signals thereon and such fishways as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe, and for failure so to do in any respect shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of not less than $500, and each month of such failure shall constitute a separate offense and subject such persons to additional penalties therefor.

"SEC. 4. That all rights acquired under this act shall cease and be determined if the person, company, or corporation acquiring such rights shall, at any time, fail, after receiving reasonable notice thereof, to comply with any of the provisions and requirements of the act, or with any of the stipulations and conditions that may be prescribed as aforesaid by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, including the payment into the Treasury of the United States of the charges provided for by section 1 of this act: Provided, That Congress may revoke any rights conferred in pursuance of this act whenever it is necessary for public use, and, in the event of any such revocation by Congress, the United States shall pay the owners of any dam and appurtenant works built under authority of this act as full compensation, the reasonable value thereof, exclusive of the value of the authority or franchise granted, such reasonable value to be determined by mutual agreement between the Secretary of War and the said owners, and in case they can not agree, then by proceedings instituted in the United States circuit court for the condemnation of such properties: And provided also, That the authority granted under or in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall terminate at the end of a period not to exceed 50 years from the date of the original approval of the project under this act, unless sooner revoked as herein provided or Congress shall otherwise direct: Provided, however, That this limitation shall not apply to any corporation or individual heretofore authorized by the United States, or by any State, to construct a dam in or across a navigable waterway, upon which dam expenditures of money have heretofore been made in reliance upon such grant or grants.

"SEC. 2. That any persons who shall fail or refuse to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, made in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act, and any persons who shall be guilty of a violation of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every month such persons shall remain in default shall be deemed a new offense and subject such persons to additional penalties therefor; and in addition to the penalties above described the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may, upon refusal of the persons owning or controlling any such dam and accessory works to comply with any lawful order issued by the Secretary of War or Chief of Engineers in regard thereto, cause the removal of such dam and accessory works as an obstruction to navigation at the expense of the persons owning or controlling such dam, and suit for such expense may be brought in the name of the United States against such persons and recovery had for such expense in any court of competent jurisdiction. Said provision as to recovery of expense shall not apply wherever the United States has been previously reimbursed for such removal; and the removal of any structures erected or maintained in violation of the provisions of this act or the order or direction of the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers made in pursuance thereof may be enforced by injunction, mandamus, or other summary process, upon application to the circuit court in the district in which such structure may, in whole or in part, exist, and proper proceedings to this end may be instituted under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States at the request of the Chief of Engineers or the Secretary of War; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to navigation created by the construction of any dam under this act the cause or question arising may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in any district in which any portion of said obstruction or dam touches.

"SEC. 6. That whenever Congress shall hereafter by law authorize the construction of any dam across any of the navigable waters of the United States, and no time for the commencement and completion of such dam is named in said act, the authority thereby granted shall cease and be null and void unless the actual construction of the dam authorized in such act be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of the passage of such act.

"SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved as to any and all dams which may be constructed in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the United States shall incur no liability for the alteration, amendment, or repeal thereof to the owner or owners or any other persons interested in any dam which shall have been constructed in accordance with its provisions.

"SEC. 8. That the word 'persons' as used in this act shall be construed to import both the singular and the plural, as the case demands, and shall include corporations, companies, and associations. The word 'dam' as used in this act shall be construed to import both the singular and the plural, as the case demands."

Approved, June 23, 1910.

A bill (S. 6795) [as amended] to control the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall, for the purposes herein provided, jointly formulate and publish uniform rules and regulations for the use of public lands. The head of the executive department having jurisdiction and control of lands to be occupied and used in accordance with the provisions of this act and in conformity to the rules and regulations to be formulated by virtue of the provisions of this section is hereby authorized to lease any part of the public lands of the United States, reserved or unreserved, including national forests, national parks, national monuments, Indian, military, and other reservations, including the District of Alaska, for a period not longer than 50 years, for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating thereon dams, canals, ditches, pipe lines, flumes, tunnels, conduits, reservoirs, power plants, transmission lines, and other works necessary or convenient to the development, generation, transmission, and utilization of hydroelectric or other water power, which lease shall be irrevocable, but which shall become null and void upon breach of any of its terms. Each such lease shall be issued, as herein provided for, by the head of the executive department having control of the public lands to be used and upon a finding by him that such proposed lease is in harmony with the public interest and, if within any public forest, park, monument, or reservation, consistent with the purposes for which such forest, park, monument, or reservation was created: Provided, That transfer of jurisdiction over lands included in any lease from one department to another shall not affect the validity of the lease, but administration and control of the lease in relation to such lands shall be transferred to the department having jurisdiction of the land.

SEC. 2. That the rules and regulations made in pursuance of this act, and each lease granted thereunder, shall provide for prompt and full development and continuous operation of the water power; for a reasonable rate of rental and the terms of payment of the same; for negotiations for a renewal not more than 10 nor less than 5 years prior to the expiration of the lease; for the valuation of and compensation for the physical properties upon the termination of the lease; for accurate reports to be made to the head of the department having jurisdiction and control, in such form and manner as may be prescribed, covering all items of cost, rates of service, and profits, together with all other information which may be required; for the control of capitalization and bonded indebtedness; and such other conditions and requirements as may be necessary to fully protect the public interest.

SEC. 3. That in case the Government shall itself take over the properties of any of these lessees under the provisions of this act, or shall make or transfer its lease to other parties upon the expiration of the lease, it shall pay or require its new lessee to pay the reasonable valuation of all properties taken over or transferred, which shall include all works, equipment, structures, and other physical property created or acquired, valuable and serviceable in the generation and transmission of electrical power, including the transmission system from generating plant to initial points of distribution, and which are dependent in whole or in part for their usefulness upon the continuance of the lease herein provided for, but shall not include or take into consideration any properties or values whatsoever not specifically mentioned in this section. Such reasonable values shall be determined by mutual agreement between the head of the department having jurisdiction and control and the lessees, and in case they can not agree, then by proceedings instituted in the United States circuit court for the condemnation of such properties. The rule for determining the value shall be the cost of replacing the structures necessary and convenient for the development and transmission of hydroelectric or other water power by other structures capable of developing and transmitting the same amount of marketable power with equal efficiency.

SEC. 4. That any lands included in any proposed lease under the provisions of this act shall, from the date of filing the application for such lease, be reserved from entry, location, or other disposal under the laws of the United States: Provided, That rights of way contemplated by this act or as provided by any laws of the United States may be approved, and prospecting, entering, or patenting of lands under the mineral-land laws may be allowed so far as the same will not impair, prejudice, or destroy the use of the lands for water-power development, generation, and utilization; it being the intent of this section that, in so far as possible, lands valuable for water power and for mining shall be used for both purposes, the water power, however, being the dominant use: Provided further, That upon the rejection of an application or the termination of any lease either by expiration or violation of its terms, unless the lands be again leased within reasonable time, the President of the United States may restore such lands to their prior status.

SEC. 5. That any lease issued under this act shall not be assignable or transferable except upon the written consent of the head of the executive department having jurisdiction of the land.

SEC. 6. That in respect to every lease issued under authority of this act the Federal Government reserves the right to control the charges for service to consumers in the event that the laws and authority of the States or municipalities where the service is being rendered prove inadequate to protect the public interest.

SEC. 7. That all lands of the United States valuable for the development, generation, and utilization of water power are hereby reserved from all entry, and the head of the executive department having jurisdiction and control of such lands shall proceed, as rapidly as may be, to select, designate, and list the same, and shall publish such lists; and after such publication the lands so listed may be opened by the President to location, settlement, entry, and disposition under the appropriate public-land laws only upon the express conditions that all rights to the occupancy and use thereof for the purpose of developing, generating, and utilizing water power are reserved in perpetuity exclusively to the United States, which reserved right shall be expressed in the patent; but the President may, in his discretion, revoke such designation at any time as to any lands not under lease: Provided, That the holder of any lease under this act shall be liable, in the case of public lands not designated hereunder, to any settler thereon for any injury or damage which he may sustain on account of the erection or maintenance of works authorized under this act; and in the case of lands designated hereunder, to any settler, owner, or occupant for the agricultural value of the lands and for any injury or damage to improvements or crops lawfully existing thereon.

SEC. 8. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed as in any way exempting or relieving any lessee from full and complete compliance with all laws and regulations made by or under the authority of any State or Territory to whose jurisdiction it is subject.

SEC. 9. That the regulations authorized by this act, and any alterations and amendments thereof, shall be transmitted to Congress as soon as practicable, and each head of an executive department affected by this act shall annually make a report to Congress of each lease issued or terminated during the year, together with a tabulation of all existing leases, as to name and address of lessee, term of years, location and amount of land occupied, capacity of plant, rate and amount of rental charge, and such other facts as Congress may require.

SEC. 10. That it is the intent of this act to promote the development of water power, as being the only means of conserving this valuable natural resource, and to provide reasonable security for the capital necessarily invested therein, and allow a fair return upon such investment and at the same time safeguard the users of the power so developed from extortion, and to fully protect the public interest.

SEC. 11. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

A bill (S. 6796) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906," approved June 23, 1910, and to repeal said original section.

Be it enacted, etc., that section 4 of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906,' approved June 23, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That all rights acquired under this act shall cease and be determined if the person, company, or corporation acquiring such rights shall, at any time, fail, after receiving reasonable notice thereof, to comply with any of the provisions and requirements of the act or with any of the stipulations and conditions that may be prescribed as aforesaid by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, including the payment into the Treasury of the United States of the charges provided for by section 1 of this act: Provided, That Congress may revoke any rights conferred in pursuance of this act whenever it is necessary in the interest of navigation, and in the event of any such revocation by Congress the United States shall compensate the owners in the manner hereinafter provided: Provided further, That the authority granted under or in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall terminate at the end of a period not to exceed 50 years from the date of the original approval of the project under this act, unless sooner revoked as herein provided: Provided further, That no grant issued in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be assignable or transferable except upon the written consent of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That at any time not more than 10 years prior to the expiration of such grant it may be renewed for another period of not more than 50 years, or the grant may be made or transferred to other parties. In case the grant is not renewed to the original grantees or is revoked as herein provided, the Government shall pay or require its new grantee to pay, as full compensation, the reasonable value of the improvements and appurtenant works and property created or acquired under the authority of this act or in connection therewith, useful and convenient for the generation of hydroelectric or hydromechanical power, and including the transmission system from generating plant to initial points of distribution, but shall not include any other property or value whatsoever; such reasonable value shall be determined by mutual agreement by the Secretary of War and the owners, and in case they can not agree, then by proceedings instituted in the United States circuit court for the condemnation of such properties; the rule for determining the value shall be the cost of replacing the structures necessary for the development and transmission of hydroelectric power by other structures capable of developing and transmitting the same amount of marketable power with equal efficiency, together with the fair value of all other properties herein defined, to which a bonus of not more than 10 per cent may be added: Provided, That in respect to every grant the Federal Government reserves the right to control the charges for service to consumers in the event that the laws and authority of the States or municipalities where such service is being rendered prove inadequate to protect the public interest; Provided also, That this limitation shall not apply to any corporation or individual heretofore authorized by the United States or by any State to construct a dam in or across a navigable waterway, upon which dam expenditures of money have heretofore been made in reliance upon such grant or grants."

SEC. 2. That said original section 4 be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. BURTON. I may say that, according to the present outlook, the development of water power on the public lands assumes greater importance and is a problem of greater magnitude than the development of water power in navigable streams.

While the attempts at water power grabbing are still being pursued, and bills for that purpose find a place on the calendar, these important bills which I have introduced, although having the approval of practically all the officials whose duty it is to administer the laws relating to the public domain and navigable rivers, remain undisposed of. It is impossible for the officers having to do with public lands, under the existing state of the laws, to grant any rights which will permit the development of water powers on the public domain and at the same time protect the public interests, not having at hand weapons of legal authority to safeguard such interests. While waiting for Congress to frame suitable laws, they have been obliged to practically refuse the use of any public land and thus have prevented any water power development whatever.

There are within the public domain probably from ten to fifteen million horsepower, and of this barely 300,000 have been developed.

By a comparison of these figures, even taking the smaller estimate of 10,000,000, the fact that barely 300,000 have been developed emphasizes the importance of early action upon this subject.

The difficulties encountered in making developments upon the public domain are fully set forth on page 38 of the final report of the National Waterways Commission.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed a brief portion of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. BURTON. I will read only those portions which explain the most serious difficulties in the way of any development of this industry.

Because of the lack of legislation properly safeguarding the public interest, the Federal Government has withdrawn from entry many valuable power sites in the public domain, and has been forced, when granting permits for constructions in the forest reserves or upon public lands, to impose conditions so severe that few large developments have been undertaken. Likewise in the case of navigable streams outside the public domain, the lack of a fixed policy has left uncertain the extent and nature of the control which the Government intends to exercise, with the result that few developments have taken place.

As a result of the existing chaotic condition of the laws and the multiplicity of jurisdictions involved, water-power development has been subject to an exceedingly vexatious and unnecessary handicap. Under the present state of the laws, if a company should wish to make a development within any of the national forest reserves, it must first appropriate the water in accordance with the laws and regulations of the State in which the forest reserve is located.

Here the report seeks to enumerate the difficulties in the way. A company or individual—must first appropriate the water in accordance with the laws and regulations of the State in which the forest reserve is located.

It must then submit its plans to the Department of Agriculture for approval. If the plans are approved, upon the payment of a certain fee, a permit will be granted. As power sites are very apt to be located in places remote from the point at which the power may be utilized, it is generally necessary to build transmission lines of considerable length. Should these transmission lines leave the forest reserve and traverse other portions of the public domain, another permit, imposing similar conditions, must be secured from the Interior Department.

That is, so far as the use of forest reserves is concerned, permission must be obtained from the Agricultural Department. If the use of the public lands is involved, permission must be obtained from the Interior Department.

The situation is still further complicated in the event that the lines must cross an unperfected homesteader's entry. Under the present provisions of law neither the Government nor the homesteader can legally grant permission to cross the claim. Furthermore, if the stream on which the development is to be made happens to affect navigation, plans must also be submitted to the War Department for approval, and, finally, the right to construct the dam must be secured by an act of Congress. The permits which the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior are allowed by law to grant are revocable at will, unassignable, unmortgagable, and subject to interference by the location of mining claims and the transfer of lands from one jurisdiction to another. It hardly need be said that this condition is so intolerable as to practically prevent any extensive water-power development within the public domain.

Mr. President, there is no form of enterprise in which future developments point to concentration more than in the case of water power. Transmission lines are now in use which make the power created by one development available over an area of 125,000 square miles. It is desirable also that different sources of water power be ultilized under one management, because oftentimes in one watershed there will be a scarcity of water while in another there will be an abundance, because also of operating economies, and, further, as an insurance against a total breakdown of the service.

Along with this is the tendency to concentration which would inevitably raise the most urgent necessity for governmental control so as to prevent monopoly and safeguard the public interest.

There are two features in the amendment which I have proposed. The first is to the effect that no assignment of this privilege shall be made without the consent of the Secretary of War. This enables a public official to prevent the building up of a monopoly by scrutinizing the object of the assignment. The second provides that if the public interests shall require it the Federal Government shall have the right to control the prices which must be paid by the consumer. This second requirement, as well as the first, is of the utmost importance. We will be failing in our duty to the people if we allow these great natural resources to be possessed by private owners without governmental control of rates.

No one can tell what may happen in the course of years. Within 50 years, perhaps—possibly within a much shorter time—the control of water power may be absolutely necessary for the orderly management and development of the industries of the country. The creation of power by falling water instead of by steam may, as the supply of coal becomes less available or as the price increases, be absolutely essential.

The two bills which I have introduced contain no provisions which involve any undue restraint. They have, as I maintain, as their first object the protection of the interest of the public, but they will also make possible the orderly development of this vast natural resource, offering a field for the investment of millions of dollars of capital. I may say to the Senate that after long hearings before the Waterways Commission, in which Government officials whose duty it is to administer laws involving the question of water power had an important part, the terms of this bill were substantially agreed upon. One subject to which the commission gave a great deal of consideration was the length of the franchise to be granted.

Four different forms of franchises may be mentioned. First, a franchise which is revocable at will. The officials of the Department of Agriculture and of the Interior do not feel that they are authorized to grant any permits for the use of lands in the public domain, except those which are revocable at will. It is plain to see that no extensive development can occur under such circumstances. At the same time censure, which I think has been unwarranted, has been visited upon these officials, because they have felt that under the terms of the law they could go no further than to award revocable permits.

The next form of franchise is that which may be called an indeterminate grant. By some it is termed a possession during good behavior. The difficulty about this kind of a grant is that it is practically perpetual, or revocable according to the disposition of the legislators and administrative officers.

The third form is the perpetual franchise. I do not believe the perpetual franchise would find many advocates in this Chamber. By the dam act of 1910, relating to navigable streams, the term of the grant was limited to not more than 50 years. That is the law now—50 years is the maximum.

The fourth form of franchise, which the Commission recommends, provides a 50-year franchise with the provision that if it is terminated at the end of that time the Government shall pay to the owners of the franchise the fair cost of replacing their plant, including transmission lines, without, of course, making any allowance for the franchise.

This provision, Mr. President, safeguards the public, because it prevents monopoly in perpetuity; and in the next place, because it deals fairly with those who make the developments. There is a very substantial reason from the standpoint of the public why compensation should be offered at the end of the term. If the rights of the grantees are absolutely forfeited at the end of 50 years, they will inevitably charge the public in their rates of service an amount sufficient within 50 years to amortize the plant in addition to paying all the costs of operation and afford a reasonable profit. The dam and the appurtenances and transmission lines are constructions of a permanent nature, and are permanently useful.

It is not at all probable that the Government would in any case pay from its Treasury the value of the dam and appurtenances, but if the franchise is granted to another than those who hold it under the first grant, those who have the second grant would be required to pay for fixtures taken over.

There is a further recommendation in the report of the commission, namely, that at the end of 40 years those who possess it may enter into negotiations with a view to an extension. The object of that provision is to prevent deterioration of the plant by neglect, as will inevitably happen if those who hold the power franchise feel that at the end of 50 years they must surrender it, and that therefore it would not be worth their while to maintain the plant in a high grade of efficiency or to make necessary extensions and repairs.

Now, there is another subject, Mr. President, which has been very much discussed and concerning which I wish to read a brief recommendation from the Secretary of War, made with reference to this very bill:

> The principle which should govern the granting of these permits have been laid down by the National Waterways Commission. Before this bill is passed I think it should be amended so as to give to the Secretary of War authority to exact proper compensation for the right thus created and to apply it to the future improvement of the navigation of the river by other dams.

The theory of that recommendation is as follows: When a river which is to be developed for navigation contains rapids which afford valuable water power, the Government, in its policy of improving navigable streams, should receive compensation for that water power which will aid it in the development of navigation in other reaches of the stream as well as at the rapids themselves. In other words, it is not fair to place a stream which flows through a level country and which can be improved at comparatively small expense on the same footing with another stream which traverses a mountainous country and which must be improved by the construction of numerous locks and dams at enormous expense. Those who enjoy that water power should contribute toward the navigability of the stream as a whole.

In the legislation which has already been enacted, the act of 1910, it is provided that on the order either of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers or that of Congress, whoever has the privilege of erecting a dam in a navigable stream must place there a lock as well. That provision is a very just one, and I confidently predict that it will be enforced more and more in the future.

Mr. President, we have come to the time when we must lay down some comprehensive policy on this subject. In the past numerous franchises have been given for the construction of dams where the sole object was to hold them for speculation.

So far as lies in my power I shall in the future object to the granting of these franchises unless the public interests are safeguarded, unless we act with a proper realization of the importance of this problem. It is important enough at present and it is sure to assume far greater importance in the future.

We ought not to turn over these privileges to any grantee who can transfer them to a company seeking a monopoly of the Nation's water power.

We ought not to make another grant unless it contains a reservation that the Government, through proper agencies, may control the charges to the public. That question may ordinarily be left with safety to the States and local communities; but when they fail to act, or when this development of water power assumes that magnitude which it is sure to assume, it will become essential that the Federal Government, which controls interstate commerce and which more and more must exercise its supervision over these great agencies, shall control the prices at which water is to be furnished to the consumer.

Mr. President, I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. BURTON. I yield; certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Does the Senator from Ohio not think that the bill, if it should pass in its present form, would still leave to the State the power of regulating the rates to be charged by the water company?

Mr. BURTON. I do not; at least it is not so clearly stated in the bill. The power to alter, amend, or repeal has its well-defined limitations; and even if we have reserved that power, we ought expressly and in unequivocal language to enunciate our policy upon this subject.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio says that the power to alter, amend, or repeal has its well-understood limitations. What is the limitation to the power to repeal?

Mr. BURTON. That question has been very much discussed. The power must be exercised within the limitations of the Constitution. You can not absolutely wipe out the value of property under the right to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. BORAH. If we put into this charter the right to amend it, to alter it, or to repeal it, everyone who acquires a right under the charter acquires it with that clause impressed upon his contractual and property rights, and the Government may repeal it at any time it sees fit. True, the Government may be and would be under certain obligations as to the distribution of proceeds, but there would be no question that under this provision the Government could put an end absolutely to the right to use and enjoy this franchise, and could do so without assigning any reason for its action. We may wipe it out of existence entirely. We may terminate all right of the grantees or their assigns to enjoy any rights now granted. I think it a wise provision. I am opposed to granting any corporate right, any corporate charter, or any franchise without reserving this power of altering, amending, and repealing it. I would go further and provide for an absolute forfeiture of all charter or franchise rights when the powers granted were being used in violation of law—a forfeiture clause which would enable private citizens to enforce it in the courts upon showing made that the powers were being so used.

Mr. BURTON. I can not agree with the Senator from Idaho in that assertion.

In the next place, it would leave it to litigation to determine whether this regulation of rates was not an interference with the rights of property. I have no thought that the Government or any State agency would ever exercise this power unreasonably, but under the right to alter, amend, or repeal you throw the door open for litigation.

Another thing. If you mean that, why not say so in your bill and not leave it to the future action of Congress? Who knows what Congress in the future will do? We have our responsibilities to fulfill now and we ought not to leave it to the uncertain action of the future.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, no one knows what Congress in the future will do; but it is to be presumed that we shall transmit some of our wisdom to posterity and that they will act quite as wisely as we do. There can be no doubt, however, as a legal proposition, of our power to act under this clause of the bill. It has been decided very often, and I did not suppose it was open to controversy.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio if he has any further amendments that he desires to offer to this bill?

Mr. BURTON. I have no others. As I have said, I do not think these two go as far as we should; but, in view of our past policy, I do not feel like offering other amendments. I think there should be attached to this bill the provision contained in Senate bill 6796 for an adjustment between the grantee or the licensee and the Government at the end of 50 years. I think the Senator from Alabama will agree with me that that would be favorable, rather than unfavorable, to the grantee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In order that all the questions arising on this bill may be discussed at the same time, I should like to now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is one amendment pending.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent to submit the amendment and to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will state the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add after section 1 a new section, as follows:

> The said power company, its successors, and assigns shall pay to the United States 1 per cent of the net profits derived from light, heat, power, or other proceeds of said work, to be ascertained and collected by the Secretary of War.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Would the Senator from Washington be willing to modify his amendment so that these proceeds as paid shall be paid to the treasury of the State in which the power site is located? I am quite in favor of regulation and control, but I want the States to have the benefit of the natural resources of the State. I do not now express any opinion as to the power of the National Government to regulate rates.

Mr. POINDEXTER. At the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho, I will modify the amendment by adding to it the following words:

And one-half of all such collections made by the Secretary of War shall be paid by him into the treasury of the State of Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that the amendment is not before the Senate, but has been merely read for information.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not intend to consume very much of the time of the Senate in the discussion of this measure. I shall endeavor to present to the Senate the common-sense, practical view of it, the business view of it.

In 1872 the Government undertook the improvement of the Coosa River. During the 40 years that have expired since that time $1,600,000 have been appropriated, or $48,000 per annum. The appropriations for this river have gone off of the river and harbor bills on two separate occasions at the instance of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], because he said that the commerce of the river would not justify the expenditure.

On every occasion when he has interposed an objection to the improvement of this river in the ordinary way, he has suggested: "You people down in Alabama ought to help yourselves in the improvement of this river; you ought to make some arrangement by which power on this river could be developed in connection with its navigation; when you do that and come to Congress, I stand ready to give you all the aid I can."

Three years ago, Mr. President, the river and harbor bill contained an item directing a survey of this river along the lines suggested by the Senator from Ohio; that is, that a complete survey should be made looking jointly to the navigation and development of the power on the river. That survey has been made; it is an exhaustive one. The engineers recommend cooperation between the Government and the State or the private individuals, as the case may be, in the development of power and navigation. That report fixed one of the locks and dams to be constructed on that river with a view to its navigation at this identical point, known as Lock 18. When the survey had been submitted, the Government, through its authorized officials, invited cooperation, invited corporations or individuals to appear before its officer in Montgomery and submit propositions by which this power might be developed jointly with the navigation of the river.

Mr. President, this dam is located on a stretch of that river 126 miles long, entirely nonnavigable; and if we are to proceed to the improvement of that river navigation as we have proceeded, according to the appropriations made it will require something over 400 years to improve it in order that you may carry even a raft over it.

Mr. President, the State of Alabama chartered what is known as the Alabama Power Co. and authorized the construction of this dam. The State of Alabama reserved the right to regulate this corporation. The State of Alabama, through its public-service commission, is regulating all matters of this sort wherever occasion requires; and we blieve, Mr. President, that the State of Alabama is the only authority that can regulate matters of this sort.

What do these companies propose to do? They propose to construct this dam at their own expense, the estimate being $1,622,000—that is the Government engineers' estimate—and all they ask for this initial outlay, this vast sum, a sum greater, Mr. President, than the Government of the United States has expended on that river in 40 years—they propose in one year or in 18 months to expend this amount, construct this dam, and all they ask is to be permitted to use the surplus water, if there is any water there beyond the uses of navigation. They say, "Let us have that, because we have expended money enough to be equal to $6.50 a horsepower for every horsepower created every year as long as the water runs." That is the simple proposition here. What right has the Government——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator inform the Senate about how many horsepower they contemplate developing?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Ten thousand.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand the Senator to say that the value is estimated at $6.50 per horsepower per year?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I said that the cost of this dam at 4 per cent per annum is equal to a charge of $6.50 on every horsepower created. That is what I said.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What does the Senator estimate as the commercial value of the horsepower developed?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, Mr. President, that would depend largely upon where this power was situated.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I mean in this particular case.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not an expert in matters of that kind, but I should like to have the Senate bear in mind——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator, of course, is familiar with the cost of developing power by other means in this locality—the cost of coal—and undoubtedly the company to whom this franchise would be granted have estimated the value of the horsepower. I should like very much, in the consideration of this bill, if the Senator, either now or before a vote is taken on it, would give us at least approximately an estimate of the value per horsepower of the power to be developed there.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senate bear in mind the fact that this dam is located in the midst of the cheapest coal fields in the United States, perhaps in the world. Not only that, but gas is being produced at coke ovens in Birmingham at a cost of 4 cents a cubic foot, and all these elements of heat and power of course come directly in contact and competition with the power created at this dam. I do not know definitely what is the cost of producing a horsepower with coal, and nobody else can tell, because the conditions vary. It depends upon the cost of the coal; it depends upon the cost of transportation; it depends upon the quality of the coal; it depends upon the machinery used for burning the coal; but all that cuts no figure here.

We have heard, Mr. President, a great deal said in this discussion and in other discussions about the conservation of the natural resources of the country. Here is the greatest conservator of resources that has even been presented to the Senate. Why? In the first place, it provides for navigation; in the second place, it conserves the water and creates power; in the third place, it conserves the forests. Why, Mr. President, if you would burn wood enough in this community to create 10,000 horsepower a day, you would burn up the whole country around; it would go up in smoke, and that would be the end of it. It conserves the coal; it supplants coal, a commodity which is gradually increasing in price and becoming more scarce. Not only that, Mr. President, but, under the plan proposed here and the arrangement made, it conserves the soil. The purpose of this company is to manufacture; and every horsepower they are to create will be used for the purpose, and that alone, of manufacturing an indispensable ingredient in fertilizing the lands of this country. This is to be a nitrogen plant to manufacture nitrogen. Without it you can not manufacture a high-grade fertilizer, and without fertilizers you can not sustain the crops and you can not keep up the yield.

I venture the assertion, Mr. President, that if we were to discontinue the use of fertilizers and nitrogen in our cotton production there would be a falling off of one-half the entire crop; they are indispensable. The time is very near when the grain fields of this country must be liberally fertilized if we are going to produce sufficient food in this country for our rapidly increasing population.

Where does this nitrogen, so necessary to cotton production, come from? It is imported from Chile. The Chilean Government has imposed an export tax of $11.50 on each ton, and the Chilean Government is receiving 60 per cent of its entire revenue from this source; and we are told the supply is rapidly being exhausted. Where are you going to get your supply?

Not only do we conserve timber and coal and water and soil, but we go further; we conserve the air, the atmosphere from which this nitrogen is taken by a process known and patented and used in all the old countries of the world. They are all manufacturing this stuff necessarily.

A few years ago a company went down on the Tennessee River and sought an opportunity to construct a dam to maintain a nitrogen plant there and cooperate with the Government in connection with navigation. Congress said, "No; we will wait. We have not quite reached the time when we can have some uniform plan by which our rivers can be improved and our power developed." What was the result? They said, "We will pull up." And they did pull up and went over to Canada, across the river at Niagara, where they established their plant. They are manufacturing this product there now, and we are paying $4 a ton on it to go in our soil down in Alabama.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Four dollars a ton freight.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I mean, of course, that the freight is $4 a ton. The cost of this product in Chile is about $46, with freight added, so that, if it gets much higher, it will be prohibitive; and what we want to do is to manufacture it at home. We have all the power necessary, and, God knows, we have all the air necessary, and I have sometimes thought that if we would turn a little of the wind that I have observed in this Chamber into that industry we would have an inexhaustible supply out of which we could make this product. [Laughter.]

I am just about through. I want to read, however, very briefly from a message sent to the Senate by the President of the United States. This message is on conservation of national resources, and I want briefly to read what the President says bearing directly upon this question. After discussing the subject, he says:

> The opinion is held that the transfer of sovereignty from the Federal Government to the Territorial governments as they become States included the water power in the rivers except so far as to the ownership of riparian proprietors.

Then he adds:

> I do not think it necessary to go into a discussion of this somewhat mooted question of law. It seems to me sufficient to say that the man who owns and controls the land along the stream from which the power is to be converted and transmitted owns land which is indispensable to the conversion and use of that power.

Further down he says—and then I am through with this discussion—

> In considering the conservation of the natural resources of the country, the feature that transcends all others, including woods, waters, minerals, is the soil of the country. It is incumbent upon the Government to foster by all available means the resources of the country that produce the food of the people. To this end the conservation of the soils of the country should be cared for with all means at the Government's disposal.

That is exactly what we are proposing to do, Mr. President, and that is all we are proposing to do. We deny absolutely that the Government of the United States has any interest in or control over the navigable waters of Alabama, except for the purposes of navigation. The Government has expended no money there to create power. This company is the riparian owner. Who else can go down there and take possession of their property and convert it to their own use? It is an attempt, Mr. President, on the part of Congress to invade a sovereign State by some sort of hook or crook or process and confiscate the property of the citizen.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator from Alabama deny the absolute right of the Federal Government, whenever its permission or refusal determines whether or not a privilege shall be exercised, to impose such conditions as it pleases in the public interest?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I absolutely deny that, except as to navigation.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama another question. Did he vote for the Panama Canal bill that passed here a few days ago?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not.

Mr. BURTON. I am very glad to hear the Senator from Alabama give a negative answer in reply to that question. There is a provision in that bill to the effect that boats of American registry engaged in foreign trade may pass through the canal without payment of tolls upon conditions imposed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, Mr. President, that has nothing to do with this question.

Mr. BURTON. The owners must be ready to turn over their boats to the Government in case of war or emergency. That is one illustration of the conditions the Government may attach.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That has nothing on earth to do with this question, and no application to it at all.

Mr. BURTON. It is exactly parallel to this question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is navigation on the sea, and there is no riparian owner there, so far as I know.

Mr. BURTON. But we must determine the powers of the Federal Government by general principles. There was a case, within a very few days, in which permission was coupled with a condition, absolutely asserting the right of the Federal Government to attach to a right granted or permission given any condition it pleases.

Mr. BAILEY. The Federal Government owns the Panama Canal absolutely.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That argument does not apply here at all. The question here is whether or not the Government of the United States has the right and the power to go down into Alabama, confiscate the property of her citizens, and apply it to its own use, because the property along these rivers, according to all the decisions of the courts, according to the message of the President, who himself is a great judge, belongs to the riparian owner; and nobody, neither the Government nor the States nor anyone else, can deprive him of it without his consent, except, Mr. President, for the purpose of navigation.

Mr. BURTON. To come to something fundamental, the Senator from Alabama concedes that the permission of the Federal Government is necessary in order to enable this dam to be built; otherwise, why are they here?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, Mr. President, on a navigable river you can not construct a dam that interferes with navigation, and the Government must see to it that the navigation is not interfered with. This bill provides that that shall be done; that this dam shall be constructed under the direction and supervision of Government engineers in aid of navigation, not of power.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, does not the Federal Government, in giving the right to construct dams, in every case require that fishways be inserted in the dam? What do fishways have to do with navigation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know that that is done. I know that there are 10 dams on the Black Warrior River, and there are no fishways there. It ought to be done, but it has nothing to do with navigation; it has something to do with the preservation of a food supply.

Mr. BURTON. This provision relates to something very much more important than the preservation of fish for a food supply; it relates to the protection of the people against monopoly and exorbitant charges.

I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama another question. Is it not true that, in case we allow a bridge to be built across a navigable stream, it is made a condition that troops and munitions of war of the United States may pass thereon under certain conditions? Is it not also made a condition in many bridge bills that other railway companies, in case it is a railway bridge, may cross it on terms fixed by the Federal Government?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, Mr. President, that has no application here. The Senator has got out on the dry land, and is talking about railroad bridges.

Mr. BURTON. I maintain that it is exactly applicable.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The railroad bridge must be built so as not to injure navigation.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Although those conditions are imposed as to the free transit of troops and other matters in which the Government is interested, does the Senator from Ohio think the Government has the right to impose that condition?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. BACON. To require it?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. BACON. I should like the Senator to point out where the authority for any such power is to be found.

Mr. BURTON. In that broad, general authority which exists whenever a right is granted to attach conditions thereto.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator mean to say unlimited conditions?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; unlimited conditions.

Mr. BAILEY. Not in derogation of the right of other people or the rights of the State.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Ohio is right only to this extent: The Government has a right to attach a condition which will not interfere with the right of the exercise of a power, but no other condition. In other words, when it comes to the obstruction of a navigable stream the Government has the right to attach a condition, and that is a matter of power in the Government, not simply a matter of convenience or agreement. The Government has an arbitrary right to attach as a condition anything which is necessary in order that the great purpose of the exercise of the power shall not be defeated and that the navigation shall not be interfered with. It may do so by consent; it may do so by agreement; but the Government has no power to attach any condition, except such condition as is necessary for the proper preservation of the exercise of that power with such appliances as it adopts for the execution of the power.

Mr. BURTON. With the greatest respect to the Senator from Georgia, to whom I always listen with the utmost interest, I differ with him entirely.

But it is not necessary to go so far as he enunciates. This is but an incident and an assertion of the manner in which this privilege may be exercised. I happen to have before me a decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois in a case in which the condition was attached for the payment of a mileage tax of $500 per mile in a grant by a city for the construction of a State railway. After accepting the ordinance, the grantee attempted to repudiate the condition on the ground that it was one the municipality had no power to impose. The court held that the condition was valid, saying:

Even though it might be held that the condition upon which the permit or license was granted to the defendant railway company was ultra vires, the city not having the power to impose it, nevertheless, the ordinance having been accepted by the company with the condition attached, agreeing thereby to perform it, it became a valid contract between it and the city, the validity of which the defendant is now estopped to deny.

I do not recall the volume, but there is a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, rendered by Justice White before he was promoted to the position of Chief Justice.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me right there? Suppose a party would come to Congress and ask authority to construct a toll bridge across a navigable stream. The only authority which Congress has is to require that that toll bridge shall be so constructed as not to interfere with navigation, and it is the judge of what will or will not interfere with navigation. But upon the application of a citizen for authority to construct a toll bridge across a stream, does the Senator think the Government would have the constitutional authority to say, "Yes; you can do it, but you must pay half the tolls to the Government?"

Mr. BURTON. It would have that power. I must most fundamentally differ with the Senator as to the condition of granting consent. Of course it is not conceivable that the right would be exercised in such a case as that the Senator mentions. I was about to refer to the decision of Justice White. Congress passed a bill for the payment of a certain claim of the State of Maryland against the Federal Government, and attached to that bill a condition that no fee be paid to any attorney for collecting it. The attorney, who had rendered very valuable service, who had secured the payment of the claim, made application to the auditor of the State of Maryland for his fee, notwithstanding the inhibition, on the ground that Congress had no right to impose it. The case came here to the Supreme Court, and it was held that whether that were a condition in accordance with the general rights relating to the subject, the bill having passed on that condition, it was nevertheless binding, and no fee could be collected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have said about all I care to say on this subject.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Before the Senator sits down I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I merely wish to read one short extract from the conservation message of the President. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Ohio to it.

Mr. BURTON. I beg pardon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am going to read an extract from the President's conservation message, sent to Congress, and I wish the Senator to hear it:

It is exceedingly difficult to frame a statute to retain Government control over a property to be developed by private capital in such manner as to secure the governmental purpose and at the same time not frighten away the investment of the necessary capital.

Now, hear:

Hence it may be necessary by laws that are really only experimental to determine from their practical operation what is the best method of securing the result aimed at.

Now, Mr. President, that is all I care to say. I will answer the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator how far this location is from the city of Birmingham and what is the status of the country as to the market for the power.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is absolutely no demand for this power except for the purpose I have stated, the matter of the manufacture of nitrogen, and the American Dynamite Co. has a contract with the Alabama Power Co. to take every horsepower it produces for 25 years for that purpose. They are 30 miles from Birmingham.

I should like to have a vote on the amendment now, if agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am heartily in accord with the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. I would prefer that he would make a modification of the amendment providing that the power of the Federal Government to regulate the rates should only be exercised in case the State government failed to exercise it.

Mr. BAILEY. Both governments could not possess the power.

Mr. BURTON. I drew the amendment in a different form at first, providing for Federal control in case power was not adequately exercised by the State or municipality, but it seems to me the form in which it was introduced was more general and better. I drew the amendment in this form:

In the event that the laws and authorities of the State or municipalities where such service is rendered prove inadequate to protect the public interest.

So far as I am concerned I shall be just as willing that the latter amendment be adopted. I stated in my remarks that it was presumed that in the first instance the State would control, but when they failed to act or when this problem assumes the greater magnitude which makes the transmission of power a matter of interest to commerce, the Federal Government might intervene.

Mr. BAILEY. Would the Senator permit me to ask him a question before he sits down?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I was curious to know where he found an authority for the doctrine that a State possesses a power, but if it failed to wisely exercise that power it then passes to the Federal Government. I remember a speech delivered at the city of Pittsburgh several years ago which announced a doctrine of that kind, which rather startled the country. I am not surprised that the Senator in front of me is approving it, but I am rather surprised that the Senator from Ohio is now approving that doctrine.

Mr. BURTON. In the first place, the right to control would be reserved under this amendment as a condition of the grant, and the Federal Government might refrain from exercising that power at its option until a case arose when in the judgment of its duly constituted authorities the right should be exercised.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 25034) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid over until the measure now before the Senate is disposed of, and then I shall ask the Senate to take up the cotton bill for consideration.

Mr. PENROSE. Before unanimous consent is given, I should like to have, and I think the Senate would like to have, some information as to how long the present measure will take. A number of Senators have expected the cotton bill to come up this morning about this hour.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think it will take an hour.

Mr. SIMMONS. Probably it will not take more than 15 or 20 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside until the measure now before the Senate is disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. Before that is done, I think we ought to have some agreement as to a vote on this bill.

Mr. PENROSE. If we could have an agreement to vote on it at 12.30, I would not object.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

Mr. LODGE. Then I object to temporarily laying aside the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts objects. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I was under the impression that this being a special order after we entered upon the consideration of this bill we should proceed with it until disposed of, just as we entered upon the consideration, as a special order, of the Post Office appropriation bill. I do not think the demand for the regular order can displace the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that on that point neither the rules of the Senate nor the precedents are very clear, and yet the Chair is clearly of opinion that the unfinished business does displace a special order, and will so rule.

Mr. BAILEY. It is probably true that if it were made a special order by a vote of the Senate then the unfinished business would displace it, but not in the case of a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BACON. No, Mr. President, the rule is exactly the reverse of that. It is Rule X, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is Rule X.

Mr. BACON. It expressly provides for the contrary.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the Senator for the correction. I guarded myself by saying that it was probably true. When the Senate gives its consent unanimously to take up a measure and proceed with it I feel very sure that there the matter must be disposed of before it could be displaced in this way.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. The anxiety of the Senator from Massachusetts to dispose of the fur-seal matter is a perfectly natural and proper one, but it is not greater than this matter which relates almost entirely to Alabama and whose Senators have been waiting here for days to try and dispose of it.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to call attention to the fact that in regard to the Coosa River bill we are not acting under a unanimous-consent agreement, but under a special order.

Mr. BAILEY. A special order made by unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, whether made by unanimous consent or agreed to by a two-thirds vote, it remains a special order.

Mr. BAILEY. Everything is a special order that is made by unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. One moment, if I may be allowed to finish my sentence. Whether it is a unanimous-consent agreement or a special order I think there is a distinction between them; but whether one or the other, the only agreement made was that it should be taken up immediately on the disposition of the Post Office appropriation bill. There was no agreement that it should be proceeded with through the parliamentary stages to a final disposition. There is not a word about it in the special order. The agreement was to take it up, and that has been done.

I have not desired to throw the slightest obstacle in the way of the disposition of the Coosa River bill, but I do think at this stage of the session, if we can not reach a reasonable agreement as to time, it is not quite fair, with all the great matters—appropriation bills and so on—pressing, to make an agreement to go on with all this discussion of the conservation of natural resources on this bill, which may be protracted indefinitely. I venture to think that the carrying out of the convention with three other countries in which we are now in default in our payments is a matter quite as important as the improvement of any river in the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts can provoke no controversy with me with that statement. I think the most important thing with nations as well as with individuals is to meet their engagements. But the Senator, I think, overestimates the debate which this measure will provoke. I believe the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] desires to be heard, but I am sure he does not desire to be heard to any such length as will interfere with the disposition of the bill. If he will give us the opportunity I think we can agree on a reasonable time.

Mr. LODGE. If an agreement can be made on a reasonable time, I shall not interpose the slightest objection, but I want some end to the debate. If a vote can be taken at 1 o'clock——

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the pending matter shall be taken at 1 o'clock.

Mr. PENROSE. Or earlier if possible.

Mr. BAILEY. Not later than 1 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. I assume that the debate will not last more than half an hour.

Mr. LODGE. I would make it not later than 1 o'clock. That is a fair request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the special order be continued and that a vote be taken upon the bill not later than 1 o'clock this afternoon. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

Mr. BAILEY. What time would the Senator consent to?

Mr. POINDEXTER. So far as my consent is necessary I will consent to proceeding now with the consideration of the bill and to set a future time, but I will not consent to a limitation of the discussion to a brief period because it is a question of national importance. It does not simply involve the Coosa River. It involves every other similar situation in the United States, most of them being in the western country, for the reason that every precedent that is established is set up as a rule of action in every subsequent bill that comes up in Congress. For that reason it ought to be thoroughly discussed and the principles involved in it ought to be thoroughly understood by the Senate before it acts.

Mr. BAILEY. I can understand how the Senator would want to present his views fully, and I assume that what the Senator desires is an opportunity to present his views. I understand that there is no disposition to discuss it by other Senators. I want the Senator to have such time as he thinks necessary. Surely, I have no desire to abridge his freedom of speech or his opportunity to debate the matter.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if he can conclude the presentation of his argument within an hour, and I would ask if anyone else would want to speak?

Mr. MASSEY. I should like to have about 10 minutes, not more than that, on the Coosa River bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. If we can not fix an hour I shall demand the regular order, and it does not seem to be possible for us to do so.

Mr. NEWLANDS. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, in reply to the statement of the Senator from Texas, I will state that it is my desire to address the Senate for about 10 minutes upon this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. And the other Senator from Nevada wants about that time.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Idaho desires some time.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to delay the bill unless some amendments are put on, and if they are put on there will not be any chance of passing it at this session.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand how the Senator feels about the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and, of course, if that should be adopted, I would understand that he would want to discuss it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to say that if the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is adopted I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill as a special order.

Mr. BAILEY. I am going to make one more effort. I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the bill be taken not later than 1.30 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill be continued, and that a vote be taken upon it not later than 1 o'clock and 30 minutes this afternoon. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington objects.

Mr. PENROSE and Mr. LODGE. The regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives in which it originated the bill (H. R. 18642) to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, with his objection thereto, the House has proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution and reconsidered the same, and had passed the bill by a two-thirds vote the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 25034) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, ordinarily there might have been an effort made to get the Republicans of the Senate together upon a cotton bill, but this very long session has elapsed, and we are on the point of adjournment; and there was no indication of any purpose on the part of the Members of the House to take up the cotton schedule at the present session until this bill came to the Senate a few days ago. It is obviously impossible for the majority members of the Finance Committee, with the prospect of an adjournment of Congress, it is hoped, at some period next week, to go into this very complicated schedule. The Tariff Board, it is true, has reported upon the cotton schedule, and an effort similar to that which was made on the wool schedule would have been made in this instance to present a bill to the Senate showing reductions in some of the items, and most of them perhaps, of the cotton schedule, but it is felt to be unreasonable to expect the Republican members of the committee to take such action at this time. Had the House given any intention early in the session of a purpose to bring up cotton legislation we would have been in better shape to take the action to which I have referred.

Under the circumstances, the majority members of the committee have no bill to present to the Senate. I want to be careful in saying that I represent but a majority of the Republican members of the Finance Committee in making this statement; but we are ready to act upon the bill as it comes from the House.

In this connection I have a brief statement upon the hosiery paragraph, which I will not detain the Senate by reading, but which I will ask to have printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

RELATING TO HOSIERY.

HOW EUROPEAN MANUFACTURERS DESTROY THE INTENT OF OUR TARIFF LAWS.

The attention of the Senate is requested to a few remarks I wish to make on a phase of the tariff question of vital importance to wage earners and manufacturers, more important, possibly, to wage earners, as the facts I desire to present are an ever present menace to the high wages they receive under the Republican policy of adequate protection to American labor and industry.

At all times, especially following a change in our tariff laws, whereby rates of duty are increased, foreign manufacturers make a generally successful effort to reduce the cost of merchandise they export to this country. This, coupled with changes made in the administration of the law by our customs officials, reduces the rate of protection to a point where American manufacturers find it very difficult to compete and pay the high wages demanded by wage earners in America, thus destroying the intent of Congress.

Interesting facts connected with the hosiery trade have been brought to my attention recently, proving conclusively by official records that American manufacturers of hosiery have never received the rate of protection written in the Payne law.

It should be explained that the class of hose the foreign value of which is $1 or less per dozen pairs, retailing at 25 cents per pair, is the chief competitive class, and German manufacturers of hosiery have reduced the value of this class sufficiently to eliminate the advance in duty of 20 cents per dozen pairs written in the Payne law, thus destroying the intent of Congress.

From 1898 to August, 1909, the class of hose valued at $1 or less per dozen pairs, with few exceptions, entered the American market, duty paid, at $1.59 per dozen pairs, but immediately following the passage of the Payne law, foreign manufacturers of hosiery began a systematic reduction in the value of this class of hose, until in May, 1912, there were imported thousands of dozens at $1.56 per dozen pairs, duty paid, 3 cents per dozen pairs less than they were imported for at any time during the operation of the Dingley law, thus destroying the intent of Congress.

If foreign manufacturers can continue to land this grade of hosiery in this country, duty paid, at $1.56 per dozen pairs, hosiery mills must close or reduce wages, and should the Underwood or Hill cotton-tariff bill become the law, the result, as shown by the figures following, would insure immediate disaster to the hosiery trade in America.

	Rate of duty.	Foreign value per dozen.	Duty.	Landing value, duty paid.
	Per ct.
Underwood bill	40	$0.75	$0.30	$1.05
Hill bill	50	.75	.375	1.125

After making careful estimates American manufacturers of hosiery claim that it costs them $1.769 to manufacture one dozen pairs of this grade of hose, and are willing to give Members of Congress every opportunity to investigate this claim.

During the operation of the Payne law some hose of this class have been imported at a value above $1.56 per dozen pairs but none at $1.79, the value at which they should be imported, duty paid, to give American manufacturers of hosiery the advance in duty of 20 cents per dozen pairs, as intended by Congress in passing the Payne law. In the debate on the Underwood and Hill cotton-tariff bill in the House of Representatives on August 2, 1912, Hon. SERENO E. PAYNE strongly defended the rates of duty on hosiery incorporated in the Payne tariff law and insisted that the report of the Tariff Board on the cotton schedule submitted no facts justifying a change in hosiery rates of duty.

It can be said without fear of contradiction that Mr. PAYNE during the revision of the Dingley law made a thorough investigation of hosiery costs both here and abroad.

That German manufacturers of hosiery are closely watching tariff legislation in this country confidently expecting a reduction in rates of duty which will allow them to control our market is indicated by the following quotation from the leading trade paper in Chemnitz:

[From the Deutsche Wirker Zeitung, May 23, 1912.]

"England also operated at a some more lively rate in the local market and in America and placed nice orders in fine-gauge qualities. This was taken as proof that America, if fashion so wills, is not entirely independent of the Saxon production. Optimists went so far that America—that is, the United States—would eventually have to buy Saxon staple articles, as the new election in all probability promises to bring about a change in the tariff in our favor."

Another quotation from the same German paper, of May 16, 1912, shows the German hosiery manufacturers fear competition from Japan fully as much as American manufacturers do:

"In Japan may arise a rather important competitor to our stocking industry. At the local board of commerce was shown a collection of Japanese manufacture marked with prices which would not cover the cost of production if they had to be made here. We do not consider them equal to our product. The material is inferior, but a low price is for certain countries often the only factor, and therefore it is to be feared that the large business we are doing at present in countries like Turkey in Asia and Egypt, etc., can be torn from our hands."

From time to time, as the facts reach me, I shall call the attention of the Senate to similar cases in connection with other industries where the intent of Congress has been destroyed.

Being in possession of these facts, hosiery workers and manufacturers have just reason to be alarmed at a further reduction in the rates of duty on hosiery and may well hesitate before casting their votes in the coming election in favor of a party pledged to revise the cotton schedule downward on a "tariff-for-revenue-only" basis.

Cost of producing one dozen pairs of fashioned hose retailing at 25 cents, 35 cents, and 50 cents per pair.

[These figures have been prepared under the supervision of the Hosiery Manufacturers' legislative committee, C. H. Brown, chairman.]

The following article appeared in the Washington Star on July 29:

"GERMANY FOR HIGH TARIFF—MERCHANTS INSIST ON PROTECTIVE SCHEDULES, SAYS HERR SYDOW.

[Foreign correspondence of the Star.]

"BERLIN, July 15, 1912.

"Herr Sydow, the Prussian minister of commerce, stated in his speech at Crofeld that German merchants and manufacturers insist upon the maintenance of a high protective tariff as the sheet anchor of German trade.

"In the course of a trip through the industrial regions the minister declared that it had been borne in upon him from all sides that the German business world sees its salvation in 'the highest possible tariffs on the goods of foreign competitors and the most liberal terms for the export of German goods.'"

While Germany is agitating the question of a higher tariff at home her manufacturers boldly attempt to influence tariff legislation in other countries, especially in America, and in this connection, I think, letters in my possession should be printed in the RECORD, showing, as they do, that German manufacturers have sent to this country a large amount of money with explicit directions as to how it should be used to obtain a revision of our tariff downward, even stating the rate of duty on bronze powders, which would give them control of this market.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania what bills the majority of the Republicans of the Finance Committee are ready to present to Congress for immediate action?

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator refer to tariff legislation?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; to tariff legislation.

Mr. PENROSE. There is no tariff legislation now pending before the Finance Committee. No legislation of that character can originate in the Senate. All that we can do is to await the action of the House of Representatives.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator well knows the Republican Party now is divided into two factions, the stand-pat and the progressive, and that the legislation which has been produced as the result of the joint efforts of the Democrats and the Progressive Republicans has been vetoed by the President.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there is so much confusion in the Chamber that we are unable to hear anything that the Senator is saying.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please refrain from audible conversation in the Chamber and take their seats.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was stating, when interrupted, that the Senator from Pennsylvania is aware of the fact that the dominant party is divided into two factions, the stand-pat and the progressive; that the legislation which has been presented by the Democratic Party regarding the tariff has been defeated by the action of this body; and that the legislation which has been the result of the joint efforts of the Democrats and the Progressive Republicans has been vetoed by the President. He is also aware of the fact that the President has indicated a willingness to present to Congress certain bills which have been framed or are to be framed pursuant to the findings of fact of the Tariff Board, and that it is possible to have those bills enacted into law.

I wish to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Finance Committee, what bills making a revision of the tariff the stand-pat element of the Republican Party is willing to present for immediate action by Congress, so that they can receive the approval of the President, with a view to giving the people of the United States some measure of reduction in excessive tariff duties, which they have been demanding?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the majority of the Republican members of the Finance Committee have presented two bills to the Senate. One is the sugar schedule, embodying their ideas of what would be a safe reduction and a modification of the schedule, and at the same time afford an adequate protection to the growing industry, particularly of beet-sugar raising in the United States. It appears to be impossible to get the House of Representatives even to consider the Senate amendments on the sugar schedule.

The Republican Members, or a majority of them, presented a wool bill to the Senate, which failed of passage owing to well-known conditions existing in this body. That bill embodied the views of the majority of the Republican Members on the committee and of the Senate on the wool schedule, indicating a very substantial reduction in the rates of that schedule, and being about as far as the Republicans are willing to go at this time. The measure was one which not only afforded very substantial reductions, but at the same time seemed to the committee to give adequate protection from the Republican point of view to the industries affected.

The Senate can not originate tariff legislation. We must await the action of the House. Five or six months elapsed without any indication at the other end of the Capitol that it was contemplated bringing up the cotton schedule, and all we could do has been to wait. I do not want to criticize the other body, and I do not criticize it at this time. I am simply stating a fact.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Am I to understand then, Mr. President, that the dominant portion of the Republican Party is ready to present only two bills—the sugar bill and the wool bill?

Mr. PENROSE. I have already stated, Mr. President, the position——

Mr. NEWLANDS. How about the steel bill?

Mr. PENROSE. The position of the majority, as I understand it, of the Republican members of the Senate and of the President is that it is only incumbent on us to take up tariff revision where the Tariff Board has made a report. That report has been made in the case of the wool schedule and the cotton schedule.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask regarding the steel schedule. Has any bill been prepared?

Mr. PENROSE. No bill has been prepared on the steel schedule. That was a schedule where admittedly very great reductions were made in the Payne bill. The schedule was not in any way taken up by the Tariff Board. No data, such as the trend of thought indicates should be had before revision is made, was available on the metal schedule, and the Senator well knows that no effort was made to present a bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask whether the dominant faction of the Republican Party is ready to present a bill on the cotton schedule?

Mr. PENROSE. I have already explained to the Senator that we are not ready to present a bill on the cotton schedule; neither is it reasonable to expect us to present a bill on the cotton schedule, as every Senator knows.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The findings of the Tariff Board have been made with reference to that.

Mr. PENROSE. They have been made, and five months elapsed without any indication being given on the part of the Members of the House of Representatives that it was their intention to send a cotton bill to the Senate. It is well known, Mr. President, to every Senator and to every Member of the House that after the appropriation bills are passed there will not be a quorum held in Washington in either branch of Congress.

Mr. NEWLANDS. My only purpose is to inquire what tariff reduction is within immediate reach by some understanding between the Senate and the House and the President, all of whom profess to be for a reduction, but all of whom as yet have been unable to agree as to the precise reduction that should be made.

I understand the Senator to say that the Republican Party is prepared to act upon two schedules—the sugar schedule and the wool schedule. I ask the Senator what is the average reduction in existing conditions made by the wool schedule, both on the raw wool and on the manufactured material?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I am unwilling to go into a discussion with the Senator from Nevada as to the wool bill; it is not before the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Can the Senator answer regarding the sugar schedule?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will cease interrogating the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I shall not take up the time of the Senate in the discussion of this matter. Does the Senator from Kansas wish to make an inquiry?

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator made an inquiry about the sugar bill. I desire to say that the House refuses to accept the sugar bill as passed by the Senate, and there seems to be no hope of getting it passed. As the Senator from Nevada knows, it makes very material reduction; it takes out of the present law features that have been complained of very bitterly by the Democratic Party as well as by a number of the Republicans, and I think it would be well, if the Senator will permit me to suggest it, if we are to have legislation that will meet the Executive approval to reduce duties, any energy the Senator from Nevada can exercise on his friends in the House of Representatives to get them to pass the sugar bill will bring about a result which he desires very much, and which I think would be of great benefit to the country and in exact harmony with the Democratic Party's declaration in their platform as well as in the letter of acceptance of their candidate, Mr. Wilson.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, it is not my intention to enter into any discussion of this matter at the present time. I simply wished to ascertain what bills the dominant faction of the Republican Party with which the President is identified is willing to present with a view to their immediate passage. It seems to me in view of the fact that the people of the United States demand a reduction of duties, in view of the fact that the House of Representatives desires a reduction of duties, the fact that the Senate of the United States desires a reduction of duties, the fact that the President of the United States desires a reduction of duties, it would be a signal failure of representative government if we fail to secure some reduction in duties at this session of Congress.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will just permit me to complete my sentence. There is a method of bringing the Senate and the House into agreement where they disagree through conferees appointed by both Houses. There is as yet no method provided by law or by custom for bringing the President, the House, and the Senate into agreement where they disagree with reference to an important matter of legislation. It seems to me it is highly desirable that some machinery should be provided and the very method which we have adopted with reference to bringing the House and the Senate into agreement could be availed of with a view to bringing the President into agreement with both Houses. That would be a committee of conference of which three should be appointed by the Senate and three by the House with a view to conferring with the President upon the important subject of bringing these three important bodies, charged with responsibility, in agreement, when they all agree that some relief should be immediately afforded.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire, if the Senator will permit me, to call his attention to the fact that the Senate appointed a committee to confer with President Madison and President Madison then took the ground that the President could not confer with committees of the Houses; that he could communicate only with the Senate of the United States or with the House of Representatives, or both; that he could not recognize the committees, and I think he was absolutely right.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am inclined, Mr. President, without an examination of the authorities at all, to say that I think it is absolutely wrong. It does not seem to be the practical thing at all, where three bodies charged with responsibility by the people for legislation upon certain subjects with reference to which relief is necessary, where the people and all three bodies agree that relief is necessary—that there should not be some practical business method by which they could be brought into conference and into agreement. We already have an indication from the President of the United States in a message that he is willing to go into an agreement, for he makes an offer of certain legislation. So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to accept an offer of any legislation that will reduce the intolerable burdens of the tariff now existing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take a recess not later than 6 o'clock to-day, to reconvene at 8 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Exclusively.

Mr. DU PONT. Exclusively. It is very important that that measure should be acted upon, because it will lead to protracted discussion in conference and will take a great deal of time. While that discussion is going on in the conference other measures can be considered in the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. What does the Senator desire taken up?

Mr. DU PONT. The Army appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I want to say that I hope very much that will be done. It will expedite the public business, and I think it will hasten the adjournment of Congress. The bill will have to go to conference. It has come from the other House just exactly as they originally passed it, and it comes back to the Senate from our committee just as it did before. I think in 30 minutes we would be prepared to send the bill to conference.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to say that I hope the request will be granted. It will enable us to dispose of the Army appropriation bill this evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent that at 6 o'clock this evening the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. BACON. I do not object to the bill being taken up just as soon as it can be reached. I am willing to come here at the early hour of 10 o'clock, after having been engaged every day very much earlier than that in other matters, and to devote the whole day up to 7 o'clock, if Senators wish, to public business; but, Mr. President, with our experience last week, it is too much to ask Senators who devote their whole time here from 10 o'clock in the morning until 7 o'clock at night after that to come back. If we remain in session until 7 o'clock to-night the work can be done.

Mr. LODGE. The object can be accomplished by a motion, but I think it is a great deal better that we should have an agreement. We certainly are all interested in getting the bill passed, and I think that there should be some consideration shown to each of us.

Mr. BACON. There is no trouble, Mr. President, about the bill being taken up, I presume, at some time during the day, if it is so desired. I presume the regular order will be laid aside now if the Senator desires that the Army appropriation bill be taken up.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no, the regular order can not be laid aside now.

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I have made every effort to have the regular order laid aside, but no one will yield. The consideration of the pending measure is insisted upon on both sides of the Chamber, and I can see no other way by which the Army appropriation bill can be considered, except in the manner in which I have suggested.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it seems to me a most reasonable request, and it will facilitate business.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it is not an unreasonable request that this bill should be expedited, and I am in sympathy with that. The only suggestion I am making is that we can probably, without a night session, accomplish the object desired. That is the only objection I have to it. I want the bill taken up discussed, and disposed of.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. If we can pass it without a night session, we will do so.

Mr. PENROSE. I hope the Senator from Georgia will not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have no objection to taking up and disposing of the appropriation bills as rapidly as possible. There is a bill, however, which has been before the two Houses very much longer than the Army appropriation bill; one which, I presume, we can dispose of to-day, and which ought to be disposed of, because we are behind in the payments provided by that bill. I refer to the pension appropriation bill that is again before the Senate. It reached the Senate a month or two before the Army appropriation bill, and, under the circumstances, I feel that we ought to try to get at that and dispose of it. I think Mr. President, we have now reached a point where we can probably agree and I wish to get a vote on the measure this afternoon. If we get through with this other matter before 6 o'clock or 7 o'clock, and can take a vote upon the proposition, which I will make, then I will agree with the Senator to vote for an evening session, but at present I will have to object to the agreement being made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Who made the objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Then, I shall object to the consideration of the pension appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the bill which is now before the Senate is identical in its provisions, except as to the date when it shall become effective, with the cotton bill which passed the House during the special session of Congress and which was acted upon by the Senate and vetoed by the President. The chief reason given by the President for his veto was that there had been no report upon the cotton schedule by the Tariff Board. Since the last session of Congress and since the veto by the President that board has made its report, and it has been transmitted to Congress by the President, with the recommendation that Congress proceed to the consideration of this schedule, with a view to the revision and reduction of its rates. The House, after taking that report into consideration and making a very careful analysis of it, reached the conclusion that there was nothing in the report that called for any change in the bill which it had passed at the last session, and therefore the Ways and Means Committee rereported the old bill and it was passed and is now before the Senate.

Mr. President, in that connection I will ask, without reading, to incorporate in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks an analysis of the report of the Tariff Board upon the cotton schedule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it is proper that I should state briefly, and in general terms, the extent to which this bill, if it shall become a law, will reduce existing rates upon the manufactures of cotton. The bill contains only 14 paragraphs. The average reduction of rates made in these paragraphs is about 44 per cent. The average ad valorem rate upon the manufactures of cotton under the present law is 48.12 per cent. The average rate in the pending bill is 27 per cent. Referring to it more specifically and by paragraphs, in the first paragraph, which relates to cotton thread, carded yarn, combed yarn, warps or warp yarn, and so on, the present duties average 32 per cent; the duties in the House bill are 14.11 per cent. On spool thread of cotton, crochet, darning and embroidery cotton, and so on, embraced in paragraph 2, the present duties are 26.63 per cent, and in the bill 15 per cent.

On cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, printed, or mercerized, containing yarn the highest number of which shall not exceed No. 50, and so on, the present duties are 42.46 per cent, while those in the bill are 24.51 per cent.

On handkerchiefs or mufflers composed of cotton, whether in the piece or otherwise, and whether finished or unfinished, embraced in paragraph 6, the present duties are 50 per cent, and the proposed duties 30 per cent.

On plushes, velvets, velvetines, corduroys, and all pile fabrics, cut or uncut, and so on, embraced in paragraph 8, the present duties are 54.33 per cent, and the proposed duties 30 per cent.

On curtains, table covers, and all articles manufactured of cotton chenille, or of which cotton chenille is a component material, embraced in paragraph 9, the present duties are 50 per cent, and the proposed duties 35 per cent.

On stockings, hose, and half hose, embraced in paragraph 10, the present duties are 30 per cent, and the proposed duties 20 per cent.

On stockings, hose, and half hose, known as the seamless stocking, embraced in paragraph 11, the present duties are 71 per cent and the proposed duties from 35 to 40 per cent, according to value.

On shirts and drawers, pants, vests, union suits, combination suits, and so on, embraced in paragraph 12, the present duties are 59 per cent, and the proposed duties 30 per cent.

On bandings, belting, bindings, bone casings, cords, garters, ribbons, and so on, embraced in paragraph 13, the present duties are 36.97 per cent, and the proposed duties from 15 to 25 per cent, according to value.

On cotton table damask and manufactures of cotton table damask, embraced in paragraph 14, the present duties are 40 per cent, and the proposed duties 25 per cent.

On towels, bath mats, quilts, blankets, polishing cloths, wash rags, sheets, and batting, embraced in paragraph 15, the present duties are 45 per cent, and the proposed duties 25 per cent.

On articles made from cotton cloth, whether finished or unfinished, and all manufactures of cotton or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for, embraced in paragraph 16, the present duties are 45 per cent, and the proposed duties 30 per cent.

Mr. President, this matter has been so thoroughly discussed in the other branch of Congress during this and at the special session of 1911, and it was so fully discussed here during the special session, that I do not think, in view of the conditions which now obtain and the anxiety of all Members of the Senate and of the House to act upon these matters as quickly as possible and with as little discussion as possible, there is any necessity for any further elaboration of the general purpose of this bill than the statement I have made as to the reductions.

The amount of imports of cotton manufactures now is about $28,000,000. It is estimated that under the stimulus that would be given by the reduction of rates in this bill there would be an increase in those importations, running them up to about $39,000,000. There will not be quite so much revenue from this source as under the present law, because of the reductions made, but the amount of revenue lost will not be more than about $3,000,000.

Mr. POMERENE. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has in mind what the present revenues are derivable from this schedule?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can furnish the Senator with that. The revenues under the present law are about $13,673,801. It is estimated that under this bill the revenues will amount to $10,509,000.

APPENDIX.

ANALYSIS OF TARIFF BOARD'S REPORT—SCOPE OF ANALYSIS.

The following discussion of the Tariff Board's report on cotton manufactures deals with (1) the theoretical basis upon which the report is founded; (2) the character of its data, statistical methods, and the qualities which entitle it to confidence, or the reverse; and (3) interpretation of the board's report and the attempt to apply the same to the tariff situation. The first of these phases of the discussion demands no elaborate treatment inasmuch as the ideas involved in it have already been presented by the committee in its report on the wool bill (H. R. 22195). (H. Rept. No. 455, 62d Cong., 2d sess.)

COST-OF-PRODUCTION THEORY.

As in the report on wool and manufactures of wool, so in its report on cotton manufactures, the board technically accepts the theory that the tariff is in some way dependent upon or related to the cost of producing the goods, and a considerable portion of the cotton report consists of study of costs of producing cotton yarns and fabrics. The investigation of the board was conducted chiefly in the United States, although some data purporting to show foreign costs are presented in the report. A new element in the form of the analysis of prices has been projected by the board; these and its study of trade conditions are both factors in the problem which received no considerable attention in the report on wool and manufactures of wool. This change in method will be considered hereafter. At this point it is necessary to note, first, that, notwithstanding the shift to the price basis of study, the board adheres to the comparative cost-of-production theory as a basis for fixing tariff duties, and the larger part of its report consists of an analysis of what is called costs, or, more correctly stated, money expenses of production.

In the committee's report on the wool bill, H. R. 22195 (H. Rept. No. 455, 62 Cong., 2d sess.), some familiar economic reasoning was reviewed bearing upon the cost of production theory as a regulator of tariff duties. What was said in that report applies with equal force to the use of the same theory with regard to rates of duty for cotton manufactures. The remarks made in that report with reference to the abstract basis of the cost of production theory, the relationship between prices and costs, variations in costs, the importance of ascertaining accurate comparative costs, and the general futile character of this mode of inquiry are applicable to the report of the Tariff Board on manufactures of cotton. All that was said on these subjects in discussing the report of the Tariff Board on wool and manufactures of wool is equally applicable to the report on cotton manufactures in so far as the report is based upon the theory of comparative costs of production.

EVASION OF TARIFF ISSUE.

It was pointed out in House Report No. 455 (62d Cong., 2d sess.) that the Tariff Board report on wool was not in reality a tariff document. This comment is also applicable to the report on cotton manufactures, though the latter contains much more material than the former concerning rates of duty and the method by which they have been levied. However, nowhere in the report is there any recommendation as to the proper course to be pursued in adjusting the tariff, the reader being left to draw his own conclusions as to this from the data presented. As in the report on wool, the board has nothing to say respecting the duties as affecting capital or labor, the profits of the manufacturing concerns engaged in the industry, and practically nothing relative to the general influence of the present tariff on the status of the industry. The Tariff Board report, now before Congress, consists of two parts. One part contains the President's message, letter of submittal, summary of findings, and a so-called "glossary," in which are given definitions of the terms used in tariff legislation; matter relative to production, importation, consumption, and processes of manufacture in the United States and in other countries. The other part consists of a study of the relative costs of production, prices, and wages for the cotton industry. The board adds that this investigation has been conducted "with special reference to the existing rates of duty," a description not fully borne out by a careful examination of the text.

VALUE OF REPORT.

Part 1 will be of service to the public in explaining the terminology of the tariff and the significance of the existing rates. It contains little that was not already available to any Member of Congress who chose to avail himself of the facilities at hand. It is essentially a clerical or library compilation from printed sources, and as such affords little of service to the practical legislator other than its convenient form. Much of the material has been given in an even more complete manner in the report of the Ways and Means Committee to accompany H. R. 12812 (H. Rept. No. 65, 62d Cong., 1st sess.). A considerable portion of the board's report has been prepared by drawing upon technical works relating to cotton manufactures. Part 2 deals with the cost of producing cotton yarn in the United States and in England, and the cost of producing fabrics in these countries. It includes a study of the cost of finishing cloth and putting it through different processes, such as bleaching, dyeing, mercerizing, and the like. It also includes a study of cotton-mill efficiency, the wages of employees in the industry, and a section is devoted to knit goods. Detailed figures are given in the appendices, but consideration of these appendices may be omitted in view of the fact that they supply merely the material upon which the board has drawn in presenting its general discussion. The portion of the report which should receive attention is found on pages 349 to 666. A considerable portion of the material, even in this part of the report, consists of figures that are not required for the discussion. Much of the material has practically been covered in another form in the reports on the cotton industry made during the last two years by the Immigration Commission and by the Bureau of Labor. The total amount of data, therefore, comprised within the pages named must be materially cut down, if one desires to ascertain the exact scope of the report, which is new and worthy of detailed study at this time.

SOURCE OF COST DATA.

The Tariff Board is specific in furnishing the names of the American mills from which data were obtained during the cotton investigation, and notwithstanding that these data are presented in a way not to involve publishing the facts as to any particular mill (each mill being referred to by a number, so that identification of the data would be impossible), yet the board has failed to furnish similar information with reference to the alleged costs it obtained from mills in England. The board presents alleged costs for seven different yarn manufacturing plants in the Lancashire district, the mills being numbered from 1 to 8, and the data being presented according to the mills as thus numbered. Having been officially requested by the Ways and Means Committee for the names of the mills thus considered in England on the same basis as given for the United States, the Tariff Board has declined to comply with the request. This is on the stated ground that the information from abroad was obtained under seal of confidence and in a way that prohibits the board from making the facts known in any manner that would result in publicity. The absence of any statement in the report concerning the methods that were adopted in getting the costs from these mills naturally raises a question as to whether they were obtained in the same manner as in the United States. In response to an inquiry addressed by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to the chairman of the Tariff Board, Chairman Emery does not state that the English mill costs were obtained by the agents of the board. His language is:

"The manufacturing costs of yarn in the English mills were taken directly from the books of the mills by sworn chartered accountants and checked by another set of sworn chartered accountants."

Who the chartered accountants referred to were and whether they were or were not in the employ of the board is not indicated, but the inference may be that none of them were employed by the board and that the figures which are offered as representing costs in the English mills were not obtained directly from the books by persons over whom the board had control.

In his reply to the letter of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Chairman Emery continues his explanation of the way in which these data were computed, as follows:

"The cost figures secured by these chartered accountants for a complete year's operation were transferred to our schedule forms as used for American mills, except that productive and nonproductive labor, which are given separately for the American mills, were combined under one head—'labor'—in the English mills."

Apparently, therefore, the schedules were not filled out directly from the mill books, and it is thus obvious that serious doubt exists as to the nature of the yarn cost figures which are said to have been obtained in England by the Tariff Board. Should, however, these costs be accepted as correct, their comparability is open to the following objections:

1. The board does not state the year to which the data for England relate, nor does it advise whether that year was identical with the year for which information was obtained from American mills.

2. The board fails to state whether the mills in England were running full time; or, if not, whether the data were reduced to a basis of full-time operation; or whether the hours during which those mills worked were comparable with the operation of the selected mills in the United States.

3. The fact that the board states that the figures for the English mills did not distinguish between productive and nonproductive labor, as was done in the American mills, introduces a distinct element of noncomparability into the returns.

4. The mills in the United States from which the yarn costs were obtained appear to have been mills that were engaged both in spinning and weaving. This was not the case with the English mills, which it is understood were devoted to yarn production exclusively.

Inasmuch as the English cost computations shown are worked out to four decimal places, and as a variation in any one of the points above enumerated would very largely affect a computation nominally so close as this, it must be admitted that the data are not entitled to the credence as a basis for the ascertainment of comparative yarn costs in the two countries which the board apparently reposes in them. Since these costs are the only ones given in the report that profess to have been obtained direct from books, the conclusion is inevitable that the report does not afford any data whatever on actual costs in foreign countries, certainly none that has been obtained upon a basis identical with, or even closely similar to, that which was adopted in the United States. It is therefore impossible to accept as final the conclusions of the board on this subject.

With reference to the source of information for the cloth costs, it appears that the board has followed the sample method adopted by it in the wool report—that is to say, it has taken selected cloth samples and obtained figures from representative makers with reference to the cost of producing cloths of the kinds indicated. These costs were obtained by representatives of the board from the mills visited in connection with the general cost investigation. In the case of every mill investigated all the costs incurred in the production of its products were noted. The costs of the cloths were worked out, as explained in the report of the board, independently of the mill's own figures. Granting that the data thus obtained were the best that could be secured under the sample method, it does not appear that any considerable value should be assigned to them. Experience shows that such estimates of costs on samples are seldom satisfactory, and the board's report itself indicates how misleading they must have been for any tariff purpose, since in the cost of many samples a low and high cost is stated, the variation between the two being in many instances very wide.

It may be said that this variation corresponds to the actual variation of costs found in mills of different efficiency, but there is no authority for asserting that this is the case, since the variation may quite as easily arise from the circumstances under which the given mills were being operated; that is, whether on full time or part time, and whether with efficient or inefficient machinery. Unless it were known to what mills the costs thus afforded relate, it would be out of the question to regard them as accurately indicating actual costs of manufacture in the United States. Still less could such costs for foreign countries be regarded as trustworthy. For these reasons, therefore, the authority upon which the cost data on cloths were secured must be regarded as exceedingly unsatisfactory, and hence the conclusions based on them must be rejected or treated with great caution.

USE OF PRICE FIGURES.

It should, moreover, be noted in examining the cotton report of the Tariff Board that the board has made a marked departure from the methods employed in the wool report. In the latter the discussion was primarily based upon supposed cost figures which had been obtained from selected mills or which had been secured with reference to chosen samples of cloth. The theory acted upon was that the proper rate of duty to be levied upon a given article could be determined by ascertaining the cost of production of that article at home and abroad and computing the difference as a percentage on the foreign money costs thus stated.

In the cotton investigation the board recognized that the data with reference to costs are insufficient and that it would be impossible to base findings upon these cost returns. Hence, recourse is had to price figures to establish the relative position of various countries with reference to competition in specified products. As the board expresses it (p. 11):

"For tariff purposes, however, valuable conclusions may be drawn from a comparison of relative prices under competitive conditions in this and other countries and from a comparison of duties with domestic production costs."

This means that since, as the board states it (p. 11), "in the matter of turning yarn into woven fabrics the board was unable to secure such detailed foreign-cost figures as in the case of spinning," it has been obliged to abandon the cost idea entirely, and "for tariff purposes" it draws its conclusions by comparing prices under competitive conditions and by ascertaining the relationship between rates of duty and domestic costs of production. This method has always been employed by careful legislative committees in dealing with the tariff. These committees have sought to secure data with reference to prices through official sources and by the aid of special agents. They, moreover, have sought to obtain facts as to domestic costs by interrogating manufacturers and by obtaining, from the latter, estimates with reference to the sums for which they could produce given articles of manufacture under existing conditions; then on the strength of these data the effort has been to make the proper adjustment of duties.

In accepting this same plan the Tariff Board has practically abandoned the object for which President Taft stated it had been created, namely, to ascertain the cost of production at home and abroad, and consequently the amount of tariff duty required to place the domestic producer on an equal competitive basis with the foreigner, and at the same time afford the American manufacturer a reasonable profit. The question presented, then, in determining the value of the board's report as compared with what has been done on the same subject on former occasions, is whether the board has obtained more and better price data than were obtained by committees of Congress working independently. The fact remains that the board has made a wide departure from the theory upon which its former reports have been prepared, and in examining the cotton report care should be taken to segregate those conclusions which are based upon its new method of investigation from those arising from the use of the old cost of production plan.

COMPETITIVE STATUS AS TO RAW MATERIAL.

Little or nothing need be said of the position of the cotton industry with regard to raw material in the United States and in foreign countries. In this respect the problem of the cotton industry is very widely at variance with that discovered in the wool and woolen investigation. There is no duty on raw cotton in the United States and none in England, the latter country being, as the board points out, our principal competitor. As the board plainly states (p. 8):

"In the cost of raw material there is practically no advantage possessed by either country. Any general difference in price between England and the United States is less than occurs from mill to mill or month to month in either country."

That being true, England, our principal competitor, may be taken as having substantially as favorable access to raw material as the United States—both countries being regarded in their entirties; special cases where an advantage of location exists, as in the case of our southern cotton mills, being neglected.

YARNS.

The fundamental work done by the Tariff Board in connection with the limited analysis of cost of production in the United States and in England, undertaken by it in its report, is found in the section dealing with comparison of conversion costs of warp and filling yarns as found in various mills in England and the United States. Yarn is the first step away from the raw material and toward the finished product. The conversion costs which the board studied are those which it took from 7 English yarn mills. The 7 English mills are compared with 28 American mills. "For this comparison," says the board (p. 415), "we have selected warp yarns Nos. 28, 30, 36, 40, and 50, and filling yarns Nos. 26, 36, 38, 40, 50, 60, and 70. The costs on each count of yarn is given as found in 4 or more of 7 English mule spinning mills and in 2 or more of 28 American mills for which comparable data were secured." The question may arise at the outset why these particular English mills were selected for representative costs.

On this point unfortunately the board furnishes no information, thereby subjecting its report to the same character of criticism to which the wool report was liable. In fact, the board even admits that the basis thus taken for the study of comparative costs in yarn mills was not satisfactory. It points out that the English mills vary in size from 80,000 to 120,000 spindles each, while the American mills vary from 25,000 to over 500,000 spindles. All the English mills were in Lancashire, and therefore only a short distance apart; they pay wages that are more or less standardized and are subject to the same general conditions as to proximity to fuel, to raw materials, to selling markets, etc. The American mills are scattered over an extensive area of country, have no standard of wages, and work under very diverse conditions. The 7 English mills are all modern and well equipped, while many of the American mills are old, one being equipped with spinning and weaving machinery 60 years old. This evidently did not prove a satisfactory basis for the study of comparative costs, inasmuch as there was no selection of mills in either country with a view to the choice of establishments which could fairly be placed upon the same footing of industrial efficiency. It is not surprising therefore to find very wide variations in costs in the different mills. In Table 127 (p. 418), which gives the ring-spun yarn conversion cost in American mills, it appears that the cost of 26's ran from $0.026438 to $0.047417 per pound.

Here is a cost variation between mills of nearly 80 per cent. In the case of the finer yarns like variations are observable. No. 40 yarn ranged from $0.045110 to $0.074911 per pound, a variation in cost of about two-thirds. The same is true of other mills, which vary widely in the different districts of the United States. The board remarks (p. 419) that "the most striking feature about the costs given for the English mills is the very small range of costs for each number of yarn as compared with that found in the case of the American mills." The range in conversion cost was about 13 per cent in the case of all yarns for which cost data were secured in England. Bearing this point in mind, it is not difficult to account for the variation in conversion cost between the United States and England. There is no reason why the cost in the two countries should show any considerable degree of correspondence; and the board itself apparently recognizes this, inasmuch as in the table on page 409 it undertakes to present only the comparison of costs calculated for the most efficient American mill and the most efficient English mill for which data were available. The difference in costs is thus based upon the difference existing between the two most efficient mills of which the board had knowledge, one being in England and the other in the United States.

This would be much more satisfactory if there were information as to how efficient the mill selected in each country as the basis of comparison actually was as compared with other mills in the same country. But, as already noted, there is no way of ascertaining such facts from the board's report. It can not be known whether the seven or eight mills studied in England were more or less efficient than the average, unless it be stated how these mills were chosen by the board, nor can any conclusions be reached as to the judgment shown in obtaining representative mill costs. This, as already seen, applies with special force to the study of average costs, but it also applies in the same way to the comparison of costs at the most efficient mill chosen in either country. The board finds, on the basis of these comparisons, that the difference in conversion costs between the two countries as expressed in the form of a percentage of the English manufacturing cost in no case runs higher than 12 per cent. The board goes on to say (p. 423):

"It would be improper to give a difference based on the average costs for the mills in each country, since in the English mills are not included the highest-cost mills of England, but only a group of uniformly efficient mills, while an average of the figures for the United States would be, in some cases, made misleading by the inclusion of a disproportionate number of old mills operating at high cost."

It would appear, therefore, that the board practically accepts the idea that tariff duties should be based upon the difference in cost between the most efficient mills in the United States and Great Britain. But this, obviously, is a view which has not been worked out in practice, unless it be true that the mills selected by the board in Great Britain are the most efficient mills existing in that country, a statement which is not even remotely substantiated.

From the foregoing review of the board's figures, it is seen that the whole comparison between the yarn costs in the United States and Great Britain is based upon comparisons between two groups of mills, one in the United States, including a variety of mills, the other in England, including a small number of mills, and all said to be of high efficiency. This is simmered down to a comparison of costs in the most efficient mills shown for each country; and between these there is a difference in total conversion cost of cotton into yarn of less than 12 per cent of the total foreign cost expense (p. 423). It is important to note the extreme slenderness upon which this cost comparison is based, inasmuch as this basis is used by the board for the purpose of building up a large structure of cost comparisons for which no figures are available. The board says (p. 423):

"Comparison can be made between mills of any grade of efficiency from the detailed figures of English and American costs given below, and making the proper allowance for the additional 89 per cent to be added to labor and 34 per cent to works expense to allow for cost of spooling, reeling, and packing. Thus it is possible to compare the difference between the highest-cost mill in England and the highest-cost mill in the United States, or the lowest-cost mill in England with the highest-cost mill in the United States, and so on."

Again the board says (p. 425):

"Since the general ratio of the English costs to the American costs in yarn making has already been shown, an interesting comparison can be made between the duty on these yarns and the total conversion cost in the United States. It is obviously true that if the purpose is to compare duties with the difference in the cost of production here and abroad, this comparison can be made if we have the general ratio of foreign conversion cost to the domestic, and the ratio of the duty to the domestic conversion cost. * * * Thus if the English conversion cost is 50 per cent of the American conversion cost, then a duty which is 50 per cent of the American cost would offset the difference in cost of production. Or, if the English cost is 70 per cent of the American cost, this difference would then be offset by a duty which is 30 per cent of the American cost."

This appears to be an effort to establish a general cost relationship between the many kinds of yarn manufacture based upon the cost relationship which has been established for the yarns produced in certain specified mills. Of course this could be true only in the event that there was the same general relationship between various classes of mills in regard to their production. There is no basis whatever for any such assumption.

SEGREGATING YARN COSTS.

In its analysis of the cost of production of yarns the board undertakes to show the costs of a great variety of yarns of various numbers (pp. 398–426). When it comes to a discussion of cotton manufacturing in England, it seeks to present the detailed costs for the various numbers of yarns on a comparative basis. Before accepting any of these figures it is necessary to inquire how the segregation of costs between the different numbers of yarns was made. This point is met on page 377 of the board's report, where the board described the methods followed in the investigation. Of this it simply says:

"The next question requiring explanation is 8, yarns produced. The total quantity of yarn produced during the period under investigation was taken, giving the quantity of each number (size) yarn, whether warp or filling, and the selling value, if the yarn was produced for sale."

This does not afford any information as to how the segregation of costs was made, and the board goes on as follows:

"With these data at hand the agents were in a position to ascertain accurately for themselves the cost of each kind of yarn rather than to merely accept the companies' own estimates of their costs. In cases where the pay of the employees engaged in the production of roving and of yarn was at a piece rate—that is, so much per hank of a given size of yarn—the direct labor cost of turning out a pound of every kind of yarn produced by the mill can be readily computed. In most mills, however, drawing-frame tenders and spinners are paid, not by the hank, but per side, a side of a spinning frame having anywhere from 152 to 240 spindles, and the spinner tends a certain number of sides. Nor is there always an accurate record kept of the output of each employee from week to week. A common practice in cotton mills is to estimate the cost of spinning on a so-called average number basis."

Then the board enters upon a further explanation as to why these methods of computation are not satisfactory and the description of the processes which it employed in apportioning costs among the different numbers of yarn. Of this it is sufficient to say that, according to the board's own statements, the method used by it in the process of computation is not that which is commonly employed in cotton mills, while the process of computation actually followed by the board is open to very severe criticism at several points; for example, the method of distributing works expense and fixed charges is apparently a machine-rate basis, the fixed charges being divided upon the assumption that the output of yarn per spindle may be taken as fairly indicating the relative proportion of the fixed charges which it ought to bear or which should be apportioned to it.

There is no positive warrant for such a method of comparison, and the adoption of it renders practically impossible a direct comparison with conditions in England, because of the difference in the systems of spinning employed. Moreover, the character of the mills studied in the United States varies greatly and was by no means analogous to that of the English yarn mills examined. For this and other similar reasons no confidence whatever can be placed in the United States costs of the different yarns as stated by the Tariff Board, while still less confidence can be placed in any comparisons between the cost of such yarns in the United States and the costs of similar yarns in England.

CONCLUSIONS AS TO YARNS.

From the analysis of comparative yarn costs for England and the United States as set forth by the board it may be concluded:

1. Comparing the most efficient mills in the United States and in Great Britain, the total conversion cost of yarn in England varied from 65 to 79 per cent of the American conversion cost (p. 9).

2. The cost of manufacturing yarn in an English mill is 72 per cent of the cost, exclusive of material, in an American mill (p. 9).

3. There are greater cost variations on a given number of yarn in certain mills of the United States than exist between given mills in the two countries.

4. In the case of nearly all yarns given there were domestic mills whose highest conversation cost was from 50 to 100 per cent greater than the lowest conversion cost.

5. The poorer mills in the United States are in much greater need of protection against the more efficient mills in this country than are our mills against the mills of Great Britain.

6. The difference in conversion costs between the two countries varies from 3.8 per cent to 11.9 per cent of the total cost of production in England, including raw material (p. 9).

Table 1 shows yarn costs in the United States and England, together with the ad valorem rate of duty necessary to equalize differences in costs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of January, 1913, the articles hereinafter enumerated, described, and provided for shall, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), be subject to the payment of duties at the rates thereinafter provided; that is to say:

1. On cotton thread and carded yarn, combed yarn, warps or warp yarn, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form, except spool thread of cotton, crochet, darning, and embroidery cottons, hereinafter provided for, on all numbers up to and including No. 50, 10 per cent ad valorem; on all numbers above No. 50 and up to and including No. 100, 15 per cent ad valorem; on all numbers above No. 100, 20 per cent ad valorem. On cotton card laps, roping, sliver, or roving, 10 per cent ad valorem. On cotton waste and flocks, manufactured or otherwise advanced in value, 5 per cent ad valorem.

2. On spool thread of cotton, crochet, darning, and embroidery cottons, on spools, reels, or balls, or in skeins, cones, or tubes, or in any other form, 15 per cent ad valorem.

3. On cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, printed, or mercerized, containing yarn the highest number of which shall not exceed No. 50, 15 per cent ad valorem; containing yarn the highest number of which shall exceed No. 50 and shall not exceed No. 100, 20 per cent ad valorem; containing yarn the highest number of which shall exceed No. 100, 25 per cent ad valorem. On cotton cloth, when bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, printed, or mercerized, containing yarn the highest number of which shall not exceed No. 50, 20 per cent ad valorem; containing yarn the highest number of which shall exceed No. 50 and shall not exceed No. 100, 25 per cent ad valorem; containing yarn the highest number of which shall exceed No. 100, 30 per cent ad valorem.

4. The term cotton cloth, or cloth, wherever used in the paragraphs of this act, unless otherwise specially provided for, shall be held to include all woven fabrics of cotton, in the piece or cut in lengths, whether figured, fancy, or plain, and shall not include any article, finished or unfinished, made from cotton cloth. In the ascertainment of the value, upon which the duties imposed upon cotton cloth are made to depend, the entire fabric and all parts thereof shall be included.

5. On cloth composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber and silk, whether known as silk-striped sleeve linings, silk stripes, or otherwise, of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value, and on tracing cloth, 30 per cent ad valorem; on cotton cloth filled or coated, all oilcloths (except silk oilcloths and oilcloths for floors), and cotton window hollands, 25 per cent ad valorem; on waterproof cloth composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, whether composed in part of india rubber or otherwise, 25 per cent ad valorem.

6. On all handkerchiefs or mufflers composed of cotton, whether in the piece or otherwise and whether finished or unfinished, 30 per cent ad valorem.

7. On clothing, ready-made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value, made up or manufactured, wholly or in part, by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, and not otherwise specially provided for in this act, 30 per cent ad valorem; on shirt collars and cuffs, of which cotton is the component material of chief value, 25 per cent ad valorem.

8. On plushes, velvets, velveteens, corduroys, and all pile fabrics, cut or uncut, whether or not the pile covers the entire surface; any of the foregoing composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, except flax, and on manufactures of articles in any form, including such as are commonly known as bias dress facings or skirt bindings, made or cut from plushes, velvets, velveteens, corduroys, or other pile fabrics composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, 30 per cent ad valorem.

9. On curtains, table covers, and all articles manufactured of cotton chenille, or of which cotton chenille is the component material of chief value, tapestries, and other Jacquard figured upholstery goods, composed wholly or in chief value of cotton or other vegetable fiber; on any of the foregoing, in the piece or otherwise, 35 per cent ad valorem.

10. On stockings, hose and half-hose, made on knitting machines or frames, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, and not otherwise specially provided for in this act, 20 per cent ad valorem.

11. On stockings, hose and half-hose, selvedged, fashioned, narrowed, or shaped wholly or in part by knitting machines or frames, or knit by hand, including such as are commercially known as seamless stockings, hose and half-hose, and clocked stockings, hose and half-hose, on all of the above composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, finished or unfinished, 40 per cent ad valorem. On men's and boys' cotton gloves, knitted or woven, 35 per cent ad valorem.

12. On shirts and drawers, pants, vests, union suits, combination suits, tights, sweaters, corset covers, and all underwear of every description, made wholly or in part on knitting machines or frames, or knit by hand, finished or unfinished, not including stockings, hose, and half-hose, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, 30 per cent ad valorem.

13. On bandings, beltings, bindings, bone casings, cords, garters, ribbons, tire fabric or fabric suitable for use in pneumatic tires, suspenders and braces, tapes, tubing, and webs or webbing, any of the foregoing made of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value, whether composed in part of india rubber or otherwise, and not embroidered by hand or machinery, spindle banding, woven, braided, or twisted lamp, stove, or candle wicking made of cotton or other vegetable fiber, loom harness, healds, or collets made of cotton or other vegetable fiber, of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value, boot, shoe, and corset lacings made of cotton or other vegetable fiber, and labels, for garments or other articles, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, 25 per cent ad valorem; on belting for machinery made of cotton or other vegetable fiber and india rubber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value, 15 per cent ad valorem.

14. On cotton table damask, and manufactures of cotton table damask, or of which cotton table damask is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, 25 per cent ad valorem.

15. On towels, doilies, bath mats, quilts, blankets, polishing cloths, mop cloths, wash rags, sheets, and batting, any of the foregoing made of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, 25 per cent ad valorem.

16. On all articles made from cotton cloth, whether finished or unfinished, and all manufactures of cotton or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, 30 per cent ad valorem.

SEC. 2. That on and after the day when this act shall go into effect all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported and hereinbefore enumerated, described, and provided for, for which no entry has been made, and all such goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to no other duty upon the entry or withdrawal thereof than the duty which would be imposed if such goods, wares, or merchandise were imported on or after that date.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed. This act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of January, 1913.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire to propose, at the request of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the close of the bill as a new section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa, in behalf of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], submits an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That sections 1 and 3 of the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and are hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. What is that amendment, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand; that is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That the act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all of the paragraphs of Schedule I of section 1 of said act, from 313 to 332, inclusive of both, and inserting in place thereof the following:

1. Cotton card laps, sliver, roving, or roping, 5 per cent ad valorem.

2. Cotton waste and flocks, manufactured, or manufactures of, 10 per cent ad valorem.

3. Cotton yarns, in the gray or otherwise, not advanced beyond the condition of singles by grouping or twisting two or more single yarns together, not exceeding No. 40, 7½ per cent ad valorem.

Exceeding No. 40 and not exceeding No. 80, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Exceeding No. 80, 15 per cent ad valorem.

4. Cotton yarn or thread not otherwise provided for, in the gray or otherwise, advanced beyond the condition of singles by grouping or twisting two or more single yarns together; and cable-laid yarns or threads, in the gray or otherwise, made by grouping or twisting two or more twisted yarns or threads together, shall be subject to the same rates of duty as the single yarns from which they are made, and in addition thereto 5 per cent ad valorem.

Spool thread of cotton, crochet, darning, and embroidery cottons, on spools, shall be dutiable at the same rates of duty as the single yarns from which they are made.

5. Cotton cloth, plain woven, in the gray, or bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, printed, mercerized, or otherwise finished, containing not more than 5 square yards to the pound, 5 per cent ad valorem.

Containing more than 5 and not more than 7½ square yards to the pound, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Containing more than 7½ square yards to the pound, 15 per cent ad valorem.

6. Cotton cloth, fancy woven, in the gray, or bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, printed, mercerized, or otherwise finished, containing figures produced by various weaving devices known as dobby, drop-box, leno, lappet, swivel, or any other name except Jacquard, 20 per cent ad valorem.

7. Cotton cloth woven by means of the Jacquard attachment, not otherwise provided for, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Cotton table damask, 25 per cent ad valorem; manufactures of cotton table damask, or of which cotton table damask is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this section, 25 per cent ad valorem.

8. Cloths containing silk or artificial silk, in which cotton is the component material of chief value, shall be subject to the same rates of duty as cotton cloths of similar weave, and in addition thereto 5 per cent ad valorem.

9. Cotton cloths filled or coated, in whole or in part, including oilcloth of cotton; waterproof cloths composed of cotton or in which cotton is the component material of chief value, 20 per cent ad valorem.

10. Handkerchiefs or mufflers of cotton, in the piece or otherwise, finished or unfinished, hemstitched or not, not specially provided for, shall pay the same rate of duty as the cloth of which they are made, and in addition thereto 5 per cent ad valorem.

11. Plushes, velvets, and all pile fabrics made of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, whether the pile covers the entire surface or not:

Uncut, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Cut, in whole or in part, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Provided, That manufactures or articles in any form, including such as are commonly known as bias dress facings or skirt bindings, made or cut from plushes, velvets, or other pile fabrics composed of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, shall be subject to the same rates of duty as the fabrics from which they are made.

12. All articles manufactured of cotton chenille, or of which cotton chenille is the component material of chief value; cotton reps, Jacquard-figured tapestry, and Jacquard-figured upholstery goods, weighing over 6 ounces per square yard, made of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, 40 per cent ad valorem.

13. Stockings, hose, and half hose, made wholly or in part on knitting machines or frames, commercially known as seamless, composed of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, 20 per cent ad valorem.

14. Stockings, hose, or half hose, made wholly or in part on knitting machines or frames, or knit by hand, and commercially known as full-fashioned, composed of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, valued at not more than $2 per dozen pairs, 50 per cent ad valorem; valued at more than $2 per dozen pairs, 60 per cent ad valorem.

15. All underwear of every description, made wholly or in part on knitting machines or frames, or knit by hand, finished or unfinished, not otherwise provided for, composed of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, valued at not more than $1.50 per dozen garments, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Valued at more than $1.50 per dozen garments and not more than $3 per dozen garments, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Valued at more than $3 per dozen garments and not more than $6 per dozen garments, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Valued at more than $6 per dozen garments, 45 per cent ad valorem.

16. Men's and boys' gloves, knitted or woven, composed of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, 50 per cent ad valorem.

17. Tire fabric or fabric suitable for use in pneumatic tires, made of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, 25 per cent ad valorem.

18. Bone casings, garters, suspenders and braces, webs, webbings, and tubing, any of the foregoing composed wholly or in chief value of cotton, or of cotton and india rubber, and not embroidered by hand or machinery; spindle banding, woven, braided, or twisted lamp, stove, or candle wicking, loom harness, healds or collets, boot, shoe, and corset lacings, labels for garments or other articles; composed of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Belting for machinery made of cotton and india rubber, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, 20 per cent ad valorem.

19. Clothing, ready-made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, wholly or partly manufactured, not specially provided for, composed wholly or in chief value of cotton, 30 per cent ad valorem.

20. All articles made from cotton cloth, and all manufactures of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for, 30 per cent ad valorem.

21. The term cotton cloth wherever used in the paragraphs of this schedule, unless otherwise specially provided, shall be held to include all woven fabrics composed wholly or in chief value of cotton, in the piece or cut in lengths, and shall not include any article finished or unfinished made from cotton cloth.

SEC. 2. That the last clause of paragraph 347 of said act of August 5, 1909, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

Waterproof cloth composed of vegetable fiber other than cotton, whether composed in part of india rubber or otherwise, 10 cents per square yard and 20 per cent ad valorem.

SEC. 3. That paragraph 347 of said act of August 5, 1909, is hereby amended by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That none of the foregoing shall apply to coated or filled cotton cloth, or articles made therefrom.

SEC. 4. That paragraph 348 of said act of August 5, 1909, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

Shirt collars and cuffs, composed of linen, or of which linen is the component material of chief value, 40 cents per dozen pieces and 20 per cent ad valorem.

SEC. 5. That paragraph 349 of said act of August 5, 1909, is hereby amended by striking out therefrom the words "webs and webbings."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Clapp	La Follette	Root
Bacon	Crawford	Lodge	Sanders
Bailey	Cullom	McCumber	Simmons
Bankhead	Cummins	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Curtis	Massey	Smoot
Bourne	Dillingham	Myers	Stone
Bradley	du Pont	Nelson	Sutherland
Brandegee	Fall	Oliver	Thornton

Burnham	Gallinger	Page	Townsend
Burton	Guggenheim	Penrose	Warren
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Williams
Chamberlain	Jones	Pomerene	Works
Chilton	Kenyon	Reed

Mr. THORNTON. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate at this late day in the session for any extended discussion of this schedule. I shall not consume time by going into a detailed explanation of the amendment I have just offered.

On August 22, 1911, the President vetoed precisely the bill which is presented to the Senate and under consideration and for which I have offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute. That bill is identical with the bill now presented, excepting a change in the date. The President in his veto message of that bill at that time said:

> When the reports of the Tariff Board upon these schedules are received, the duties which should be imposed can be determined upon justly and with intelligent appreciation of the effect that they will have both upon industry and upon revenue.

The President's chief reason for withholding executive approval of the bill as set forth in his message at that time was lack of information enabling him to pass upon the rates fixed in the bill as it reached him.

As soon as the Tariff Board completed its investigation of Schedule I, the cotton schedule, the President transmitted the findings of that board to Congress with a message, from which I wish to read a few lines:

> I now transmit a report of the Tariff Board on Schedule I (cotton manufactures). In this report, also, the board is unanimous in its findings. On the basis of the report I now recommend that the Congress proceed to a consideration of this schedule, with a view to its revision and a reduction of its rates.
> I base this recommendation on the declaration of the platform on which I was elected—that a reasonable protective tariff should be adjusted to the difference in cost of production at home and abroad.

And the President transmits this report to Congress as a suitable and fit finding upon which Congress may proceed to legislate, to redeem the pledges upon which he and a Republican Congress were elected.

Now, Mr. President, the amendment which I have presented was drafted by the Tariff Board in accordance with its findings in this report, and offered in the House of Representatives by Congressman HILL, of Connecticut, a Republican member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. REED. I want to know if I correctly understood the Senator. I understood him to say that this amendment which he now offers was actually drawn by the Tariff Board.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I so stated.

Mr. REED. Has it come to this, in the progress of events, that the power which the Constitution vested in the House of Representatives to originate revenue measures can not be exercised until a Tariff Board appointed by the President shall have reported; and, second, that Congress must follow its recommendation; and, finally, that that board is to completely usurp the functions and powers of Congress and actually prepare the bill? If that is true, then I want to know how much is left of the constitutional power of Congress to originate revenue measures.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if my friend, the Senator from Missouri, had given me the opportunity to say so, he would have learned that this bill was drawn by the Tariff Board at the request of a Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives who introduced it. I apprehend that the Senator from Missouri has solicited the assistance of experts in and out of the employ of the Government in the preparation of bills and amendments which he has from time to time introduced, without for a moment thinking that he was surrendering his high prerogative as a Member of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Pardon me. I was particularly addressing myself to Senators upon this side of the Chamber. I am aware that the Democratic Members of the Senate are generally opposed to and have generally voted against the establishment of a tariff commission. Upon their theory of the fixing of customs duties upon a revenue basis they do not require to the same extent the services of a Tariff Board, although I have always believed that the services of a Tariff Board or commission, if rendered under such complete authority as to make them effective, would be found very helpful in framing a tariff bill upon a strictly revenue basis.

Pursuant to the recommendations of the President and to the suggestions which he made in his message, when he vetoed the cotton bill, about a year ago, this Tariff Board had completed its investigations and arrived at conclusions which were transmitted to the Congress of the United States, and, according to the President's view, were sufficiently thorough and accurate to be the basis of a recommendation upon his part that there should be instituted a revision of the duties upon the cotton schedule in accordance with that recommendation.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Wisconsin pardon another interruption?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. REED. What I said ought not to be construed by the Senator or anyone else as a criticism of the Senator because he brings in here a bill written by the Tariff Board. What I meant to emphasize, if I could, was the fact that under the policy of the President this board has been given a supreme power, if not authority, and that we are drifting to a position to-day that is utterly untenable.

Now, I make this distinction: It is true that any Senator or Representative has the right to call upon any expert for information in regard to facts, and when he has received those facts to use them in the preparation of a tariff bill. There is no objection to that; it has always been done; but it was not until the creation of this Tariff Board that we were told two things: First, that Congress did not possess the necessary wisdom to ascertain the facts itself and must obtain those facts from the Tariff Board alone, and, second, that we must follow the conclusions and recommendations of the Tariff Board or substitute their judgment for the judgment of Congress.

Now, it seemed to me that we had gone just a step farther. The Tariff Board puts its conclusions in the form of a bill and passes that bill over to Congress or to a Congressman, and the proposition now is, on the part of the President, "take that which my board has agreed to or take nothing."

Now, I can understand how in that extremity a Senator will adopt it in the hope to get something through, but I submit to Senators it is an act of outrageous usurpation and abuse of the veto power, and that all Members of both bodies ought to resent it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the substitute which I have offered here was introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman HILL, of Connecticut, a Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee. Mr. HILL in offering it as a substitute for the Democratic bill, after stating that he believed it to be his duty to support legislation in accordance with the platform of the party upon which he was elected and, as applied to this particular subject, to support legislation which measured the difference in the cost of production in this and competing foreign countries, goes on to say:

> Feeling my own unfitness for the work, I called to my assistance several of the experts who had conducted the investigation, and after many weary days of careful study a new Schedule I was constructed, which, if the report of the Tariff Board as to American costs is correct, is protective in every item and yet is in strict accord with the Republican platform as to the elimination of excessive duties, while still preserving the security against foreign competition to which American producers and wageworkers are entitled.

Mr. President, the investigation conducted by the Tariff Board, upon which this bill was drawn, was, I think, more thorough and more scientifically exact than that made in respect to any one of the other schedules investigated. It was especially conducted by the tariff expert of the board, the chief statistician, Mr. N. I. Stone. Of this investigation Mr. Emery, the president of the board, has this to say in a letter addressed to Mr. HILL:

> THE TARIFF BOARD,
> Treasury Building, Washington, May 25, 1912.
> Hon. EBENEZER J. HILL,
> House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
> MY DEAR MR. HILL: Referring to your questions in conversation with Mr. Cowgill regarding the accuracy of the cost figures in our cotton report and your request that a statement be made in writing, I beg to say that in all instances where reports were obtained from cotton-manufacturing companies the results of our cost extensions were carefully examined by the officers of the mill before the report was forwarded to the Tariff Board. This examination was complete, and went into each detail of the extensions rather than merely to have the officers sign their names without making a close examination. The cost-extension figures were carefully compared with the cost extension made by the mills, and all the reports forwarded to the board were agreed by the officers of the company and representatives of the board to be correct. As to the accuracy of these extensions, I wish to state that the total expenditures of the company were carefully checked to agree with the figures published in their annual financial statement. Using these sums as a basis, we then made up our own cost statement according to our own methods, which we believe to be accurate and not merely the accepting of the company's own estimates of cost.
> In one instance a company was doing an $8,000,000 annual business; after the costs had been extended for this company and the total number of yards of each kind of goods multiplied by the cost per yard as shown by the report, the figures checked within $8.33 of the total amount of money expended by this company in manufacture during the year for which the costs were taken. In another case, by the same method, the variation amounted to $332. The greatest variation in any of the reports was in the case of a company doing a $2,000,000 annual business where, by multiplying the number of yards produced by the cost per yard ascertained by us, the difference amounted to $3,500. But this difference would not affect the costs in the sixth decimal place.
> In every case the companies agreed, after a careful examination, that our costs were correct, and in some few cases the mills have adopted our cost extensions in toto, while in others our system of extensions has been adopted at least in part.
> These facts I believe fully justify the statement that the most accurate costs possible have been obtained.
>
> Very truly, yours,
> HENRY C. EMERY, Chairman.

I read that because it comes from the president of the board and shows with what thoroughness this investigation of the cotton industry was conducted. It shows that when they had ascertained the cost of producing the different articles of manufacture in these cotton industries, their cost figures received the approval of the owners and managers of the mills.

So much for the report. Now, Mr. President, we have the statement of a member of the Ways and Means Committee that this bill which he presented in the House was drawn with the assistance of the board's experts—the very men who made this investigation.

Mr. President, this bill is strictly in accord with the tariff pledge of the Republican Party made in its platform in 1908, and I am wholly unable to see how any Republican can justify opposition to the bill as presented.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator construe anything in the attitude or the report of the Tariff Board to favor ad valorem duties?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Tariff Board, in its report upon this cotton schedule, say that the duties to be applied in dealing with cotton manufactures should be ad valorem duties.

The Senator from Pennsylvania knows, of course, that he never voted for a revision of the woolen schedule without voting for ad valorem duties on all of the manufactured products in that schedule. The only specific duties in Schedule K are those which are supposed to measure the compensatory duties.

Mr. PENROSE. I had printed in the RECORD when the wool bill was up a full statement on the ad valorem proposition, to which I will refer the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I am just wondering whether he read it before he presented it, for I have been examining it, and I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that it is a very good argument for ad valorem duties.

Let me just quote a little from this——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee favor this bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have not looked up the record, but the Senator from Pennsylvania said to me a moment ago here, and I think he will not object to my repeating the statement in answer to this question, that all of the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee voted for this bill when Mr. HILL offered it as a substitute in the House, although I believe they did not vote for it when Mr. HILL offered it as a substitute in the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. PENROSE. I am informed it is correct, though of course such things are not supposed to be matters of public knowledge, that no member of the Ways and Means Committee supported Mr. HILL's bill. It is his individual production and is repudiated by every manufacturer, so far as I know, in the cotton business.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I may be permitted, I have just been looking over the list of the vote, and I find every Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee voted for this bill as a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. PENROSE. On the floor of the House, it is true, unfortunately, they did vote for the measure. The RECORD is calculated to deceive persons who read it as to their real attitude, but I betray no confidence when I state that the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee were not in accord with the measure in the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We have the fact now in the RECORD. In the seclusion of the committee room the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee did not support this measure drawn in accordance with the report of the Tariff Board, but when it came to making a record in the House of Representatives they all supported it.

Now, Mr. President, just a word. I am making use of Mr. HILL's speech, and I want to give him full credit for the very great ability and industry which he has brought to this important subject.

Mr. PENROSE. No one else wants any credit for the bill except Mr. HILL.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Pennsylvania says no one but Mr. HILL wants any credit for this bill. Mr. HILL's Republican colleagues on the committee wanted the credit of supporting the bill, or they would not have voted for its passage in the House.

Mr. President, I pause to remark that some of the troubles in which the Republican administration finds itself involved to-day are due to the fact that a few standpat Republican leaders insist upon maintaining duties at the highest possible point, regardless of the fact that all of the economies of cheapened production cry aloud for a thoroughgoing reduction of the tariff. It is this course that is bringing the protective system into disrepute before the whole country.

I remember during the tariff debate of 1909 on the cotton schedule there was an extended controversy as to whether or not duties should be increased on account of mercerization. We had a spirited contest here upon that subject. I presented to the Senate at that time receipted bills showing the cost of mercerization in English mills and the cost of mercerization in the mills of this country. I contended that we were able to mercerize cotton goods in this country as cheaply as they were mercerized in England. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and other Senators on this side of the Chamber who contended for higher duties upon cotton goods insisted that there should be an increase of duty on account of mercerization, and duty was increased to 1 cent per square yard.

Mr. President, in order to show the relation of the extra duty on account of mercerization to the cost of mercerization the Tariff Board, in its report on cotton, arranged a table (see p. 503 of the report) showing the labor cost and the total cost of mecerization on the square-yard basis. I quote this from the text of the report:

> As will be seen from the table, the labor cost of mercerizing cotton fabrics varies from less than 0.08 of 1 cent to less than 0.11 of 1 cent per square yard, while the total cost of mercerizing varies from more than 0.53 of 1 cent to over 0.72 of 1 cent per square yard.
> The extra duty on account of mercerization is 1 cent per square yard. That is to say, the duty is from 9 to 12.5 times the total labor cost of mercerizing and from 1.4 to nearly 2 times the total cost of mercerizing.

There never has been any pretext that duties should measure more than the difference in the cost of production. The contention has been that that difference in cost is due to the higher wages paid in this country than in competing countries. When the correct measure of protection is applied it should only be sufficient to meet the difference in that cost. But the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill put a duty on mercerization which, according to the Tariff Board's figures, is from 9 to 12½ times the total labor cost of mercerization and from 1.4 to 2 times the total cost of mercerizing—labor and everything else included.

I have had no opportunity to ascertain whether the receipted bills that I presented when the Payne-Aldrich bill was pending are in accord with these figures, but my recollection is that they substantially agree with this statement.

Against that evidence there was merely the assertion on this floor of those who were promoting the higher duties in the Payne-Aldrich bill that an extra duty of 1 cent per square yard for mercerization was required to protect American industry. The contention was backed up by the ex parte statements of those who were to be benefited by these excessive duties. And now we have the humiliation of a report by a board of experts under a Republican administration, appointed by a Republican President, transmitted to Congress with a message of indorsement by a Republican President, which shows that that increase was from nine to twelve times as high as it should have been.

That is but one of the many defects in the work of Congress under the leadership of these ultraprotectionists.

Mr. President, I want to see the protective system maintained in this country. I want to see it maintained upon a basis that measures the difference between the conditions surrounding labor here and in competing countries. I have just this theory about it—the theory which all men have who view it from my standpoint—that labor with us lives at a higher level than it does in any of the competing countries; that except for artificial interference the product goes to the market at the cost level which is somewhat in agreement with the level at which the labor lives that produces the article.

If we produce in this country at a higher level than they produce abroad, unless our duties measure the difference in labor cost, the foreign product, flowing into this country at a lower level, must either pull the labor of this country down to its level or take the American market away from American producers. I want to see the product of the labor which lives at the lower level, when it comes to the customhouse, meet a duty that will raise it to the level of the American labor cost of production.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. TOWNSEND. This morning the chairman of the Finance Committee gave as a reason for bringing in no bill on this subject the fact that the House had not presented it earlier, which appealed to me in a way; but still I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if it is not true that the measure which he has now offered as a substitute was presented by a Republican of the Ways and Means Committee and was so considered in the House, and that it is in as good a condition for us to consider here as the Democratic measure which is to be acted upon this morning?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is most certainly true. In fact, the bill which we term the Democratic bill comes to us exactly as it passed the House of Representatives a little more than a year ago.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator advise us as to what the average reductions are?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was just about to do that, Mr. President. Before coming to that I want to read one or two brief comments on ad valorem duties from the report of the Tariff Board. I read from page 18:

> It is probably impracticable to adopt a purely specific system of duties on woven fabrics. No feasible scheme of classifying and describing fabrics in terms corresponding to differences in conversion cost has yet been worked out.

On page 73 of the report they say, further:

> So far as the motive for undervaluation is concerned, it is more powerful under the scheme adopted in the present law—

That is the Payne-Aldrich law—> than it would be under a straight ad valorem tariff.

On page 74 of the cotton report they say, further:

> A system which puts a specific rate on an ad valorem basis seems to combine the evils of both systems.

Then I offer for the consideration of the Senate this quotation from the opinion given three years ago by a member of the New York Board of Appraisers. He says:

> It is respectfully urged upon the committee that lines of demarcation dependent on value as in this case should be eliminated so far as possible from the tariff act. The fact that a few cents increase in the value of commodities raises the amount of the duty levied 125 to 150 per cent, as sometimes occurs in this paragraph, is a great incentive to fraud. In such cases the unscrupulous merchant enjoys an extraordinary advantage over the scrupulous one. The incentive to undervalue is so great and the difficulty of precise ascertainment of the actual market in these goods, which constantly fluctuates, render satisfactory and just administration almost impossible.

Now, Mr. President, just one word about these bills. I will state the difference in general averages and then submit the proposed amendment to the consideration of the Senate.

The average duty of the cotton schedule under the present law, reduced to ad valorem, is 48 per cent. The average duty of the Democratic bill is 27 per cent. The average duty of the bill which I offer as a substitute is 25 per cent, or 2 per cent lower than the Democratic bill.

To put it in another way, the amendment I offer, if adopted, will give greater relief from the excessive duties of the present law than the bill presented by the Democratic majority in the House, which is now before the Senate, and for which I have offered this bill as an amendment.

I have not been able, Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. If it is not unduly disturbing the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Will he be kind enough to designate the articles or the classes upon which his rates are lower than the rates in the Democratic House bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have reduced that to tabulated form in so far as the similarity of the classifications and the paragraphs of the two bills will permit. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio that there are certain duties in my proposed amendment that are higher than the duties of the Democratic bill. Those higher duties are upon the more highly finished products; those in which there is a higher production cost, because of the larger element of labor entering into the production. With reference to these products, if the industry is to be fairly protected, somewhat higher duties are required than those fixed in the Democratic bill.

I have this criticism to make of the Democratic bill: So far as I can judge, it has been made without investigation upon any basis, revenue or otherwise. Manifestly, when you take the report of the Tariff Board and consider the cost of production, there are many duties in the Democratic bill that are absolutely prohibitory and would therefore cut off all revenue.

Now, Mr. President, answering more in detail the question of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], paragraph 1, cotton thread, in that paragraph up to and including No. 50 the Democratic rate is 10 per cent, and the rate in the amendment which I offer 7½ per cent.

Because the classification is not exactly the same, it is a little difficult to institute an exact comparison. But comparing the yarns described in the Democratic bill as Nos. 50 to 100 with the yarns described in the amendment which I have offered as Nos. 40 to 80, the rate in the Democratic bill (Nos. 50 to 100) is 15 per cent, and in the amendment I propose (Nos. 40 to 80) 10 per cent; above 100 in the Democratic bill the rate is 20 per cent, and above 80 in the amendment which I have offered, 15 per cent.

Cotton card, laps, roving, and so forth, in the Democratic bill carries a rate of 10 per cent; in the amendment which I have proposed, 5 per cent.

Cotton waste, manufactured or otherwise advanced, in the Democratic bill is 5 per cent; in the amendment which I have presented, 10 per cent.

Spool thread, crochet, embroidery, and so forth, in the Democratic bill is 15 per cent; in the amendment which I have presented they take the same rates of duty as single yarns. In both it is a lower rate of duty.

In the next paragraph it is impossible to make a comparison, because they are differently framed.

The rate on cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, etc., not exceeding No. 50, in the Democratic bill is 15 per cent; and in the amendment which I have presented, provided the cloth contains not to exceed 5 square yards to the pound, the rate is 5 per cent.

The rate on cotton cloth not exceeding No. 100, in the Democratic bill, is 20 per cent; and in my amendment, provided the cloth contains more than 5 and not to exceed 7½ square yards to the pound, the rate is 10 per cent.

The rate on cotton cloth exceeding No. 100, under the Democratic bill, is 25 per cent; in the amendment which I have proposed, provided the cloth contains more than 7½ square yards to the pound, the rate is 15 per cent.

It is not possible to further extend the comparison because of the difference in classification of the two bills. I will say in a general way that it was the purpose of Mr. Hill, and the experts of the Tariff Board working with him, to fix these duties at the lowest possible level, leaving just enough to measure the difference in the cost of production between this country and our principal foreign competitor. That enabled them to go much lower on a large number of items in the cotton schedule than the rates in the tariff bill prepared one year ago by the Democratic Ways and Means Committee, without any information whatever as to production cost. For some reason or other they have not seen fit—I do not know why—to be guided by or to make use of this information which has been gathered and which, I think, is altogether the most valuable document produced by the Tariff Board, the most thorough and most complete. I think anyone who will examine it will have that conviction forced upon him. I can not understand the point of view of a committee—I care nothing about the political phases of the question—that ignores this information in adjusting duties. It is quite as essential to regard the production cost in adjusting duties upon a revenue as upon a protective basis. Otherwise you may fix duties so high as to absolutely shut out foreign goods by making rates prohibitory.

It seems to me, with due deference to the able members of the Democratic Ways and Means Committee of the House, that if they had made use of this information they could have very much reduced the duties in the Democratic bill, thereby not only cutting off excessive protection but reaching a basis where the duties would be productive of some revenue. As I have before stated, many of the rates in the Democratic bill are so high that unquestionably they would absolutely shut out importations.

The bill is unscientific. It is neither a tariff-for-revenue-only nor a protective measure; and yet, Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just a moment. Yet, Mr. President, while I am in public life, I am going to do the best I can, according to the lights I have, to serve the public interest. I do not believe it is in the public interest to strike down the industries of this country. But, as I said a year ago in presenting the amendment to the cotton schedule and the amendment to the wool schedule, the reductions there proposed were reductions which could be made from the high duties then, and now, in existence without imperiling a single industry in this country.

Mr. President, I have been very much gratified in comparing the bill which I presented one year ago with the report of the Tariff Board on the woolen industry and on the cotton industry to find that I was easily within the line of adequate protection at that time. Those bills, if I could have inspired the confidence of my Republican associates here, should have received their support and should have been passed as presented. The President, in his veto of the wool bill this year, asserts that the duties upon raw wool should be as much as 35 per cent; that a 35 per cent duty would be protective. That was the duty fixed in the bill which I offered in the Senate a year ago, and for which I could get no Republican support outside of seven or eight votes upon this side. As a matter of fact, a critical study of the Tariff Board report on wool and woolens shows that a duty of 29 per cent on raw wool is protective and that the duties on the manufactures of wool fixed in the bill reported by the conference committee, both last year and this, and vetoed by the President, were fairly and justly protective.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether the so-called Hill bill received the support of the associates of Mr. HILL of the Republican Party in the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say, Mr. President, that, judging from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it did. I find upon the roll call when Mr. HILL'S bill was presented to the House as a substitute for the Democratic bill, that it received the votes of his Republican associates upon the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator inform us as to what the average percentage of the Hill bill is as compared with the Democratic bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is 25 per cent as against 27 per cent, the average of the Democratic bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is, on the average?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is the average.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator has been a very close student, as we all know, of tariff matters, and I have no doubt he has carefully examined the report of the Tariff Board. I should like his expression of opinion as to whether the findings of that board represent the conclusions of fair-minded and capable men or whether they seem to be distorted by either interest or prejudice.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have very great respect for some of the work of that board and for some of the members of that board; I do not like to indulge here on the floor in any personal criticism of gentlemen who are not present and can not answer for themselves. There have been reports on some of the tariff schedules made by that board with which I can not bring myself to agree. I might go further than that, but I prefer not to do so at this time and in this place.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Wisconsin will realize my purpose in asking the question. I imagine that few of the Senators and few of the Members of the other House, for that matter, have had time to look over the Tariff Board report, and, knowing that the Senator has given a great deal of time and study to this question, I for one would largely rely upon his view as to the accuracy of those findings. I agree with the Senator that whatever action we take, whether upon the protective basis or the revenue basis, it is very important that we should ascertain the facts. We ourselves have not the time to ascertain the facts, and therefore the obligation rests upon us to see that some impartial board is organized that will inquire into the facts. I was desirous of having the Senator's opinion as to the findings, particularly with reference to this cotton schedule. Is the Senator satisfied with those findings?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not hesitate to say, Mr. President, that the investigation of the cotton schedule has been more thorough and scientific than any other schedule reported by the board. I think anyone who examines the report on cottons will be impressed particularly with the accuracy and thoroughness of the investigation of the cotton schedule.

I do not think, Mr. President, that I ought to take the time of the Senate further than to add, with respect to cotton yarns, that the Tariff Board finds the difference in the cost of production between this and competing countries to be from 3 to 11 per cent (without noting the fractions). On cotton cloth the board says:

> In the case of a large variety of plain goods the labor cost of turning yarn into cloth in the United States is not greater, and in some cases is lower than in England.

That is absolutely so.

I am thoroughly convinced, Mr. President, that duties in excess of those fixed in the amendment which I have offered here could not be justified on the principle upon which we base our support of a protective tariff. I want the opportunity to vote for a bill that is consistently protective, reducing the duties to the difference in the costs of production, as indicated.

I want to say now that, if the substitute fails to carry, I shall vote for the Democratic bill. It is not a consistent bill; its duties are not related; some of them are so high as to be prohibitory; in a few of the paragraphs they are lower than they ought to be to be protective; but, taken all together, if it were to be enacted into law it would be a great relief to the people of this country from the extortionate duties which are fixed by the Payne-Aldrich tariff law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names, and a quorum of the Senate is present. The question is upon the amendment in the nature of a substitute submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SIMMONS. On that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNE], who is not in the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MASSEY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], and, on account of his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia (when Mr. SWANSON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SWANSON] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MASSEY]. I make this announcement in relation to all votes taken to-day.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. In his absence, I will withhold my vote. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am requested to announce the pair of the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am requested to announce, for the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], that he is unavoidably absent, and that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to announce for the day that the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce that the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] is paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER].

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 46, as follows:

YEAS—14.

Borah	Crawford	Kenyon	Townsend

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to reserve the amendment as to the repeal of certain parts of the reciprocity act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the reserved amendment made, as in Committee of the Whole, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, adopted an amendment to add to the bill a new section, to be known as section 4, as follows:

> SEC. 4. That sections 1 and 3 of the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and are hereby, repealed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, do I understand the amendment only covers sections 1 and 3 of the reciprocity act?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if the amendment as voted on as in Committee of the Whole did not repeal the whole Canadian reciprocity act?

Mr. SIMMONS. It repealed all of it, except that part of it which relates to print paper, pulp wood, and wood pulp—in other words, it repealed that part of it which has never gone into force and effect, and retained that part of it which is now in force. It is along the lines of the Bacon amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe the sentiment of the Senate has been expressed a number of times upon that amendment, and it has generally included the repeal of the whole act. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment, if it is proposed only to repeal sections 1 and 3.

Mr. PENROSE. It may not be necessary to call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. STONE. I desire simply to say that I am personally opposed to the repeal of any part of the reciprocity act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it; the noes have it, and the amendment is not concurred in.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand the Chair to declare that the amendment was not concurred in?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think the Senate understood the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Utah asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMOOT. I said that I should call for the yeas and nays, but withdrew the request until on a viva voce vote the result was declared by the Chair. Then, if the result had not been as stated by the Chair, I intended to ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it would be well to have that amendment read again, so that we may all understand its purport.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. As in Committee of the Whole an amendment was adopted at the end of the bill to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That sections 1 and 3 of the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and are hereby, repealed.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, is it in order at this time to move an amendment to the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. OLIVER. I move to strike out the words "sections one and three of," in line 1, and to substitute the word "is" for the word "are," before the word "hereby," in the last line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "sections one and three of"; also to strike out the word "are" and to insert the word "is" in lieu thereof in the last line; so as to read:

That the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and is hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, let me understand exactly what the question is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary will again state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment adopted, as in Committee of the Whole, it is proposed to strike out the words "sections 1 and 3 of," in the first line, and in the fourth line, before the word "hereby," to strike out "are" and insert "is," so that if amended it will read:

SEC. 4. That the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and is hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair to the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. He being absent, I am compelled to withhold my vote.

Mr. MASSEY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer it to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], I withhold my vote on account of his absence.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 31, as follows:

So Mr. OLIVER's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] for the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair, and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I am informed by his colleague that he would probably vote "nay" upon this amendment, and I should vote "yea." He being absent, I am compelled to withhold my vote.

Mr. MASSEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called.) I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I transfer it to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTIN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). On account of the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], with whom I have a pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair as heretofore mentioned.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHIVELY. My colleague [Mr. KERN] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CRANE], who is absent from the city, with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think my colleague [Mr. GRONNA], if present, would vote "yea" on this proposition, and I therefore transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]; that is, just upon this one proposition.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE rose.

Mr. McCUMBER. Unless the Senator from Wisconsin has information to the contrary.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the senior Senator from North Dakota that the junior Senator from North Dakota would vote for this amendment. Indeed, the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] in offering it, did so on behalf of the junior Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Assuming that he would do so, I will make the transfer and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 9, as follows:

YEAS—51.

So the amendment offered by Mr. KENYON on behalf of Mr. GRONNA was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SIMMONS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I announce my pair with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The pair of my colleague [Mr. SWANSON] has been announced. I simply desire to say that if he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. GARDNER], and the fact that he is paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have heretofore announced the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH], and I wish to say that if he were present, on this question he would vote "nay."

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I transfer my pair as heretofore announced and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I announce for the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] that he is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence from the city of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. He has a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 19, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

FUR-SEAL CONVENTION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts, the Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 921) which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Under the fur-seal convention entered into by the United States with Great Britain, Japan, and Russia on the 7th of July, 1911, which was approved by the Senate on July 24, 1911, and ratified on December 12, 1911, this Government agreed to pay the sum of $200,000 to Great Britain and the sum of $200,000 to Japan when the convention went into effect; and in my message to Congress of December 7, 1911, the attention of Congress was especially called to the necessity for legislation on the part of the United States for the purpose of fulfilling the obligations assumed under the convention. In view of the omission of Congress up to the present time to adopt any legislation to carry out the obligations of this Government under this convention, it becomes incumbent upon me again to call the subject to the attention of Congress and to urge the importance of enacting at the earliest possible moment, and at this session of Congress, the legislation necessary to enable this Government to make the payments to Great Britain and Japan as required by this convention, and also to fulfill its other obligations thereunder in so far as legislation is necessary for that purpose.

The international conference at which the convention under consideration was agreed upon was held at the urgent invitation of the United States, and the acceptance of that invitation by the other parties was secured only after protracted negotiations and at the repeated request of the United States, and, notwithstanding these circumstances, the United States is now the only one of the four parties to the convention which has failed to adopt any legislation for the purpose of giving effect to the obligations imposed by the convention.

In this connection I desire also to call briefly to the attention of Congress the question of the policy to be pursued by this Government with reference to the regulation of the fur-seal herds within the jurisdiction of the United States. The convention reserves to the United States the right at any time and from time to time to suspend altogether the taking of sealskins on the islands and shores within its jurisdiction, and to impose such restrictions and regulations upon the total number of skins to be taken in any season and the manner, times, and places of taking them as may seem necessary to protect and preserve the seal herd or to increase its number. This, therefore, is a subject which may properly be dealt with by Congress, and it is essential in dealing with it not only to fulfill the obligations imposed upon the United States by the letter and the spirit of the convention, but also to consider the interests of the other parties to the convention, for their cooperation is necessary to make it an effective and permanent settlement of the fur-seal controversy.

Ever since the question of land killing of seals was subjected to scientific investigation, soon after the fur-seal controversy arose nearly 25 years ago, this Government has invariably insisted throughout the protracted and almost continuous diplomatic negotiations which have ensued for the settlement of this controversy that the progressive diminution of the herd was due to the killing of seals at sea, and that if pelagic sealing was discontinued the polygamous habits of the seals would make it possible to kill annually on land a large number of surplus males without detriment to the reproductive capacity of the herd and without interfering with the normal growth of the size of the herd. The position thus taken by the United States has always been put forward and relied on by the United States in urging that an international agreement should be entered into prohibiting pelagic sealing; and it is obvious that one of the considerations which induced Great Britain and Japan to enter into this convention prohibiting their subjects from pelagic sealing was the expectation that the position thus taken by the United States was well founded and that the skins falling to the share of those Governments from the land killing of seals, as provided for in this convention, would compensate them for abandoning the taking of sealskins at sea.

With these considerations in mind, I feel called upon to suggest the inadvisability of adopting legislation, the effect of which is to require this Government to suspend altogether the killing of seals on land before it has actually been proved by the test of experience and scientific investigation that such suspension of killing "is necessary to protect and preserve the seal herd." The other Governments might justly complain if this Government should deprive them of their expected share of the skins taken on land by prohibiting all land killing unless we can show by satisfactory evidence that this source was adopted as the result of changed conditions which justify a change in our former attitude on the subject. In this connection it should be noted that, since the fur-seal business has been taken over by the Government and no private interests are now concerned in making a profit out of it, there is no urgent necessity for imposing by legislation stringent limitations upon land killing. Legislation on this subject, therefore, may well be postponed until after the enactment of legislation necessary to give effect to our obligations under this convention.

It must also be remembered that this convention runs for a fixed period of only 15 years and can be terminated at the end of that period by any of the parties, so that it is of the utmost importance that this Government should deal with this subject not only in a way which will satisfy the other parties interested that they are receiving their fair share of the increase of the herd resulting from the cessation of pelagic sealing, but also in such a way as to enable this Government to demonstrate that the killing of the surplus male seals on land is not detrimental to the welfare of the herd. It is evident, however, that this question can not fairly be tested if land killing and pelagic sealing are both prohibited at the same time, and it would be most unfortunate if we should lose the opportunity, which is now presented for the first time by virtue of this convention, of demonstrating by the test of actual experience the soundness of the position maintained by us throughout the controversy, and upon the soundness of which depends the permanent solution of this question in the manner provided for in this convention.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 14, 1912.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message from the President of the United States will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] for a conference report upon an appropriation bill. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on House bill 18985, the pension appropriation bill, which will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
August 8, 1912.

Resolved, That the House adheres to its amendments to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 2, 3, and 4, and that the House adheres to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 5, 9, 10, and 11 to the bill (H. R. 18985) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, that the Senate may be apprised of the parliamentary status of this bill, I think it necessary for me to make a brief explanation of its condition.

The bill was passed by the House, reported by the Senate committee, and amended by that committee, which amendments were agreed to by the Senate. The bill then went to the House and the House refusing to concur in the Senate amendments asked for a conference and appointed their conferees. Upon the message coming to the Senate the Senate insisted upon its amendments, agreed to the conference asked by the House, and appointed conferees for that purpose.

The matter was under discussion for about two months by the committee of conference of the two Houses, and we were unable to come to an agreement upon the one proposition, that of the abolition of the pension agencies and other amendments which related directly thereto. Finally, the conferees of the two Houses agreed to report as far as they had proceeded in respect to their agreement and to report the particular portions on which they were unable to agree. Each body then again took the matter under consideration. The Senate voted, on the motion of the chairman of the conferees on the part of the Senate, to insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference. This was carried and the Senate again appointed conferees.

When this message reached the House no action was taken on it for some time, but finally the House took action in the shape of the report which has just been read to the Senate. In other words, they do not reappoint their conferees, and by their action the rights of the conferees of the House are abolished, as I understand the status there, and the House acted directly upon the subject matter. In their action they adhere to their attitude in the first instance, but agree upon certain amendments.

The effect of those amendments is to continue the life of the agencies until December 31, 1912. Having no conferees to discuss the matter with, it was necessary for the conferees on the part of the Senate, or at least one of them, to see what terms could possibly be made with the House in the matter of an agreement. I think the House will be willing at this time to make an amendment which will conform to this proposition, that the agencies shall be continued until the 31st day of January, 1913; that all the agencies, instead of the 17, shall then be abolished, and that the work shall thereafter be performed wholly within the Pension Bureau. This would require, of course, the necessity of a disbursing clerk to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, who would hold the same position as other important clerks, except that his duties would be practically the same as those of the pension agent in the city of Washington.

There are two reasons why, if we are going to abolish the agencies, all should be abolished and a disbursing clerk be appointed within the bureau. One reason is that upon the death of the agent there would be no other appointment made without the confirmation of the Senate, and this might be delayed a time. Another reason is that the clerks in the pension agencies are distinct from those in the Pension Office. The appropriation that is made for clerk hire in the Pension Office in the city of Washington could not be carried, under the construction placed by the commissioner, and I think he is right, to the payment of clerks in the agencies.

Therefore I have drafted a number of amendments. I think the only way now that we can get at it, inasmuch as the House has no conferees, is for the Senate to ignore its action heretofore taken in the appointment of conferees and to act directly upon the bill itself. I have therefore prepared certain amendments, which I will ask the Senate to agree to.

I desire to say, Mr. President, that I am of the same opinion I have been as to this method of forcing a legislative proposition through either House. The method I refer to, of tacking the proposition to an appropriation bill, is certainly pernicious, where one of the Houses is opposed, and positively opposed, to the legislation. The only way that this legislation could possibly be secured would be upon an appropriation bill. In other words, in plain English, it means that we will starve the soldiers until those who feel that they would like to retain the agencies in order to get the appropriations for the soldiers will agree to the abolition of the agencies. We are now nearly a month behind. It will require at least $10,000,000 to pay what was due on the 4th of August. Many of the soldiers who are dependent entirely upon this pension are writing the department and writing other Senators asking for speedy action upon this appropriation bill. It is heeding their requests, rather than acting upon my own judgment and wish, that I have concluded to ask the Senate to concede the abolition of the agencies.

Before I do that, Mr. President, to show that the Grand Army of the Republic still adhere to former resolutions concerning the agencies, I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at its forty-second national encampment; also a resolution adopted by the Department of Maine, of the Grand Army of the Republic, and also of the Department of Pennsylvania. I will not ask that they be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request will be complied with.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Resolution adopted by national encampment Grand Army of the Republic.

Resolved, That the members of the forty-second national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, for themselves and for all whom they represent, respectfully and earnestly appeal to our President to withhold his approval from any plan of consolidation of agencies which may, and likely will, work inconvenience and hardship to the aged and infirm survivors of the Civil War and their dependents, who prayerfully petition that our President will let "well enough alone" and preserve present methods and policy in the payment of pensions, which have won the approval for over 30 years of expert officials and patriotic citizens.

The national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, assembled at Toledo, Ohio, in forty-second annual session, expressing, they are certain, the opinion of the entire membership of the organization, respectfully and earnestly suggests to the President that he withhold approval of the plans proposed for abolishing the present system of payments of pensions through the pension agencies.

We firmly believe that the change proposed will not be more economical, and that it can not fail to work hardship and inconvenience upon thousands of aged and infirm pensioners accustomed for so many years to the present improved system, which insures prompt correction of errors through well-known and reliable bonded agencies and secures prompt payment of money due when most needed.

Resolution adopted by the Department of Maine, Grand Army of the Republic.

Resolved, That the Department of Maine, Grand Army of the Republic, at this, its forty-first annual encampment, do individually and collectively wish to express its sincere thanks for and appreciation of the active and energetic manner with which our Senators and Representatives have labored in behalf of the retention of the pension agencies throughout the United States; and

Whereas the retention of these agencies is to be a matter for the President of the United States to decide: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this encampment do hereby most respectively request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their good offices with the President to retain these long-established agencies for the benefit of the thousands of pensioners in this and other States.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to each of the Senators and Representatives and a copy to the national encampment.

Resolution adopted by the Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic.

Resolved, That the thanks of the Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, be extended to the Senators and Members of Congress who by their influence defeated the proposition to abolish the pension agencies as now located throughout the country. These agencies were established, not only for the payment, but also for the convenience of the veterans, their widows and orphans, and the consolidation of these agencies at Washington would, in our opinion, result in real hardship to the pensioners. Hence, the Grand Army of the Republic of Pennsylvania tenders the thanks and gratitude of every pensioner in this department to those Members of Congress whose votes defeated the scheme of consolidation of the agencies.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think that the only way to deal with this matter is to now take it up by propositions of amendment, taking each one separately rather than to ask for a vote on all the amendments at once. I therefore move that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 5. The amendment numbered 5 is for examination and inspection of pension agencies and the appropriation made therefor. If we abolish the agencies, of course we will not need that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota moves that the Senate recede from the amendment which he has stated and which will be reported by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 2, the following:

For examination and inspection of pension agencies as provided by the final provision of the act of August 8, 1882, amending section 4876 of the Revised Statutes, $1,500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from North Dakota.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move as a substitute for the House amendment to the amendment of the Senate:

That the Senate recede from its amendment No. 5.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said House amendment insert the following:

"For salaries of 18 agents for the payment of pensions, at the rate of $4,000 per annum each, during the first 7 months of the fiscal year 1913, $42,000.

"For salary of 1 disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions, to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at the rate of $4,000 per annum, during the last 5 months of the fiscal year 1913, $1,666.67; and from and after the 31st day of January, 1913, there shall be one disbursing clerk in the Bureau of Pensions, to be appointed as aforesaid, and who shall receive a salary at the rate of $4,000 per annum; and section 4778 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment of agents for the payment of pensions and section 4780 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the establishment of agencies by the President of the United States are hereby repealed, to take effect from and after the 31st day of January, 1913, and the existing pension agencies are abolished from and after said date."

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator's proposed amendment, it postpones the abolition of the agencies for about one month; that is, the House amendment fixed the abolition of these agencies on the 31st day of December of this year, and the proposed amendment fixes the time of the abolition of the agencies the 31st day of January next.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct. There is only one month's difference.

Mr. SHIVELY. In the next place, it creates the position of disbursing agent here at Washington at a salary of $4,000 per year. In the third place, it provides the necessary appropriation for the agencies pending their abolition.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from North Dakota.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now move that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said House amendment insert the following:

"For clerk hire and other services at 18 pension agencies during the first seven months of the fiscal year 1913 and in the office of the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions during the last five months of the fiscal year 1913, and including not exceeding $10,000 for expenses of consolidating and removing records and equipment of pension agencies, $375,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That estimates in detail shall be submitted for the fiscal year 1914 and annually thereafter for clerks and others employed in the office of the disbursing clerk for the payment of pensions and the amounts to be paid to each."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question. In all these agencies there are clerks. In the total, I suppose, there are a considerable number of clerks. They are all in the classified service; they have all been appointed in the regular way; and it seems to me that it would be a great hardship if they could not be employed here to do the work for which the additional clerks would be required. I do not think others ought to be taken freshly from the civil-service register and put into their places. I think they have a prior claim to employment, if they desire to come here.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in the amendments which I propose there is nothing whatever that deals with that subject, for the reason that I did not consider it as at all necessary. After being in the classified service under the Interior Department, they, of course, would be immediately transferable to another bureau in that department; and I assume that, having the right to hold a position as long as there are positions under the classified service, the department would be compelled to give them a transfer if they should request it. I understand that to be the law now. But if we thought it necessary, of course, we could provide—and I am certain that the House would have no objection—that all the clerks in these agencies, upon the abolition of the agencies, should be immediately transferable to the Bureau of Pensions. I assume, however, that they will go there without an express provision to that effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I now move that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said House amendment, insert the following:

"For rent of pension agency at New York, N. Y., during the first seven months of the fiscal year 1913, $2,479.17, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I now move that the Senate further insist on its amendments numbered 9, 10, and 11.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. What were the amendments included in the Senator's last motion, if the Senator please?

Mr. MCCUMBER. My last motion was that the Senate still further insist on its amendments numbered 9, 10, and 11. We have already agreed to a correction.

Mr. SHIVELY. That is all right.

Mr. MCCUMBER. This, I believe, covers the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has some doubt as to the parliamentary situation. Has the Senator from North Dakota presented a conference report?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I can hardly call it a conference report, for it was a message that came over from the other House. It has not come as a conference report, but as an act of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So that the papers will now be returned?

Mr. MCCUMBER. The papers are to go back to the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are to be returned to the other House, with the amendments.

FUR-SEAL CONVENTION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16571) to give effect to the convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the north Pacific Ocean, concluded at Washington July 7, 1911.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill be now read. There is only one amendment reported by the committee to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as requested.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, after line 2, the Committee on Foreign Relations report an amendment to strike out the following:

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, or his authorized agents, shall have authority to receive on behalf of the United States any and all fur-seal skins taken as provided in the thirteenth and fourteenth articles of said convention and tendered for delivery by the Governments of Japan and Great Britain in accordance with the terms of said articles; and all skins which are or shall become the property of the United States from any source whatsoever shall be sold by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in such market, at such times, and in such manner as he may deem most advantageous; and the proceeds of such sale or sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. And the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall likewise have authority to determine the number of fur seals to be taken annually on the Pribilof Islands, or any other islands or shores of the waters mentioned in the first article of said convention and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to which any seal herds hereafter resort, and to direct the taking of the same: Provided, however, That no seals shall be killed in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1912, except such as may be necessary for food purposes only: And provided further, That no seals shall be killed at any time except 3-year-old males not needed for breeding purposes: And provided further, That the number of 3-year-old males selected from among the finest and most perfect seals of that age found on the hauling grounds to be reserved for breeding purposes in each year ending August 1 shall not be fewer than the following: In 1913, 2,000; in 1914, 2,500; in 1915, 3,000; in 1916, 3,500; in 1917, and in each year thereafter until 1921, inclusive, 4,000; and in 1922, and in each year thereafter until 1926, inclusive, 5,000; to deliver to the authorized agents of the Canadian Government and the Japanese Government the skins to which they are entitled under the provisions of the tenth article of said convention; to pay to Great Britain and Japan such sums as they are entitled to receive, respectively, under the provisions of the eleventh article of said convention; to retain such skins as the United States may be entitled to retain under the provisions of the eleventh article of said convention; and to do or perform, or cause to be done or performed, any and every act which the United States is authorized or obliged to do or perform by the provisions of the tenth, eleventh, thirteenth, and fourteenth articles of said convention; and to enable the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to carry out the provisions of the said eleventh article there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000.

And in lieu thereof insert:

SEC. 11. That from and after the approval of this act all killing of fur seals on the Pribilof Islands, or anywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States in Alaska, shall be suspended for a period of 10 years, and shall be, and is hereby, declared to be unlawful; and all punishments and penalties heretofore enacted for the illegal killing of fur seals shall be applicable and inflicted upon offenders under this section: Provided, That this prohibition shall not apply to the annual killing on the Pribilof Islands of such male seals as are needed to supply food, clothing, and boat skins for the natives on the islands, as is provided for in article 11 of said convention; the skins of all seals so used for food shall be preserved and annually sold by the Government, and proceeds of such annual sales shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That at the expiration of the said 10 years' suspension of all commercial killing as above provided, said killing may be resumed under authority of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided, however, That the number of 3-year-old males selected from among the finest and most perfect seals of that age found on the hauling grounds, to be reserved for breeding purposes, in each year ending August 1, shall not be fewer than the following: In 1922, and in each year thereafter until 1926, inclusive, 5,000. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor, or his authorized agents, shall have authority to receive on behalf of the United States any and all fur-seal skins taken as provided in the thirteenth and fourteenth articles of said convention and tendered for delivery by the Governments of Japan and Great Britain in accordance with the terms of said articles; and all skins which are or shall become the property of the United States from any source whatsoever shall be sold by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in such market, at such times, and in such manner as he may deem most advantageous; and the proceeds of such sale or sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall likewise have authority to deliver to the authorized agents of the Canadian Government and the Japanese Government the skins to which they are entitled under the provisions of the tenth article of said convention; to pay to Great Britain and Japan such sums as they are entitled to receive, respectively, under the provisions of the eleventh article of said convention; to retain such skins as the United States may be entitled to retain under the provisions of the eleventh article of said convention; and to do or perform, or cause to be done or performed, any and every act which the United States is authorized or obliged to do or perform by the provisions of the tenth, eleventh, thirteenth, and fourteenth articles of said convention; and to enable the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to carry out the provisions of the said eleventh article there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400,000.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when I reported this bill to the Senate——

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Cummins	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Curtis	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Bourne	Dillingham	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smoot
Briggs	Gallinger	Oliver	Stone
Bristow	Hitchcock	Overman	Sutherland
Burnham	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Thornton
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Warren
Catron	Kenyon	Pomerene	Williams
Chamberlain	Lodge	Root	Works
Clapp	McCumber	Sanders
Crawford	Martin, Va.	Shively
Cullom	Massey	Simmons

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when I reported this bill to the Senate some months ago, I stated that the committee was unanimously in favor of the bill and of the necessity for the enactment of legislation of this character, but that they differed in regard to the amendment which was proposed striking out section 11 and inserting a new section.

The difference between the section stricken out and the section proposed really can be reduced to a single point. The House of Representatives in their bill made a closed season for the first year and after that allowed a limited killing of young bulls, increasing the limit somewhat from year to year. Of course, it remains entirely closed as to females. A majority of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate changed this by proposing that there should be a closed season of 10 years for all seals, preventing the killing of young bulls at all during that period. That is the point of difference between the provision of the House and the provision suggested by the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. President, I desire, first, to call the attention of the Senate to the purpose and the necessity of this act. We made a treaty with Great Britain, Japan, and Russia, which was sent in on July 22, 1911, and was ratified by the Senate shortly after that time. The purpose of that treaty was the abolition of pelagic sealing. The United States for many years, ever since the decision of the Arbitral Tribunal of Paris, has been laboring to get an agreement with these three nations for the abolition of pelagic sealing, believing that it was owing to pelagic sealing that the herd was being rapidly extinguished. Therefore the purpose of this treaty was one for which the United States had long labored, and of course the object was, having got rid of pelagic sealing, to rehabilitate the herds. We agreed, under the treaty, to make certain payments to Great Britain and Japan in compensation for the skins which they would lose by the stopping of pelagic sealing, that money to be refunded as the killing was committed with the gradual rehabilitation of the herds.

That pledge or promise to pay $200,000 to both Japan and England is now nearly seven months overdue. It is within the power of either of those countries, if they choose to take advantage of this delay in action on our part, to abrogate those treaties. The abrogation of the treaties would lead to a resumption of pelagic sealing and the extinction of the herds in a very short time. I merely mention that to bring home to the Senate the very great importance of immediate action upon this bill—action before this session of Congress closes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what is the cause of the seven months' delay?

Mr. LODGE. Simply the delay of Congress in passing the bill; that is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Delay in both Houses.

Mr. LODGE. Chiefly here; and I ought to add that Great Britain, Japan, and Russia have all passed the necessary legislation to fulfill their part of the treaty, while we, who have sought this treaty and labored for it for years, are the only Nation of the four behindhand with their legislation.

I mention that to show the present condition and the need of immediate action. It has no bearing on the question of the closed season, which is the matter in difference between the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the House of Representatives. I ought to say, further, in order to show the condition in which we are now in relation to the other signatories of this treaty, that two of the most important signatories regard the adoption of a closed season of 10 years as a breach of the treaty in spirit, although not technically so. We have the right under the treaty to establish a closed season, and if it became necessary they would cheerfully concede it; but they hold that we should not establish a long closed season, preventing entirely the killing of young bulls, until at least the purpose of the treaty had been thoroughly tested. That is what has been the contention of the United States throughout—that if we could stop pelagic sealing the herds would revive.

Mr. President, they take the view that a period of 10 years——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. I understand that by this treaty we make provision for paying each one of these nations a sum equivalent to their loss in case we establish a closed season. Have any representations been made by them; and if so, by whom?

Mr. LODGE. The nations which have unofficially made representations on this point are Great Britain and Japan, which are the two principally in interest.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Unofficially?

Mr. LODGE. Unofficially, but directly. They have fulfilled all their obligations. What they desire from all the herds—our herd, Russia's herd, Japan's herd, if it can be done without injury to the herd—are skins and money; and their proposition is that we should not make a closed season for so long a period as 10 years, which is two-thirds the life of the treaty, until, at least, we have discovered whether the herds would not revive under the abolition of pelagic sealing.

They do not deny at all our right to do it, but they say it is contrary to the spirit of the treaty.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Is it not true that that was one of the objects in making the treaty, and was arranged for, and by the terms of the treaty is not the right recognized in our Government to make a closed season if it sees fit?

Mr. ROOT. Not if it sees fit.

Mr. LODGE. Not if we see fit, but if found necessary. Moreover, I know perfectly well that while we have the technical right to a closed season for 15 years, they would regard it as entirely in violation of the spirit of the treaty.

The Senator and the Senate will do well to remember that if they choose to take advantage of technicalities they are justified in abrogating these treaties to-morrow.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I did not make the inquiry for the purpose of controverting any position the Senator from Massachusetts may take, but to bring out clearly what is the condition.

Mr. LODGE. I am obliged to the Senator from Vermont. I know that was his purpose. This is a case where it is not desirable to stand too much on technicalities.

I have tried to define the situation as regards this law in its relation to the treaties and the difference which has arisen between the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the House of Representatives. I stated there was a difference of opinion in the committee. I am one of those who think that the House bill is correct. The House held very elaborate hearings on this subject. They went into it with the utmost thoroughness. Their chairman, Mr. SULZER, of New York, has been a great many times in Alaska and in these islands, and has personal familiarity with the whole question. The committee, without any distinction of party, of course, by a large majority, reported this bill and carried it through the House, defeating the amendment which is now proposed by the majority of the Foreign Relations Committee. I think that the House, relying upon the testimony they took, are correct in their bill. I think that is the bill which ought to be passed.

I may also say, that so far as I have been able to learn, the scientific men of the country, with only one exception—Prof. Hornaday, of New York—are unanimously in favor of the House bill, which also has the approval of the Commissioner of Fisheries, who has been many years in that important office and has given this matter great attention.

That is the situation. I do not propose to argue in detail now the question of the effect of the method proposed by the House or the need of an absolutely closed season on the young bulls lasting for so long a period as 10 years. But I think we ought to follow the example of the House and test the proposition which we have been arguing and insisting upon to all these nations for all these years, and not legislate in a way which they may regard as a violation of the spirit of the treaty until we have shown that, as the treaty says, it is necessary to do so.

We must remember that the life of this treaty is only 15 years. It is most desirable that we should go on so far as possible in entire harmony with the other three signatory nations, in order that we may have the treaty renewed, and that this may be the permanent abolition of pelagic sealing. It is hoped and believed that under the influence of the four signatory powers this may be extended to include other countries and protect the seal herd elsewhere—in the Southern Hemisphere. To continue 15 years and then be abandoned would return us to pelagic sealing, and I have no question that the continuance of pelagic sealing means the very prompt extinction of the herd.

That is the situation as it stands between the Houses. That, briefly, is the difference between the amendment proposed by the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the measure proposed by the House; and I do not desire to detain the Senate further, because I know how much we have to do, and I shall say nothing further.

Mr. POMERENE rose.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. It is just for a question. I understand it to be the Senator's judgment that the policies provided in the House bill will not check the increase in the young seals.

Mr. LODGE. It is my belief that it will lead to an increase. I share that belief with many experts on the subject. But, however that may be, if we find at the expiration of a year that the destruction of a limited number of surplus bulls is going to prevent the increase in the herd, it will be perfectly easy for us at any moment to make a closed season, and we shall then be justified by the facts. We are not now.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Have we not had an example which illustrates the wisdom of the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts? I refer to the period during the years 1891, 1892, and 1893, when we had a sort of modus vivendi, as I understand, which gave an open season during that time, and it was discovered that the destruction which the Senator referred to actually did take place, and the herd was not increased but decreased at the end of three years, due to the very reason the Senator has mentioned—the destruction of the cows and the calves on the rookeries.

Mr. LODGE. On the rookeries. I think that has been the experience, and it is fully set forth in the House report.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think a statement of this case should be made at the outset, so that it may appear that the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations in proposing a closed season of 10 years during which no seals shall be killed upon the Pribilof Islands, except those necessary for the food of the natives, have no intention of violating, either in spirit or in letter, the terms of the treaty, but are attempting effectively to carry out the spirit of the treaty in the only way in which it can be carried out.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] has called attention to the fact that the treaty specifically provides in consideration of the promise by the United States that we will give to Japan 15 per cent of all the seals killed upon the Pribilof Islands, and to Canada 15 per cent of all the seals killed upon the Pribilof Islands, those countries will stop pelagic sealing, so far as they are concerned, and they also agree, together with Russia, that the United States shall reserve to itself absolutely during the terms of this treaty the power to kill or not to kill seals upon those islands. So much for the statement that we propose to violate the treaty in letter or in spirit. It is not true. We merely propose to exercise our rights under it.

Now I want to say a word in reply to what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has said, that we, the United States, are in default in respect to this treaty. It is true the treaty provided for the payment of $200,000 to Great Britain and $200,000 to Japan upon the ratification of the treaty or within a reasonable time thereafter, and it is true that more than a year has elapsed, due to the delays of legislation, without provision for the payment of that money. But I want to call attention to the fact that that default is not necessarily the fault of Congress. Congress was entitled to a reasonable time within which to consider the legislation for carrying out these treaties. A simple joint resolution could have been passed on suggestion of the administration providing for the payment of this money to those countries, and we would not have been in default.

Because the bill providing legislation has been delayed by the exigencies of legislation, and particularly by the control of those who had it in charge, we are now said to be in default to Japan and are held responsible because we are trying to enact legislation that will be permanent and effective. It is not the fault of those who seek to protect the seals, but the neglect of the administration.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that the destruction of the herd of seals on the Pribilof Islands in the past has been due to pelagic sealing, and he implies that it has been solely due to pelagic sealing. History disproves that statement. Pelagic sealing did not begin to any extent until the early eighties. When Russia had the Pribilof Islands, and she had them until 1868, she had an experience similar to what we have gone through. The killing of the male seals from those islands under the Russian sovereignty went on very much as it has gone on under our administration, and public-spirited men in those days protested to the Russian Government that the seal herd was being destroyed, and men in high places in the Russian Government insisted on that destruction just as men in high places in the Government of the United States to-day are insisting on that destruction. I can read here, if it be necessary, a letter written in 1872 by a Russian upon the islands, in which he recites the historical efforts of public-spirited men a century ago to put a stop to the reckless butchery of seals on the Pribilof Islands, because the herd had been so decimated that it at that time produced only about the same as is annually produced by our herds to-day.

Mr. SHIVELY. Will the Senator permit me? He says the letter was written in 1872.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The letter was written in 1872, and it related to the knowledge of that Russian and to the knowledge of his father, who before him had lived upon the islands. I believe, as I have referred to the letter, it may not be out of place to read it, because it shows a striking parallel between the Russian and the American situation. He recites how the friends of the seal, the friends of this great interest, had petitioned the Russian Government to put a stop to the decimation of the herd. After setting forth the representations at the Russian capital made by Capt. Yahnovsky, he says:

> Why was his advice ignored? Ah, Mr. Elliott, Capt. Yahnovsky was high in the court circles of St. Petersburg. He did not have so much influence, however, as others who were there, too. The times were getting hard for the company. It was failing to make money by reason of the failure of the sea-otter chase. It needed money badly to meet the demands of the investors in its stock who were also members of the Imperial Government. That is the cause of Yahnovsky's failure to have his way. Baronov was getting old and worried over the loss of money to the company, so he was removed. His successors were also worried about money. So instead of resting these seals, in 1820 they resumed the killing and continued to get everything that they could secure up to the close of 1821.

Since that time in our American history efforts of public-spirited Americans to put a stop to the butchery of our valuable seal herd on the Pribilof Islands have been interfered with and defeated by men high in Government place and in political influence at Washington.

It is not altogether the pelagic sealing which has destroyed the herd in the Pribilof Islands from time to time. It is the desire to kill by those who make money out of it, coupled with the political favor which they have possessed to enforce their right to kill.

Pelagic sealing was not known until the early eighties, and yet the Russian herd, by killing, was reduced to such an extent that in 1834 Russians were forced to stop the killing. From 1834 to 1844 the Russians gave a 10 years' rest to the herd and restored it. When that period of rest began she was killing as many seals as we are killing to-day—about 12,000 a year.

What was the result of that period of rest which Russia gave to her herds from 1834 to 1844? The result was that natural causes produced natural effects. The herd revived, its numbers multiplied, and when, in 1844, the killing was resumed it was found possible by care to increase and continue the killing up to the time Alaska was sold to the United States. At that time Russia was killing without injury to the herd as many as 60,000 seals a year. When we took the herd we took it with over 4,000,000 seals in those islands.

What has become of those 4,000,000 seals in that time? We are told that pelagic sealing has decimated the herd. Ah, there is something more than pelagic sealing. Two highly profitable contracts to favored lessees have done their part to ruin that herd. In that period 2,000,000 seals were killed under the leases and 1,000,000 skins have been sold by pelagic seal hunters. The first contract began in 1870 and expired in 1890, and the second contract began in 1890 and expired in 1910.

Referring to this last contract I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the killing under the last lease, which ran from 1890 to 1910, was under the supervision and advice of the very men he quotes and refers to here as authorities, scientists, and naturalists. When that last lease went into effect we had a million seals upon the Pribilof Islands. When the lease expired in 1910 the highest claim was 140,000, in 1911 the highest claim was 131,000, in 1912 it is 127,000.

Mr. LODGE. Had not pelagic sealing been going on all that time?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Pelagic sealing began in 1884, substantially. There were cases of pelagic sealing before that, but there was no organized pelagic sealing upon a large scale until the early eighties. But the Senator can not charge the entire decimation of that herd to pelagic sealing, as I shall show. In the first place, I have shown that the Russian herd was decimated in the same way by similar leases to favored contractors before pelagic sealing was heard of.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is perfectly well aware that the Russian herd was destroyed very largely by the Japanese during the war with Russia, when they got upon the islands and killed cows and bulls indiscriminately?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no such knowledge. I will ask the Senator what year the destruction took place.

Mr. LODGE. During the Japanese war. It was in 1905, was it not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am talking about the period when Russia owned the Pribilof Islands—a hundred years ago.

Mr. LODGE. I did not know the Senator was speaking of so early a date.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Russian herd was yielding no profit. The slaughter had been so great that when the year 1834 was reached Russia had to suspend the killing.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is also aware that from 1820 to 1835 the Russians killed bulls and cows indiscriminately?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. LODGE. I think not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have read all the Russian records that are available, and they state without equivocation that the Russians killed male seals only.

Mr. LODGE. The authority I went on is found in the report of the House committee:

> The vital principle that females should be exempt from slaughter and never disturbed on land was recognized in 1835 for the first time, and thereafter enforced, at first partially and finally rigorously. With these restrictive measures in operation the herd gradually increased.

There is no doubt, I think, of that fact.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The statement is nothing but a dictum of Members of the House of Representatives, but the Russian record shows the contrary.

Mr. LODGE. It is the finding of a committee that has taken testimony, and I think they are pretty well informed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have examined that testimony and much more, and the testimony shows that the Russians killed males only until they were forced by the decimation of the herd to kill yearlings, which we are doing now, and when you kill yearlings you can not tell whether you are killing males or females.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska in this connection, Is it not true that as late as 1903, under the management of the very authorities called upon to regulate the killing of the males, under this very management they were killing females on the islands?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is true; and it is true that they killed females last year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did not the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] say that he saw them caught in the act?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, we are called upon to trust to these very people under a regulation to kill only males, when the evidence has been before us that under like regulations in the past they permit the killing of females.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is true.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to know the name of the party or parties who have been guilty of this alleged violation of the law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will set it forth. The control of the killing of the seals of the Pribilof Islands is vested at the present time in the Department of Commerce and Labor. Until 1903 it was in the Treasury Department. In the Department of Commerce and Labor the supervision of the killing of seals upon the Pribilof Islands comes under the jurisdicton of Mr. Bowers, Director of the Bureau of Fisheries. Mr. Bowers, be it said, was appointed to his present office at the request of Senator Stephen B. Elkins, then a Senator of the United States and a large owner in this lessee company, which was killing seals at a rate which was destroying the herd; and during the whole of Mr. Bowers's administration all of his advice has been to kill, his disposition has been to kill, all of his discretion has been to permit the lessees to kill, and it has gone on in spite of the efforts of Congress to restrain, and in spite of the fact that a senatorial committee, unexpectedly visiting Alaska, caught the lessees in the act of killing, in violation of the law, not only yearlings but females as well.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand that at the time when killing was done under companies in the East the Commissioner of Fisheries had control of it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. LODGE. I do not so understand. I thought the Government of the United States had control now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Government of the United States has control now, and has had for two years.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And during those two years the killing has gone on with just as disgraceful butchery as was done under the lease system.

Mr. LODGE. That is a very controverted point.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a point which I can prove. The Senator speaks of testimony taken in the House of Representatives. I will tell him testimony was taken in the House of Representatives during the last few weeks before the committee to investigate the fur-seal industry, of which Congressman ROTHERMEL, of Pennsylvania, is chairman. The testimony before that committee has proved that in 1910 of 12,920 seals killed 7,773 of them were baby seals killed in violation of law; seals less than 2 years old, mere yearlings. Killed why? Because there were no others to kill; because the herd is at such a decimated stage that they are not able to find seals of older age to kill.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator who gave that testimony?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That testimony was dragged out of Mr. Lembkey, the Government agent upon the islands, who was forced to come there and admit that 7,773 seals were killed in 1910, among them small pups and extra small pups measuring less than 35½ inches in length. There is no doubt about that. The testimony was dragged from him unwillingly, and it proves conclusively that the same kind of killing which the Senator from Minnesota saw on a small scale is now in progress in those islands on a large scale.

Mr. LODGE. I should like very much to hear the Senator read Mr. Lembkey's testimony of the killing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Page 441.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is a good deal of it. I think I have it in briefer form.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to hear what he said about the killing of young seals.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Lembkey, Mr. Bowers, and all the other Government employees—the expert advisers whom the Senator from Massachusetts refers to—were unwilling witnesses. It has been necessary to corkscrew out of these witnesses by cross-examination in the shape of admissions the testimony which has been important, and so it is necessary to read considerable in order to get a comparatively small amount.

Mr. Lembkey was asked these questions:

During the season of 1910, Mr. Lembkey, under your directions, 12,920 fur seals were killed on the seal islands of Alaska. Is that true?

Mr. LEMBKEY. That is the approximate number. I do not remember now without my notes.

Mr. ELLIOTT. In round numbers, 12,920.

Mr. LEMBKEY. All right; in round numbers.

Mr. ELLIOTT. You say you made no record of the measurements of them at all?

Mr. LEMBKEY. No, sir.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Where did you send those 12,920 skins?

Mr. LEMBKEY. I beg your pardon.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Those 12,920 skins—where did you send them?

Mr. LEMBKEY. Where did I send them?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. LEMBKEY. I brought them with me to San Francisco and there placed them on cars of the Southern Pacific Railway Co.

Mr. ELLIOTT. And they went to London——

Mr. LEMBKEY. So far as I know.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Under your certificate?

Mr. LEMBKEY. No; they did not go to London under my authority, at any rate.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Well, under your certificate as "seals not taken under 2 years of age"?

Mr. LEMBKEY. I made no certificate to that effect to the factors. I certified to the department——

Mr. ELLIOTT. That they were "not taken under 2 years of age"?

Mr. LEMBKEY. Yes, sir; I certified that they were not under 2 years of age.

Mr. ELLIOTT. And they went to London by the department's orders?

Mr. LEMBKEY. I do not know just why you said that they went under a certificate from me. That is not exactly right. I did not make any certificate at the time the skins were shipped.

Mr. ELLIOTT. At any rate, they were the same skins?

Mr. LEMBKEY. Oh, yes; they were the same skins.

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is what I am getting at.

Mr. LEMBKEY. All right.

Mr. ELLIOTT. When they arrived in London they were sold as the catch that you had made during the summer of 1910 on the seal islands of Alaska?

Mr. LEMBKEY. I believe so.

* * * * * * *

Mr. ELLIOTT. You know they were sold there, though you were not present?

Mr. LEMBKEY. I have a general idea that they were sold there; yes, sir. I was so informed.

Mr. ELLIOTT. You know before they were sold they were classified, do you not?

Mr. LEMBKEY. I was also informed that they were classified. Naturally they are.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, I ask the Senator who is the man whose testimony he is reading?—so that we can understand the matter better.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He is the Government agent at the Pribilof Islands, under Mr. Bowers, head of the Fisheries Bureau in the Department of Commerce and Labor. He is the man who immediately supervises the butchery.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. NELSON. And Mr. Lembkey was also there when the lessees were in control.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is true, just as Mr. Bowers has been here at the head of the bureau.

Mr. LODGE. That has been repeated, I think, almost enough. Mr. Bowers never had anything to do with the seal fisheries until they were put under his control in 1908——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In 1903.

Mr. LODGE. In 1908, by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I have taken pains to inquire and to ascertain.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to assure the Senator from Massachusetts that the fisheries were put under the bureau of the Department of Commerce and Labor in 1903.

Mr. LODGE. But not under the Commissioner of Fisheries.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state under whom they were? They must have been under some bureau in the department.

Mr. LODGE. They were put under the control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and were not transferred to the Commissioner of Fisheries until 1908—in December, I think.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, he appears in the records as being the one to whom the matter went, and I think the Senator from Massachusetts will find that he is mistaken in the date.

Mr. LODGE. I have that information directly from the department.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator will find that he is mistaken. I think he will find that Mr. Bowers is on record as participating in decisions as to the killing before 1908. I do not think there is any question that he has been in control of the killing since 1903. To continue the testimony:

Mr. ELLIOTT. A classification of the 12,920 fur-seal skins.
Mr. LEMBKEY. Of skins sold in what year?
Mr. ELLIOTT. On December 16, 1910, by the Lampsons. Have you not got it?

This had to be brought out by a series of cross-examinations to procure evidence out of this Government agent.

Mr. LEMBKEY. There is a catalogue of those skins right here, but the classifications are not combined. It is impossible for me to state at the present time just how many middling pups and just how many small pups are included in that classification.
The CHAIRMAN. You will produce the information.
Mr. LEMBKEY. Here it is. I have it right here. I did not know I had it, but I find it among my papers.

I want to say that is a sample of the testimony the man was giving—unwilling testimony, testimony before an authorized committee of the House of Representatives—trying to get at the facts, and this man and his superiors trying to cover them up.

Mr. LEMBKEY. A summary of the classification of the 12,920 salted fur-seal skins of the catch of 1910, sold by Lampson & Co., is as follows: Smalls, 132; large pups, 995; middling pups, 4,011; small pups, 6,205; extra small pups, 1,528; extra small pups, 11; faulty, 38.

If the Senator from Massachusetts is not aware that "small pups and extra small pups" are yearlings, I can prove that fact.

Mr. LODGE. I am aware of the precise contrary; that on the London market small pups are classified as 3 years old. Those are classified as "small pups."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let us continue this investigation of Mr. Lembkey.

Mr. LODGE. I think that correction may as well be made also.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is the Senator's correction?

Mr. LODGE. I say that on the London market, in the trade, "small pups" is the classification for 3-year-old skins. I think the Senator will find that out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator is entirely mistaken. A 3-year-old is no longer a pup.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can demonstrate it to him by the testimony of Mr. Fraser, to whom the skins were sent.

Mr. LODGE. I am using the trade signification.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is entirely mistaken; absolutely so. The trade, on the other hand, defines "small pups and extra small pups" as pups having a certain length and weight.

Mr. LODGE. I am not talking about extra small pups; I am talking about small pups.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I also am talking about small pups.

Mr. LODGE. I say "small pups" on the London market is a term for 3-year-olds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We will continue this testimony.

Mr. LODGE. I know the Senator keeps saying that I am mistaken. Produce the London market trade, and see whether on that I am mistaken. If I am, I will gladly withdraw my statement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can produce the testimony.

Mr. LODGE. I want the London dealers' statement to that effect, and it is impossible to produce it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me, Mr. Lembkey here says that—

The weight of a small pup classified in London as such is 6 pounds 2 ounces, and the weight of an extra small pup is classified in London as 4 pounds and 15 ounces.

Mr. LODGE. Those are the skins.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. A large amount of testimony has been taken by the committee, and it is a little difficult to refer to anything on short notice, but I have a tabulated statement that I have myself made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator goes on in connection with Mr. Lembkey's testimony, here on page 441 of this hearing before the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor in the House, I wish to say that Mr. Lembkey himself testified that of the catch that year, which was 12,900, 7,733 were small and extra small pups.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And Mr. Lembkey admitted, when bound down to it, that those were yearlings, according to the statement which he made.

Mr. LODGE. I want to hear that statement of Mr. Lembkey's read. I do not want to be told of it. I want to hear it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Possibly I can produce it. Here it is:

Mr. ELLIOTT. Now you are prepared to state that 8,004 of them were "small pups" and "extra small pups," are you not?
Mr. LEMBKEY. Seven thousand seven hundred and thirty-three of them, according to this summary, are the skins of small pups and extra small pups.
Mr. ELLIOTT. Very well. Now, you say, Mr. Lembkey, that you have no knowledge or understanding of the method by which the Lampsons have classified that catch of 12,920 skins?
Mr. LEMBKEY. Nothing, except from a statement of Lampson & Co., which you mentioned some time ago as appearing in the records of the Paris tribunal of arbitration.
Mr. ELLIOTT. Have you read the testimony of Mr. Fraser before this committee, on page 30 of Hearing No. 1?

I will say that Mr. Fraser was the factor who received the skins from the Government of the United States. He was a partner in the greatest fur-trading house in the world. His testimony was as follows on the page referred to in the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. When you say "breadth," what do you mean?
Mr. FRASER. The width of the skin. Middling smalls, weight, 11 pounds 1 ounce; length, 46 inches; breadth, 32¼ inches. Smalls, weight 9 pounds 2 ounces; length, 39⅝ inches; breadth, 29 inches. Large pups, weight, 7 pounds 13 ounces; length, 38¾ inches; breadth, 26 inches. Middling pups, weight, 7 pounds; length, 35½ inches; breadth 25½ inches. Small pups, weight, 6 pounds 2 ounces; length, 33¾ inches; breadth, 23½ inches. Extra small pups, weight, 4 pounds 15 ounces; length, 30 inches; breadth, 21½ inches.

But to resume with Mr. Lembkey's testimony:

Mr. LEMBKEY. He is not our representative at all. He is simply the universal auctioneer of skins of all kinds in the world. When skins are to be sold they go to Lampson & Co. He is no more the official agent of the United States than any other broker, if there were other brokers of skins.
Mr. ELLIOTT. He is merely the "broker"?
Mr. LEMBKEY. The broker.
Mr. ELLIOTT. The broker is your agent, is he not?
Mr. LEMBKEY. He is the factor because he takes charge of the goods themselves.
Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Fraser is quoted by you in your testimony as saying that none of these skins——
Mr. LEMBKEY. Mr. Fraser was quoted by me, sir?
Mr. ELLIOTT. By the Lampsons.
Mr. LEMBKEY. I do not remember of having quoted Mr. Fraser at all.
Mr. ELLIOTT. Do you not recite Mr. Lampson's certificate of weight of skins in your testimony, showing that none were taken under 2 years of age?
Mr. LEMBKEY. I cited the London weights of skins which were published in volume 8, page 908, of the proceedings of the Paris Tribunal of Arbitration, at Paris.
Mr. ELLIOTT. Then you cited those which were published in these hearings?
Mr. LEMBKEY. Yes, sir; they were mentioned in these hearings.
Mr. ELLIOTT. Why did you not cite the measurements, Mr. Lembkey?
Mr. LEMBKEY. As I stated to the committee I knew nothing whatever about the measurements.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I shall be glad to get the definition of a yearling, when the Senator reaches it; but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the House bill forbids the killing of any seal under 3 years old, and all this discussion is dealing with a condition that the House bill stops.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator what good it will do to put in the House bill, or in the Senate bill, or in any other bill, a prohibition against the killing of seals under 3 years old when the department is now violating the prohibition against the killing of yearlings and females?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the remedy of the Senator from Nebraska for the present condition of things—which I do not think he correctly states in all respects—appears to be to leave that uncorrected by law which the House bill does correct.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. What the Senator from Massachusetts asserts we ought to do by law, we have attempted to do by the act of April 21, 1910. It was provided in section 1 of that act:

And provided further, That male seals only shall be killed, and that not more than 95 per cent of the 3-year-old male seals shall be killed in any one year.

There is an express limitation confining the killing to 3-year-old seals. What is the good of reenacting legislation so long as you have such administration as we have had for the last two years?

Mr. LODGE. If that is true, then the fault is in the agent, who should be removed.

Mr. NELSON. The fault is in Mr. Bowers and the department here. That is the plain English of it. The fault is in the execution of the law. We may enact a law time and again, but it will do no good so long as we have such officials.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will address the Chair and get permission to interrupt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In connection with the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts about the skins of yearling and 3-year-old seals, I find that Mr. Lembkey testifies:

Mr. Fraser states—

Fraser is the man to whom the skins were handed over, or consigned, or something of that kind—

Mr. Fraser states that small pups—

That is, the skins—

Mr. Fraser states that small pups measured 33¾ inches in length.

Those are the pups which he classes as "small pups." I find on the next page, page 442, that Lembkey says:

The length of a yearling seal on the animal would be, from the tip of the nose to the root of the tail, 39½ inches, in one instance.

What he calls "small pups" were 33¾ inches, and he says that a yearling would measure as much as 39½ inches, so that they must have been the skins of yearlings.

Mr. LODGE. Those are the dry, trimmed skins, as measured in London.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Would the Senator measure them green and allow them to shrink afterwards? That was all gone into before the committee; and it was demonstrated exactly what the length should be of a skin taken from an animal of a certain age.

Without attempting to go into the different pages from which I have culled this testimony, if the Senator will permit me, before I yield I should like to read this statement of the sizes of the yearlings, the 2-year-olds and over:

Seals killed, 1910.

	Number.	Length of skin.	Age.
		Inches.	Years.
Smalls	132	39½	2 or 3
Large pups	995	38¾	2
Middling pups	4,011	35½	2
Small pups	6,205	33¾	1
Extra small pups	1,539	30	1
Faulty	38
Total	12,920

Yearlings, 7,744.

There is no use for the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The size in inches which the Senator has stated refers to the skin.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To the skin after it has been taken off.

Mr. WILLIAMS. These figures show the length of the small pup to be 33¾ inches.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. ROOT. I rise merely to ask the Senator from what he is reading. What was the paper from which he was last reading?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was reading from a tabulated statement that I had made up by taking the testimony of Lembkey, of Fraser, and others who testified before the committee. Fraser testified as to the technical designation; Lembkey testified as to the sizes. Lembkey testified that he had measured three yearlings and found them on an average 39½ inches long. He said when you take skins off you leave 3 inches on, so that the average size of a 1-year-old skin salted was 36½ inches, and yet——

Mr. ROOT. It was the Senator's own statement of his conclusion, and not anybody's evidence.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Lembkey testified that a 1-year-old had at a minimum a skin whose length would be 36½ inches, and the records show that 7,733 of the skins were 33¾ inches, and some of them were as low as 30 inches.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, I will read just what Lembkey says:

Mr. LEMBKEY. The length of a yearling seal on the animal would be, from the tip of the nose to the root of the tail, 39½ inches in one instance and 36½ in another instance—

This is from the hearings before the House committee.

Mr. ROOT. What page?

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is on page 442. On the next page of the hearings before the House committee Mr. Lembkey said:

If it was—

Meaning the animal—

39½ inches long it would leave it—

That is, the skin—

If it was 39½ inches long it would leave it 36½ inches. That is, all the animal from the tip of the nose to the root of the tail would be 39½ inches long. Three inches off that would leave 36½ inches.

And on page 442 he says, as I read a moment ago, that the length of a yearling seal on the animal would be 39½ inches; that in removing it you lose 3 inches, which would leave the skin 36½ inches; and on the page preceding he admits that 7,733 skins were less than 36½ inches, which, according to him, is the length of the skin of a yearling.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator to say that the 7,733 seals which were slaughtered were baby seals and pups?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. And the reason for that slaughter was because there were no other seals to get?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I assume that was the reason.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that now on the islands there are a little over 11,000 head of 3-year-old males, and it would not be necessary to keep more than 1,000 of those males for breeding purposes, as I take it for granted the Senator will admit——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. And if that is the case——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; that is not the case.

Mr. SMOOT. That may not be. I can say, however, that I have a statement here from Mr. Bowers giving the number of 3-year-old males on the islands for this year, and it is a few over 11,000. He says:

Not to exceed a thousand of these will be needed for breeding purposes. The remaining 10,000 can be safely killed.

I take it that Mr. Bowers is informed as to the number of 3-year-olds on the islands. I merely wanted to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if that is the case they could have killed 7,733 of the 3-year-olds and it would have been an advantage to the herd, if Mr. Bowers is correct.

The only time I have heard Mr. Bowers say he was in favor of the killing of seals upon the islands was in connection with the fact that he thinks it is better to kill the males—the 3-year-old males, the surplus males—and he has never to my knowledge recommended the killing of a female seal upon the islands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to believe that the census which has been taken or which they claim to have taken of the islands has some little reliability, but I have absolutely no faith in the statement made by Mr. Bowers on this subject or any other. Mr. Bowers has indulged in an amount of lobbying at this time and on other occasions, always with the object of procuring the killing of seals. He has in the letters which he has written to Senators and in his efforts to buttonhole Senators in and around this Chamber and by sending his subordinates to them, sought to do away with this effort to protect the seals. The action he has taken is not new. He has pursued the same policy since 1903, when the seals came under his jurisdiction, and the seals have diminished year by year.

Mr. LODGE. I have asked directly of the department, and the fact is that the seals did not come under the Bureau of Fisheries until 1909.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think before I get through I shall demonstrate that the Senator from Massachusetts is in error.

Mr. LODGE. Then the department is misleading.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know whether the department is misleading the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. The Bureau of Fisheries did not have anything to do with the islands until 1909.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. During the period of the lease, which expired in 1910, some Government authority was charged with the enforcement of the law; some Government authority had to supervise the operations of the lease. That was in the Treasury Department, in 1903.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly until 1903 it was in the Treasury Department.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And then it was transferred to the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. LODGE. He did not put it in the Division of Fisheries until 1909.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What division was it under?

Mr. LODGE. It was in the Treasury.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. With what bureau was Lembkey associated?

Mr. LODGE. I suppose he was the agent of the department. There was no bureau of seal fisheries.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Lembkey was the agent of the department, but he was under the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I have no personal knowledge as to when this work was transferred to the Bureau of Fisheries, but I think that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor had the direct oversight of the matter for several years after 1903, because I remember distinctly that I had several interviews with the different Secretaries relating to this matter for at least three or four or five years after 1903, and during that time was never referred to Mr. Bowers.

I remember that when Mr. Cortelyou was Secretary of that department I had several interviews with him, and through him special examination was made of conditions in the Pribilof Islands, and some plan was attempted to be formulated at that time by which we would know just how many of each class of seals there were on the islands. I do not know when the order was made turning it over to the Bureau of Fisheries, but I do not think it was made in 1903.

Mr. LODGE. That order was made at the close of 1908, as the Senator from Vermont says, when it went from the Treasury to the Department of Commerce and Labor, and in the Department of Commerce and Labor, as in the Treasury, it was under the Secretary, and the agent was the agent of the department. That always was the organization, as I remember.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a minor matter in any event.

Mr. LODGE. It may be a minor matter, but we have too many assertions made here without evidence.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am willing to assume that the Senator is correct and that I am in error, and transfer the responsibility from Bowers to his superiors in the Department of Commerce and Labor. Somebody was to blame for permitting the butchery to go on and the killing of the herd. Somebody was to blame for permitting that company to loot a great public interest while the Government was practically paying the expense of caring for it, while the Government was paying a large part of the expense of protecting it, paying the expense of having revenue cutters in those waters, when that great company earned a profit estimated at between five and six million dollars in twenty years and destroyed the herd, for the herd is a mere shadow of what it once was.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What I should like to get in my mind clearly is the issue here. The report is very scant, and without having had an opportunity to read any of the House hearings it is a little difficult for those of us not connected with the committee to get clearly the issue here.

Is the difference in this: That in the House bill they do not propose to stop the taking of these animals, but propose to permit the taking of a certain number of males of a certain age, while the amendment of the Senate committee is to absolutely stop it altogether for the period of 10 years?

Mr. LODGE. That is it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the issue?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator has stated it substantially——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the difficulty with the House proposal that these people, who might conserve the herd if they would obey the license given to them, abuse that license and instead of taking 3-year-olds take babes and those that it is the wish to protect?

Mr. LODGE. That is the argument upon which the House bill is based, that the present law has been disregarded by the agent there; that it has not been followed out.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If you permit these people to go into the herd and take males of a certain age, how in the world are you going to insure against their taking what it is intended they should not take? Where is the protection? How are you going to prevent the abuse?

Mr. LODGE. The solution, I should suppose, is to get trustworthy agents, if these are untrustworthy.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota to the language in the House provision. I read from page 8, lines 14, 15, 16, and so on:

> And the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall likewise have authority to determine the number of fur seals to be taken annually on the Pribilof Islands, or any other islands or shores of the waters mentioned in the first article of said convention and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to which any seal herds hereafter resort, and to direct the taking of the same.

Now that gives him authority right along——

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator will read the proviso which limits it.

Mr. NELSON. And the amendment suggested by the majority of the committee, without criticizing it, seems to me to present an anomaly in that the Senator who has charge of the bill opposes what his own committee reported.

Mr. LODGE. That is very frequently done. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] opposed several in connection with the Panama Canal bill. I announced it when I reported it.

Mr. NELSON. By section 11 it is proposed to close land killing and pelagic killing, to stop it altogether for 10 years; to do exactly what the Russians found it necessary to do between 1834 and 1844.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not catch the Senator's statement.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield for a question.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. For what purpose?

Mr. DU PONT. In order that I may ask for a unanimous-consent agreement. That is all.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate shall take a recess at 6 o'clock and meet again at 8 o'clock this evening for the purpose exclusively of considering the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask what will become of the consideration of this bill if we have not finished it by the time proposed for the taking of the recess.

Mr. LODGE. It is the unfinished business. It will go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent——

Mr. OVERMAN. Why should we have a night session?

Mr. LODGE. I hope unanimous consent will be granted.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why not take up the matter to-morrow after the morning business?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators are quite in the habit of interrupting the Chair when he is about to submit the request of a Senator. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent——

Mr. OVERMAN. I had to ask the Senator for information before I could determine whether or not I would object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent that at 6 o'clock this evening the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Senator if we can not dispose of that in the morning hour to-morrow. It will not take long, I understand.

Mr. DU PONT. I think it very doubtful, with so many conflicting bills in the morning hour, whether we can dispose of the Army appropriation bill. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to a question——

Mr. BACON. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will state his point of order.

Mr. BACON. It is that under the rule of the Senate the Senator from Delaware has no right to interrupt the Senator from Nebraska to submit the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BACON. I should like to have the rule read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule will be read.

Mr. BACON. I think it is Rule VII.

Mr. STONE. Regular order!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule VII will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

> It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator.

Mr. LODGE. It is perfectly clear that the request for unanimous consent is not included within the inhibition of the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Delaware? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I want to refer briefly to the scientific men quoted by the Senator from Massachusetts, although he does not give their names, who have been considered as the advisers of the administration in the treatment of this seal herd. On every occasion we have been met with the statement that these great scientists, by their advice to the Government, would be able to provide such rules and regulations as would enable the herd to preserve itself and increase in number in a better way than if nature were allowed to take its course.

I have already referred to the Russian experience. That Russian experience proved beyond a doubt that no amount of supervision and regulation——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that we may have order. It is impossible to hear the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin makes the point of order that the Senate is in disorder, and the point is well taken. Senators will preserve order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator was alluding to the scientists to whom I referred. I was not referring to persons in the bureau. I was referring to men like Henry Fairfield Osborne, of the Museum of Natural History in New York, probably the greatest authority on mammals in the world, who has absolutely no interest in it whatever except the interest of a man of science, and President Jordan, of California, and others, who have written me—men of that character. I was not referring to persons in the department.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am afraid the Senator will not be able to convince anyone who has read the testimony before the Rothermel committee in the House of Representatives that the scientists who came forward on behalf of the butchers were without interest.

Mr. LODGE. I think the list of these people whom the Senator refers to as interested and whom he calls butchers, composing the board which serves without salary, might as well go in. They are Prof. David Starr Jordan, president Stanford University; Dr. C. Hart Merriam, late chief United States Biological Survey; Dr. Leonard Stejneger, head curator United States National Museum; Dr. F. A. Lucas, director American Museum of Natural History, New York; and Dr. C. H. Townsend, director of New York Aquarium.

I think it is pretty hard to throw all these men aside as butchers, and in addition, Mr. Henry Fairfield Osborne, who is somewhat better known than most people here.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am very glad the Senator has put those names in the record, for I shall feel at greater liberty to refer to them.

Take the first one—David Starr Jordan, president of Stanford University. There is a strange significance in the fact that every one of these experts who has made an earnest effort in the direction of this butchery through all these years has some relation to gentlemen interested in the butchery. One of the partners in the corporation which is guilty of destroying this herd is a trustee of the Leland Stanford University, or was a trustee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator mean to imply that Mr. Jordan is under the influence of a member of a company, now extinct, under the corrupt influence; that he is not honest; that he is not an honest man, giving an honest opinion? He may be wrong, but I have never heard him charged with dishonesty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not making the charge.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is making the implication.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall use my own language and make my own implications.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted it known if the Senator is responsible——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will state now my point. In 1890 a contract was made, a company was formed, for the purpose of acquiring the lease of the Pribilof Islands and the monopoly of seal killing. It consisted chiefly of two wealthy furriers on the Pacific coast, Isaac and Herman Liebes. They took unto themselves two men prominent in the political world for the purpose of having influence at Washington. One of those men was Stephen B. Elkins, who soon became United States Senator, and the other was D. O. Mills.

Now, I undertake to say that that company, composed of those men and one or two others, during all that 20 years plundered that seal herd. I undertake to say that they used their influence here at Washington for the purpose of securing the privilege of plundering without let or hindrance.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Is that company now in control? Have they anything on earth to do with this bill?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. LODGE. Did they not pass out of existence years ago?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will state the facts, and the Senator can draw his own conclusion.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. I know what the facts are. The facts are the company ceased to have anything up there at all. That is all old matter about the companies. Nobody is discussing the companies.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wish to say to the Senator that the company still has on deposit here in the department a $500,000 bond which it has some interest in, a bond which ought to be sued upon, for the reason that the company violated the law and used its influence here with high officials at Washington to continue the violation of the law while destroying the herd. I have here in my desk a photographic copy of the half-million-dollar bond that is on deposit in the department, and it is good. I will read the names of the signers of this bond. I might read the whole bond. It is as follows:

Know all men by these presents:

That we, the North American Commercial Co., a corporation duly established by law of California and having its usual place of business at San Francisco, in said State, by I. Liebes, of San Francisco, its president, duly authorized by a resolution of its board of directors, passed January 4, 1890, as principal, and Darius O. Mills, of the city and State of New York; Lloyd Tevis and Herman Liebes, of the city of San Francisco, State of California; and Stephen B. Elkins, of Elkins, State of West Virginia, as sureties, are held and firmly bound unto the United States of America in the full and just sum of $500,000, lawful money, to be paid to the said United States; for which payment, well and truly to be made, we jointly and severally bind ourselves, our successors, heirs, executors, and administrators, and each of them, firmly by these presents. Signed with our hands and sealed with our seals and dated this 12th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1890.

The condition of this obligation is such that whereas the Secretary of the Treasury has on the day of the date hereof made with said North American Commercial Co. a written lease, under the provisions of chapter 3 of title 23 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, now if the said North American Commercial Co. shall truly and faithfully abide by and observe all laws and requirements of Congress and the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury, made and to be made by authority of law, touching the subject matter of taking of fur seals and of disposing of the same, and shall well and truly pay all rentals, taxes, dues, and other sums of money accruing to the United States under said lease, and perform all other considerations connected therewith, and generally shall truly and faithfully abide by and perform all the covenants and agreements in said lease to be by them performed, then this obligation to be void, otherwise to remain and be in full force and virtue.

NORTH AMERICAN COMMERCIAL CO.,
By I. LIEBES, President.

Attest:

H. B. PARSONS,
Assistant Secretary.
DARIUS O. MILLS.
LLOYD TEVIS.
HERMAN LIEBES,
By D. O. MILLS,
Attorney in fact.
STEPHEN B. ELKINS.

Now, Mr. President, inasmuch as this has been brought out at this time, I want to say that that bond was violated. That company went on those islands and instead of killing the seals in accordance with law, it was caught repeatedly killing them in violation of the law, and therefore is liable to the Government, in part, for the destruction of that herd. Not only that, but I. Liebes and Herman Liebes, the president and other officer of this company, had, during the period of this lease, contrary to law, engaged in pelagic sealing themselves. It is one of the scandalous chapters in our history that they, with their influence, used the Department of State to compel the Russian Government to pay Mr. Liebes something like $50,000 for the seizure of a pelagic sealing vessel named J. Hamilton Lewis in 1891, although before this lease was signed and when there was a suspicion that the Liebes were pelagic sealers and violators of the law upon the high sea, in order to get this lease Liebes was forced to make an affidavit and file it with the Secretary of the Treasury at that time. Notwithsanding that fact, notwithstanding the fact that he said in his affidavit that he was not interested in pelagic sealing or engaged in the outlawed traffic, the fact was later developed that he owned the J. Hamilton Lewis, and in connection with the other Liebes was engaged, under cover, in pelagic sealing. When Russia seized the vessel and confiscated it there arose the necessity for Liebes to reveal his interest if he was to recover from Russia. He proved his ownership of the vessel and secured the money through the instrumentality of the Department of State at that time.

It was a scandalous proceeding to have our Department of State exact from Russia a $50,000 penalty for attempting to enforce the law just as we were attempting to enforce the law against pelagic sealing. That pelagic sealing by the head of the company which had the lease to kill seals on the Pribilof Islands was a violation of the terms of this bond. Liebes had no right as president of this company, in violation of law, to engage in pelagic sealing any more than he had the right to kill female seals or yearling seals, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] saw his agents doing upon the island.

It may seem to be a little out of the way, but I refer to one of the scientists the Senator from Massachusetts has named—Prof. Townsend. Prof. Townsend was one of the men who was sent to Russia to assist Liebes in securing that $50,000 from Russia for the seizure of the J. Hamilton Lewis. Prof. Townsend knew that Liebes was engaged in pelagic sealing. Prof. Townsend knew from his experience on the Pacific Ocean that the pelagic sealing carried on was largely by Liebes, who was interested in this contract with the Government. Yet he did nothing to protect the Government of the United States, although he was an employee and had that knowledge. He is one of the scientists referred to here as worthy of consideration.

Prof. Townsend has done other things. Prof. Townsend urged that the lease be renewed when it expired in 1910, and, if necessary, I can put his letter into the RECORD. So did the so-called and much-lauded advisory board. Townsend's letter went to Mr. Bowers, and Mr. Bowers sent it to Mr. Nagel, and with it he transmitted a letter from the fur-seal dealer, Frazier, who wanted the lease renewed, and Townsend urged that it be renewed, because he said the fur-seal trade needed the product which would come from the renewal of the lease.

Is Prof. Townsend a man who should be considered a disinterested adviser of the Government of the United States? Who is Prof. Townsend now? Another strange coincidence happened. Prof. Townsend is employed by one of the associations in New York of which D. O. Mills was the trustee. There is a strange coincidence that always seems to connect these Government experts with the men who are interested in the killing. It is a strange thing that these Government experts are always urgent in their advice in favor of killing, always for killing; never in favor of preservation.

I realize that it is possible under normal conditions to kill surplus males among the seals on the Pribilof Islands, but it is not possible to do so when you have decimated the herd to the point of extinction. There comes a time when you have got to stop, and that point has been reached, as is shown here, when, in 1910, of the 12,000 killed more than half of them were yearlings, and it was only for the obvious reason that they could not get older seals. They were killed in violation of law. When they killed yearlings, they necessarily killed without knowing whether they were male or female.

These great scientists have argued that you can kill 95 per cent of the male seals upon the Pribilof Islands, figuring that as the seal is a polygamous animal the 5 per cent remaining will be sufficient for propagation. That loses account altogether of the great law of nature which has provided for a struggle between the males of a wild race, a struggle in which the strong, the courageous, and the virile survive and procreate, driving off the cowards and the weaklings. Unless you permit a sufficient number of male seals upon the islands not only to serve for the natural purposes of propagation but also to carry on that struggle which nature has provided, you will have a degenerate race, and you are getting now a degenerate race of seals because you have nothing left but a comparatively few males to serve the purposes of nature.

It is well known that in Europe to-day if you visit the old castles you will find the antlers of deer that can not be matched now. Why? Because the hunters of Europe have been killing off the males. They spare the females but they kill the males; they become scarce and the natural conflict between the males has died out and the race of deer has degenerated. That is true in the West. It is true with the elks; it is true with the antelopes. You can not get to-day the elk horns that you got a number of years ago when the elk were plentiful and when the great battles between the males demonstrated which sire was proper to survive and to be the father of the new race.

So it is with these seals. Nature has provided that the female becomes a breeding animal at the age of two years, but the male not until he reaches 6 or 7 years of age is able to fight his way on the breeding ground, and for that very reason it is necessary to stop the butchery of the males that is now going on. You have got them reduced to such a dangerous line at the present time that you have no surplus males with which to carry on that conflict under nature's law to breed up a herd. You have degenerate sires.

Mr. President, there have been many attempts by committees of the Senate, by committees of the House, by the House as a body, and by the Senate as a body, and by Congress as a whole, to protect this interest. But those attempts have never been cooperated with by the administration here. At all times the company interested, or the individuals interested, have apparently had more influence with the administration than Congress.

I think, Mr. President, for the present this is all I care to say, although it may be that I shall take leave to add something later.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him how he explains the fact that the treaty between Japan and Russia to-day requires that a certain percentage of all the surplus males in each year be killed. They go so far in the treaty as to name the number allowed; in Japan there are 6,500 and in Russia there are 18,000, and under the treaty if the males exceed that number, respectively, they are compelled to kill them. If the Senator's argument is correct, certainly the treaty between Japan and Russia in relation to seals is wrong. I should like to ask the Senator how he explains that fact, because it is a recent treaty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My judgment is that possibly the Russian islands or the Japanese islands are not of sufficient extent to maintain a herd greater than the amount named, or that the two countries have no desire to maintain a herd of greater extent. At the present time on the islands they have nearly as many seals as are named in the treaty. Their herd has not been decimated as our herd has been decimated. On the other hand, the American herd at the present time numbers only 100,000, while it should number 4,000,000. There is much more need, if we are to preserve this very valuable interest, for us to permit nature during the next 10 years, or other period that may be agreed upon, to do the work of restoration.

I think that answers the question. The fact is that at the present time, with ruin staring us in the face and destruction in view, we are killing 12,000 seals a year. The value on the market is about $360,000 a year. If we will give a rest for a period of 10 years, we can in all probability begin the killing of, say, 60,000 seals a year and secure revenue of possibly $2,000,000 a year from that source. We have a resource of tremendous possibilities up there, whereas the Japanese herd and the Russian herd are necessarily small.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that in my investigation of the reasons why the surplus males are destroyed by Japan and Russia, it is because they claim that if the males were not destroyed it would only be a few years until they would destroy themselves, and that there would be hardly a seal that would be killed that would be of any market value.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator if he believes that?

Mr. SMOOT. I think, myself, that if there was a surplus——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator ever heard of a wild race destroying itself?

Mr. SMOOT. I think, Mr. President, it is entirely different with this. I think there are wild animals that would destroy themselves in a very few years. Take any animals—sheep, for instance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am talking about wild animals. There is a vast difference.

Mr. SMOOT. The same principle applies in the sheep herd that would apply in the seal herd; and it would not take many years until they were run out absolutely. I think the same principle applies here to the herd of seals. I believe Russia thinks so, that Japan thinks so, and that is why each compels the killing of the males if they exceed a certain number.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; there is no compulsion there. It is a matter of treaty that after the Russian herd exceeds 18,000 or after the Japanese herd exceeds 6,500 they shall kill a certain small percentage—I think 5 per cent—of the whole. That is for the reason that they are partners in the business and have an interest with the seals that are killed; but we, in order to protect our herd, refused to enter into such a contract. We specifically reserved the right to stop all killing during the period of the treaty, but it is only proposed to do so for 10 years.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say in reply to the interrogatory of the Senator from Utah, if I understand him correctly, that when Pribilof discovered those islands there was a big seal herd there, and there were no scientists like Dr. Jordan or these other men to kill off a part of these males. The theory of these scientists is that the only way you can keep the herd growing is to kill off 95 per cent of the males and leave the other 5 per cent to look after the females. Long before these scientists announced this doctrine they grew and flourished. If we read the history of the early explorers we find that the great West and the States of Tennessee and Kentucky and the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota were full of buffaloes.

Large herds roamed all over that country and kept increasing year by year, but there were no scientists around to advocate the destruction of the males. [Laughter.] So, if we look to nature all around, we can find nature adjusting itself to the conditions regardless of the scientists. When Solomon said—I believe it was Solomon—that there was nothing new under the sun he was mistaken, for he had not heard from Dr. Jordan and the other scientists.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before I yield the floor, I want to say, in further answer to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], that the seal is among the very wildest animals known, so far as their habits are concerned. They leave the Pribilof Islands between the 1st and 10th of November, and they travel some 5,000 miles apparently without landing anywhere or coming in contact with civilized or barbarous man, so far as we know. In the month of May they begin to return. The bulls come first and haul themselves up on to the breeding ground. That is during the month of May; and it is at that time that the fights occur; it is at that time that the males battle for positions upon the big breeding ground. The fighting is all done before the females come; the fighting is all over before a pup appears upon the ground; yet these scientists, who have been quoted by the administration here, have claimed that females were killed, the pups were trampled upon by the fighting bulls, and that, therefore, the bulls should be slaughtered. That has been an excuse and a pretext for the killing of males when no better reason could be found; but during the month of May the bulls are on the ground; they have their fights, and the fights are all over by the 10th of June. Then the females begin to arrive; the whole herd begins to arrive, as a matter of fact, and the females begin to take their place upon the breeding ground. The females do not draw up upon the land until they are driven ashore by the pains of parturition. After they have given birth to their pups upon the shore, after they have selected a harem in which they are to place themselves, the breeding occurs; and it is all over within a matter of two weeks; the births have occurred; and all the breeding for the whole year has occurred. Yet it is assumed that you must compare this life with the domestic life of the sheep or some other animal where the breeding may occur throughout the whole year—an entirely different situation. The seal herd is a herd that is beyond control and beyond the ken of man for most of the months in the year; and, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has well said, these herds were in their glory and at their greatest number long before these scientists came upon earth and told how we might kill, kill, kill, in order that a few men might make millions at the expense of the public.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there seems to be a very wide difference of opinion among Senators who have spoken on this question. I have given considerable time and attention to it, and I confess that I have been greatly surprised by the statement of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], though I do not wish to reflect upon his honesty or sincerity.

While I have devoted much study to this subject, I am not posing as an expert nor as an authority on fur seals; but, as I understood the Senator's remarks, they have been so at variance with my understanding of the facts I feel that I ought at least to express my views.

If what the Senator has charged against Government representatives is true, we should abolish the closed season for officially killing those agents rather than establish a closed season for fur seals. It does not affect the theory of the House provision because some officer has been derelict in his duties or has in fact been criminal in his official conduct.

The Senator has truly said that the seals collect at the breeding season on the Pribilof Islands. I do not agree with him, however, that the males come there in advance and do all their fighting before the females arrive. I think that can not be established by the facts. The fighting also occurs when the females reach the islands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, Mr. President, I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I assure him that he is not able to find a single person who has been upon the Pribilof Islands at that time who will dispute the statements which I have made.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have to beg the Senator's pardon, but I have talked with men who are very familiar with the seals and their habits.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state to what men he refers?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I refer first to the secretary or the president of the Agricultural College in Kansas. At any rate he is a public official of great learning. He has had much experience in the arctic country, and has carefully studied the habits of fur seal. I do not now recall his official position, but I remember his statements on this interesting subject.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think, possibly, the Senator refers to Prof. Dyke, who is connected with the State University of Kansas.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I took the trouble to look at the record of the so-called Government scientists, Mr. Jordan and Prof. Townsend, and all the others, and not one of those men was upon the islands through the period I have described; that is, from the beginning of the season to the close of it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I see there is very little likelihood of our agreeing on this matter, for evidently we have obtained our information from different sources. I desire, however, to express my own opinion, based upon such information as I have been able to obtain, the source of which I believe to be entirely authoritative and reliable.

I believe, notwithstanding the statement of the Senator from Nebraska, that these fights do occur when the females are on the islands and during the breeding season. The female comes to the island in the spring for the purpose of depositing her young, and within a week or 10 days thereafter she is served by the male. During this mating season, which at the same time is the birth season, the thousands of heated males fight each other and tear the females, and thousands of the newborn pups are trampled and crushed to death. After dropping her pup and after being bred by the bull the cow goes out to sea for food and sometimes goes several hundred miles before she returns to her young. The younger males, during this mating season, huddle together in certain parts of the islands, and instead of being the wildest animal, as described by the Senator from Nebraska, they become as tame as and more docile than most domestic animals. At these times and under these conditions those surplus males are killed with clubs, and those selected males which for their strength and size are known to be the fittest breeders are preserved. The official approaches these young males and clips the hair or fur from the top of their heads so that they can be distinguished and saved from slaughter. The young males are clearly distinguishable from the females. The bulls do not mature for breeding purposes before the age of about 5 years, while the cows breed at 2 or 3 years of age. The young, immature bulls congregate by themselves, and there is no mistaking them from the cows.

Now, the great wrong in regard to pelagic sealing is the killing of the cow seals after they go to sea. If the female is killed before she is delivered of the young, two seals are killed and, in addition, the potential value of the female for the years to come is destroyed. It is known, and was known when this treaty was entered into, that citizens of Russia and Japan and certain Americans were engaged in pelagic sealing. Pelagic sealing is killing seals in the open sea. The treaty was entered into for the purpose of discontinuing that practice. It provides, among other things, that of the seals killed under the instruction of the United States 15 per cent shall go to Russia and 15 per cent to Japan. This clearly shows that some seals were to be killed. All the signatory powers contemplated that this would be done. It was to be done, however, by the United States and for the preservation of the seal herd. Such killing could not be indulged and such preservation secured by any other method than by killing the surplus bulls. They can be properly killed, and if they are not so killed it is because of the fault of the Government officials, and we should deal with them.

The question naturally arises whether killing off the surplus males is going to conduce to the growth of the seal herds. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] becomes facetious when he announces that the laws of nature governing procreation can not be improved upon; that reducing the number of males will not tend to increase the seal herds. This statement is disproved by all our experience in reference to plants, fish, and animals. I contend, Mr. President, that in this respect seals are quite like our domestic stock. The seal is a polygamous animal. One bull is sufficient to 25 cows. No farmer thinks of rearing all his male calves as bulls. No one thinks of rearing all his male sheep as rams. The farmer selects his strongest, most perfect males for breeding purposes, and all the rest are altered. A multiplicity of polygamous males would not only destroy each other, but they would weaken the females and destroy the very young. Man can determine from among the seals on the islands the strong ones and preserve them.

I believe it is a fact—and I have never supposed it was disputed before—that the males did tear the cows to pieces in their fights and destroy pups a few days old. I still maintain that the breeding takes place between the birth of the pups and a very few days thereafter, not to exceed two weeks.

I do not believe that all these scientists are corrupt men. Such a statement seems monstrous to me, and I am sorry that the necessity for argument should seem to require such statements. I know that the men who have made a study of those conditions are telling us the truth. They can have no possible excuse for doing otherwise. But if there is corruption in the administration of our laws in the Pribilof Islands we ought to deal with the men who are violating the trust that has been reposed in them. The great object contemplated by the proposed treaty is the preservation of the seal herds and the failure, real or imaginary, of officers to perform their duties should not distract our attention from that object.

There is another matter, Mr. President, which I mentioned a little while ago. This Senate plan was tried between the years 1891 and 1894. There was a modus vivendi entered into between the nations whereby there was to be an absolute closed season, so far as the killing of fur seals on land was concerned, and at the end of the season—and I do not believe this can be disputed—at the end of the season the islands were found overstocked with males, and the herds had not materially increased during the closed period.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How long was that season?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Three years.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Is the Senator sure that there was an agreement for the suspension of the killing during that time? I ask the question because I find that in a report I made on the subject in 1904 I said:

> In 1893 an agreement was made by the United States and Great Britain for the control of pelagic sealing, limiting the periods and localities in which seals may be taken by this process, and in 1897 Congress passed an act prohibiting the taking of any fur seal in the waters of the Pacific and north of the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude, and including Bering Sea, by citizens of the United States.

I have forgotten if it is a fact that there was an agreement for the cessation of the killing of seals on land.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am sorry that I do not have my authority here. I gathered from the Department of Commerce and Labor that this agreement was in existence during those years of 1891, 1892, and 1893, and it was claimed then that a closed season would cause the seal to multiply and that the herd would materially increase. The result, however, was directly opposite to what was anticipated. The herd did not increase.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I do not say that that is not true, and I am inclined to think there was some such agreement, because, on looking further at the figures of the number killed on the islands, I find that during 1892 and 1893 there were only between seven and eight thousand killed on the islands during those two years, against a very much larger number in other years.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I think there was an agreement early in 1892, as a part of the arrangement which resulted in the Bering Sea arbitration, and I think you will find——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am inclined to think so myself.

Mr. ROOT. That the agreement involved on one side a cessation of pelagic sealing and on the other hand a cessation of land killing, except enough for food and similar purposes.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. But, as a matter of fact, during those two years, when there were killed on the island only 7,511 and 7,396, there were taken in the pelagic catch 46,000 and 30,000, respectively.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there is another thing that ought to be borne in mind with reference to pelagic sealing: Not only is there indiscriminate killing, without any regard to whether the seals are pups, or cows, or bulls, but I believe the records will disclose that where they are killed at sea not over one in five of those that are killed are recovered—the balance either sink at once upon being shot or else, being wounded, get away and die—so that the actual number that are killed and recovered in pelagic sealing, great as that is, represents only a small portion of the total number of the seals killed by that process.

I repeat that we have entered into a treaty with these countries to stop pelagic sealing. Russia and Japan have proceeded upon that agreement in good faith. Japan has purchased the schooners that the Japanese sealers were using in connection with their sealing. I am informed that Russia has done the same in reference to her subjects. If it is also true, as it is, that there is a provision in the treaty whereby Russia and Japan are to receive 15 per cent each of the seals that are killed, and none are killed, certainly it would result in a misunderstanding between these signatory powers.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. SHIVELY. I think, if the Senator will examine the treaty, he will find that that contingency is provided for. He will find that the United States is given express authority under the treaty to create a closed season, but whether the season is closed or whether it is open the United States appropriates this advance sum of $200,000 to Russia and $200,000 to Japan. The United States Government can have a closed season or the United States Government can go on killing, but when we do kill, then we retain the skins and repay ourselves out of the kill. The 15 per cent accrues only when we are killing. There is not anything in that part of the treaty that prevents us from having a closed season.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from Indiana for calling my attention to that. I might have overlooked it. But——

Mr. SHIVELY. Now let me call the Senator's attention to article 10 of the treaty, which provides:

ARTICLE 10.

The United States agrees that of the total number of sealskins taken annually under the authority of the United States upon the Pribilof Islands or any other islands or shores of the waters mentioned in article 1, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to which any seal herds hereafter resort, there shall be delivered at the Pribilof Islands at the end of each season 15 per cent gross in number and value thereof to an authorized agent of the Canadian Government, and 15 per cent gross in number and value thereof to an authorized agent of the Japanese Government: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall restrict the right of the United States at any time and from time to time to suspend altogether the taking of sealskins on such islands or shores subject to its jurisdiction, and to impose such restrictions and regulations upon the total number of skins to be taken in any season, and the manner and times and places of taking them, as may seem necessary to protect and preserve the seal herd or to increase its number.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit me, in that provision of the treaty the United States reserves the absolute right to have a closed season whenever it pleases.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. ROOT. But, Mr. President, we must show that it seems necessary to protect and preserve the seal herd or increase its number. It is not an arbitrary power.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from New York anticipated my answer. But it is all right. If I understand correctly the treaty, the United States Government is not to have a closed season except it finds it necessary to do so. I do not think it necessary to have a 10-year closed season. The history of the sealing business shows that it is not necessary.

From all this I conclude that the primary object of the proposed treaty is to prevent pelagic sealing, to the end that the seal herd may be preserved and enlarged. Through an actual experience by this Government of three years—1891 to 1894—the plan proposed by the Senate amendment has been disproved, and the theory presented in the House bill is corroborated. The fault, if there be a fault, lies in the administration of the law. If it is true that our officials are corrupt, we should deal with that situation. I do not say they are corrupt, because I believe they are not, but certainly there has been enough said on the Senate floor to-day to put the Senate and the Government on notice, and the charge or intimation being so serious, it should not be overlooked.

That the principle adopted in the House bill is correct I have no doubt. I am satisfied that a surplus of males during the breeding season, and congregated as they necessarily are on those islands, is a menace to the increase of the seal herd.

I do not attempt to answer the statement of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], that the great professional authorities who approve the House provision are corrupt or influenced by improper and unworthy motives. These men are too well known and too secure in their reputations to need defense from me. If I were inclined to deal in innuendo, or if I were looking for improper motives for men's action, I might suggest the counter charge that the Victoria sealing combine and its reputed representative, Mr. Elliott, who has lobbied for the Senate provision for months, were not an altogether disinterested party to this controversy. It is not impossible for me to imagine that their interests may be striving to secure a closed sealing season in order to induce the Russian and Japanese schooners to return. I can discover many indications which warrant such a thought to the suspicious. If I were to draw on my imagination and try to find some unjust and improper motive, I could find plenty of excuse to give it free rein. But I prefer to discuss this question upon its merits, and say, if there be wrong, if laws governing fur sealing are not being administered properly by the department, we should deal with those matters, and not be diverted from the real object before us. I believe it is safe to rely on our scientific, experienced experts, especially when their judgments are corroborated by reason and common sense. The Department of Commerce and Labor, which has this matter in charge, recommend the provision of the House bill and protest against the Senate amendment. There ought to be no doubt as to what we should do in the premises, and I certainly trust the pending amendment will be defeated.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have listened to these arguments and I have listened in vain to find one answer satisfactory to me to this question: If we preserve all the females and a sufficient number of males, what is the necessity of preserving more of the males than are necessary for breeding purposes? If about as many males as females are born, why preserve the males for a longer period than is necessary for the purpose of development? Why not dispose of them in order to secure the remuneration from the sale of hides?

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] thinks that nature does these things better than any man can. But I am satisfied that the preaching of the Senator from Minnesota will hardly square with his practice on his own farm. If half the lambs he raises are bucks, I doubt whether he would preserve all of them. I think he would keep only enough for breeding purposes, and would dispose of the others at a time when they would bring the greatest sum; and so with the seal herd. Not only, in my opinion, should we dispose of all the surplus males at a time when we can secure the best price for their pelts, but we should sell them in order to prevent them from destroying each other, and if not killing each other, at least so marring the fur and the hide that it is scarcely salable.

I do not pretend to be an expert, and when I call for expert testimony I am not going to measure the qualities of the individuals, so far as they relate to being good or bad. I care little whether the man making the argument is a wicked or a good man. I am influenced more by the character of his argument than I am by his character.

I do not want to go into the question which has been raised here about Mr. Bowers. Mr. Bowers has written a letter which appeals to me, and I am going to have the letter read in the Senate, because I think it bears directly upon the question and because I think it presents a clear and lucid argument.

I am also going to ask that there be read a letter from Charles Sheldon, chairman of the Committee on Preservation of Wild Life, a member of the Boone and Crockett Club. I think the arguments in both of these letters are sound, and I ask that the Secretary read each of them. Upon the conclusion of their reading I will yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, August 1, 1912.

Hon. PORTER J. McCUMBER,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to again invite your attention to the bill (H. R. 16571), pending in the Senate, to give effect to the convention signed July 7, 1911, by Great Britain, Japan, Russia, and the United States for the preservation of the fur-seal herds of the north Pacific.

The bill has not yet been acted upon in the Senate, but I understand it will probably come up for consideration within the next few days.

You will recall that I addressed to you, on or about March 19 last, a letter in which I set forth some of the reasons why the bill should pass without any provision for a close season, as is proposed in the Hitchcock amendment. I shall be glad if you will again give careful consideration to the statements contained in that letter. Every argument against any restriction on the killing of surplus male seals as set forth in that letter still holds, and some of them even more strongly than they did six months ago. Reports recently received from the Pribilof Islands state that the number of breeding bulls present on the rookeries this summer and the number of half bulls or waiting bulls are more than are necessary for breeding purposes; and the number of 3, 4, and 5 year old bulls that are being saved, and which will become breeding bulls in one, two, and three years, is more than ample after allowing for the natural mortality. Advices from Japan are to the effect that that Government is killing the usual proportion of the surplus males in the Japanese herd, although that herd numbers fewer than 6,000 seals of all classes. The American herd numbers about 130,000. Attention is called to the important fact that the treaty requires Japan and Russia to kill a certain percentage of their surplus males each year if the herds exceed 6,500 and 18,000, respectively.

That the herds have become greatly depleted is admitted by all; that the depletion was the result of the killing of female seals in the sea by the pelagic sealers and the consequent starvation on the land of the pups thus left motherless is recognized by everyone who has ever visited the seal islands except Henry W. Elliott, a man whose interests appear to be in pelagic sealing rather than in the preservation of the seal herd. Those who oppose the killing of surplus males say that man can not improve on the methods of nature. If that be true, we should stop all our agricultural, horticultural, and stock-raising operations; all our fish-cultural work; all our irrigation operations.

The fur seals are as much under man's control as are the herds of cattle and the flocks of sheep on the ranges in the Western States. They are even more fully under man's control than are the shad, whitefish, salmon, or any other fish that is propagated artificially. No stockman would think of saving for breeding purposes all his male sheep, cattle, horses, or hogs; he will save only such as are needed for that purpose and market the rest when they will bring the largest money return. This is precisely what should be done with the surplus male seals.

The Bureau of Fisheries has no interest whatever in the matter other than the welfare of the herd. The employees of the bureau who have immediate charge of fur-seal matters are men who have had many years' experience and are entirely competent to handle the herd intelligently. They should not be hampered by restrictions as to the details of management. The bureau's agents never have killed any except surplus males not needed for breeding purposes, and they will not under existing law; and the agents on the islands are in a better position than anyone else to determine how many surplus males there are each year and how many should be killed. If at any time the agents should find that a scarcity of breeding males is threatened they will do no killing; on the other hand, so long as the agents find an excess of male life they should be permitted to kill a safe proportion of that excess.

A close season even for one year or two years, when there is an excess of male seals, would not only serve no useful purpose, but it would be unwise from a business point of view, as the following illustration will demonstrate:

The number of 3-year-old males on the islands in 1913 will probably be something over 11,000. Not to exceed 1,000 of these will be needed for breeding purposes. The remaining 10,000 can be safely killed. If they are not killed in 1913, they will never be killed, because in 1914 they will all be 4-year-olds, which are commercially less valuable and are never killed. When 5 years old they will have practically no commercial value. Therefore, if the excess males are not killed when 2 or 3 years old, they, in their fourth and fifth years, become valueless commercially and, being surplus males, they will be of no use for breeding purposes. They are a total loss as certainly as would be a crop of potatoes that are allowed to remain in the ground more than one season.

In view of these considerations, it is hoped you will oppose any provision which prohibits the killing each year of a safe proportion of the surplus male seals, and that you will support the bill substantially in the form in which it passed the House.

Respectfully,

GEORGE M. BOWERS, Commissioner.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator to whom this letter was addressed?

Mr. McCUMBER. Both letters were addressed to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The letter was addressed to you by the Commissioner of Fisheries?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did he write to other Senators, or do you not know?

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand other Senators on the Committee on Foreign Relations received the same letter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wanted to see how far he considered it his duty to take the place of the President in advising Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is another letter which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

BOONE AND CROCKETT CLUB,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY,
New York, April 5, 1912.

Hon. PORTER J. McCUMBER,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: Permit me, on behalf of the Boone and Crockett Club, to direct your attention to Senate Calendar 446, Report 501—Preservation and Protection Fur Seal, etc.

This report (to accompany H. R. 16571) relates to a bill to give effect to a treaty for the suppression of pelagic sealing. It proposes an amendment which we believe not only to be unfavorable to the effective ratification of this important treaty, but detrimental to the restoration of the seal herd.

The Boone and Crockett Club has long been interested in the fur-seal matter, and its views are in accord with those of the advisory board of the fur-seal service. At a meeting held January 25, 1912, the club passed a resolution to the effect that the treaty should be ratified without amendment, and that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor was well advised in his management of the seal islands.

Permit me to point out that when the Russians restored the depleted herd they had been killing females on land, as well as males, while under the American régime surplus males only have been killed. There is no reason whatever for comparing the present situation, which was brought about by pelagic sealing, with the killing of females by the Russians on the land. When they gave the seal islands a 10-year rest, they could have increased their herd more rapidly if they had removed a large proportion of the male stock. It was not the stopping of simply land killing that caused the herd to increase, but the stopping of female killing; the saving of the extra males was only a detriment.

A total cessation of killing of males for 10 years, or even 5 years, would result in flooding the breeding grounds with superfluous fighting males, which would cause an unnecessary loss of new-born pups and nursing females. These animals are highly polygamous, and the breeding grounds are now controlled by a moderate number of mature males, each of which serves numerous females. The females are densely massed at the breeding season, and a division of the breeding grounds into a greater number of small harems by an increase in males would result in continuous and injurious fighting among the latter.

The expansion of the seal herd will be very slow if all the surplus males are allowed to break into the breeding grounds. The herd can be increased faster by restricting the number of bulls. There are about 40,000 breeding females in the herd to-day, and the reason we have this number is due to the fact that the number of males has consistently been kept down while the female stock was being depleted during many years of pelagic sealing. The herd is now smaller than ever before, and in this fact there lies a special danger, which would not be so great if the herd were a little larger.

In a very few years our restricted and massed breeding grounds will surely be overswept with furious fighting males. If the herd as a whole were larger, its chances for recovery under the wasteful methods of nature would be more probable, but with hordes of unmanageable males it is possible that the tide may turn the wrong way.

We hope that when this bill comes up in the Senate the danger which threatens the seal herd through a too rapid increase in males may be made known and that you will assist in making this fact clear.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor has long had associated with him an "advisory board of the fur-seal service," composed of scientific men who have all made repeated visits to the Pribilof Islands and have devoted much study to the fur-seal question. This board, which serves without salary, consists of Dr. David Starr Jordan, president of Stanford University; Dr. C. Hart Merriam, late Chief United States Biological Survey; Dr. Leonhard Stejneger, head curator United States National Museum; Dr. F. A. Lucas, director American Museum of Natural History, New York; and Dr. C. H. Townsend, director New York Aquarium. Mr. Edwin W. Sims, Solicitor of the Department of Commerce and Labor, who has visited the islands, and Postmaster General Hitchcock are also members.

All of these men, after full investigation, agree that there is a loss of pups and females when the surplus males are allowed to enter the breeding grounds. Their opinions have never been questioned by any naturalists of reputation and are sustained by the British naturalists who visited the Pribilofs with them. There is, in fact, only one man who has been on the Pribilof Islands who is in favor of a 10-year close season on males, and he is H. W. Elliott, who has not been there for over 20 years.

The statement in the first paragraph on page 2, Report 501, "that all authorities agree," etc., is wholly incorrect. On the contrary, all authorities, with the exception of the one mentioned, who have studied this subject on the Pribilof Islands are already on record that a close season on males at the present time would be highly injurious.

The principle of voluntary expert advice for a Government department in a matter of this kind is one that should be fostered rather than discouraged. The treaty should be ratified without amendment, although the slight amendments of the House bill are perhaps unobjectionable.

All opinions based on the unanimous advice of the real experts emphasize the conclusion that it would be inadvisable to pass an amendment for a close season on male seals. Such action would also deprive the Government of an annually increasing revenue, beginning at $400,000 and in 10 years amounting to $10,000,000.

I am inclosing a list of members of the Boone and Crockett Club. I am, sir,

Very respectfully, yours,

CHARLES SHELDON,
Chairman Committee on Preservation of Wild Life, Boone and Crockett Club.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I wish to make some remarks upon the pending bill. I observe that the hour of 6 o'clock has arrived, and if it is agreeable to the Senate, I will wait until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will become the unfinished business to-morrow.

In accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement, the hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, the Senate will now take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m. on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SMOOT. The evening session is held under a unanimous-consent agreement to consider the Army appropriation bill.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 25531) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Office of the Chief of Staff," on page 2, line 3, after the word "stationery," to insert "typewriters and exchange of same," so as to read:

Army War College: For expenses of the Army War College, being for the purchase of the necessary stationery, typewriters and exchange of same, office, toilet, and desk furniture, textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers and periodicals, printing and binding, maps, police utensils, employment of temporary, technical, or special services, and for all other absolutely necessary expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Chief Signal Officer," on page 5, line 13, after the words "balloons and," to strike out "airplanes" and insert "aeroplanes"; in line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three hundred and seventy-five thousand" and insert "three hundred and fifty thousand"; in line 25, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five thousand" and insert "one hundred thousand"; and, on page 6, line 1, after the words "repair of," to strike out "airplanes" and insert "aeroplanes," so as to make the clause read:

Signal Service of the Army: For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs, signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including necessary meteorological instruments for use on target ranges; war balloons and aeroplanes, including their maintenance and repair; telephone apparatus (exclusive of exchange service) and maintenance of the same; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts; fire control and direction apparatus and material for field artillery; maintenance and repair of military telegraph lines and cables, including salaries of civilian employees, supplies, and general repairs, and other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise, $350,000: Provided, however, That not more than $100,000 of said amount shall be used for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of aeroplanes and other aerial machines.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert "Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to reduce the tolls on Alaska cable and telegraph messages to 50 per cent of the present rates during a period of six months from and after July 1, 1912, and then to fix such rates as he may deem warranted by the business developed during said period of reduced rates," so as to make the clause read:

Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system: For defraying the cost of such extension and betterments of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system as may be approved by the Secretary of War, to be available until the close of the fiscal year 1914, from the receipts of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system that have been covered into the Treasury of the United States, the extent of such extensions and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to reduce the tolls on Alaska cable and telegraph messages to 50 per cent of the present rates during a period of six months from and after July 1, 1912, and then to fix such rates as he may deem warranted by the business developed during said period of reduced rates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay of officers of the line," on page 6, line 26, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six million eight hundred and ninety-three thousand nine hundred and eight" and insert "seven million seven hundred thousand seven hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of officers of the line, $7,700,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one million five hundred and twenty-four thousand one hundred and twenty" and insert "one million seven hundred and sixty-seven thousand one hundred and twenty"; and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law" and insert "Provided, That hereafter in time of peace no officer of the line shall be detached nor permitted to remain detached from his regiment or corps who has not served for at least two years of the preceding period of six years prior to such detachment with the regiment or regiments of Cavalry, Field Artillery, or Infantry, or with the organizations of the Coast Artillery Corps, to which he shall have been assigned by the War Department; but this shall not apply to officers detailed in the Ordnance Department, the Bureau of Insular Affairs, as authorized by the acts of Congress approved June 25, 1906, and March 23, 1910, or to any officer on duty in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal until the same shall have been formally opened; and, in the discretion of the President, up to the 1st day of January, 1914, it shall not apply to any officer on duty with the Philippine Constabulary; and hereafter no officer below the rank of major shall be detailed as Chief or as Assistant Chief of the Philippine Constabulary, and no other officer shall hereafter be assigned to duty therewith, except as specifically provided for by law," so as to make the clause read:

For additional pay to officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $1,767,120: Provided, That hereafter in time of peace no officer of the line shall be detached nor permitted to remain detached from his regiment or corps who has not served for at least two years of the preceding period of six years prior to such detachment with the regiment or regiments of Cavalry, Field Artillery, or Infantry, or with the organizations of the Coast Artillery Corps, to which he shall have been assigned by the War Department; but this shall not apply to officers detailed in the Ordnance Department, the Bureau of Insular Affairs, as authorized by the acts of Congress approved June 25, 1906, and March 23, 1910, or to any officer on duty in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal until the same shall have been formally opened, nor shall it be held to apply in the case of any officer detached as a student at a service school; and, in the discretion of the President, up to the 1st day of January, 1914, it shall not apply to any officer on duty with the Philippine Constabulary, and hereafter no officer below the rank of major shall be detailed as Chief or as Assistant Chief of the Philippine Constabulary, and no other officer shall hereafter be assigned to duty therewith except as specifically provided for by law.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to suggest an amendment to the amendment. I have already spoken to the chairman about it. In line 25 I move to strike out the words "nor shall it be held to apply in the case of any officer detached as a student at a service school" and to insert at the end of the amendment:

Provided, That duty as a student officer at a service school within the continental limits of the United States shall not be construed as detached service within the meaning of the preceding proviso.

Mr. DU PONT. I accept that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Pay of enlisted men," on page 8, line 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifteen million eight hundred and thirty-two thousand" and insert "sixteen million two hundred and thirty-two thousand nine hundred and fifty-four"; in the same line, after the word "Provided," to strike out "That no part of the appropriation in this act for the pay of officers and enlisted men shall be paid to any officer or enlisted man in active service for any period of time lost by him on account of diseases which are the result of his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors or other misconduct" and insert "That any officer or enlisted man in active service, who shall be absent from duty on account of disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs, or alcoholic liquors, or other misconduct, shall not receive pay for the period of such absence from any part of the appropriation in this act for the pay of officers or enlisted men, the time so absent and the cause thereof to be ascertained under such procedure and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That, for the purpose of utilizing as an Army Reserve the services of men who have had experience and training in the Regular Army, in time of war or when war is imminent, and after the President shall, by proclamation, have called upon honorably discharged soldiers of the Regular Army to present themselves for reenlistment therein within a specified period, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed in said proclamation, any person who shall have been discharged honorably from said Army, with character reported as at least good, and who having been found physically qualified for the duties of a soldier, shall reenlist in the line of said Army or in the Signal Corps thereof within the period that shall be specified in said proclamation, shall receive on so reenlisting a bounty which shall be computed at the rate of $8 for each month for the first year of the period that shall have elapsed since his last discharge from the Regular Army and the date of his reenlistment therein under the terms of said proclamation; at the rate of $6 per month for the second year of such period; at the rate of $4 per month for the third year of such period; and at the rate of $2 per month for any subsequent year of such period, but no bounty in excess of $300 shall be paid to any person under the terms of this act," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of enlisted men of all grades, including recruits, $16,232,954: Provided, That any officer or enlisted man in active service, who shall be absent from duty on account of disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs, or alcoholic liquors, or other misconduct, shall not receive pay for the period of such absence from any part of the appropriation in this act for the pay of officers or enlisted men, the time so absent and the cause thereof to be ascertained under such procedure and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That, for the purpose of utilizing as an Army Reserve the services of men who have had experience and training in the Regular Army, in time of war or when war is imminent, and after the President shall, by proclamation, have called upon honorably discharged soldiers of the Regular Army to present themselves for reenlistment therein within a specified period, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed in said proclamation, any person who shall have been discharged honorably from said Army, with character reported as at least good, and who having been found physically qualified for the duties of a soldier, shall reenlist in the line of said Army or in the Signal Corps thereof within the period that shall be specified in said proclamation, shall receive on so reenlisting a bounty which shall be computed at the rate of $8 for each month for the first year of the period that shall have elapsed since his last discharge from the Regular Army and the date of his reenlistment therein under the terms of said proclamation; at the rate of $6 per month for the second year of such period; at the rate of $4 per month for the third year of such period; and at the rate of $2 per month for any subsequent year of such period, but no bounty in excess of $300 shall be paid to any person under the terms of this act.

Mr. PAGE. This language seems to grate on my ear a little. It says "that any officer or enlisted man in active service * * * shall not receive pay." Would it not be better English to say "no officer shall receive pay"?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Under the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont, I move, in line 18, to strike out the word "any" and insert the word "no," and that the word "not," in line 21, be stricken out.

Mr. DU PONT. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 18, before the word "officer," strike out "any" and insert "no," and in line 21, after the word "shall," strike out the word "not."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 10, line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one million five hundred and thirty-five thousand" and insert "one million six hundred and thirty-five thousand," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "Provided, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1912, there shall be 10 regiments of Cavalry, and no more, in the United States Army, and that the officers who shall be rendered supernumerary by this reduction in the number of Cavalry regiments shall be retained in service, and shall be assigned to vacancies in their respective grades as such vacancies shall occur in the Cavalry, or, in the discretion of the President, to such vacancies in their respective grades as shall occur in any other arm of the service: Provided further, That all officers of Cavalry made surplus by such reduction shall be transferred proportionately to the Infantry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery, Cavalry, according to their relative commissioned personnel strength; and that the officers so transferred shall take rank in the branch to which transferred according to length of commissioned service: And provided further, That no officer shall be reduced in grade; and the Secretary of War is directed to carry out the provisions of this act," so as to make the clause read:

For additional pay for length of service, $1,635,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for a division on that amendment. That is the amendment to strike out the provision of the House for the reduction of the Cavalry force. I do not care to take up the time of the Senate. On a previous occasion I stated why I thought the Cavalry force ought to be reduced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw the demand for a division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Hospital Corps," on page 12, line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eight hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "nine hundred and forty thousand," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of enlisted men, $940,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and sixty thousand" and insert "one hundred and sixty-five thousand," so as to make the clause read:

Additional pay for length of service, $165,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay to clerks, messengers, and laborers at headquarters of divisions, departments, posts commanded by general officers, and office of the Chief of Staff," on page 13, line 7, before the word "clerks," to strike out "Fourteen" and insert "Fifteen," so as to make the clause read:

Fifteen clerks, at $1,800 each per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 9, before the word "clerks," to strike out "Fourteen" and insert "Sixteen," so as to make the clause read:

Sixteen clerks, at $1,600 each per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 11, before the word "clerks," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty," so as to make the clause read:

Forty clerks, at $1,400 each per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 13, before the word "clerks," to strike out "sixty-eight" and insert "seventy-four," so as to make the clause read:

Seventy-four clerks, at $1,200 each per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 15, before the word "clerks," to strike out "seventy" and insert "seventy-two," so as to make the clause read:

Seventy-two clerks, at $1,000 each per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 3, before the word "messengers," to strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy-one," so as to make the clause read:

Seventy-one messengers, at $720 dollars each per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three hundred and three thousand two hundred and forty" and insert "three hundred and thirty-two thousand three hundred and sixty," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $332,360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Retired enlisted men," on page 18, line 3, after the word "dollars," to insert "Provided, That in computing length of service for retirement credit for double time for foreign service shall not be given to those who hereafter enlist," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of the enlisted men of the Army on the retired list, $2,150,000: Provided, That in computing length of service for retirement credit for double time for foreign service shall not be given to those who hereafter enlist.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 18, line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert "Provided, That the superintendent shall receive such allowances of quarters, subsistence, and medical care during illness as may be prescribed in regulations by the Secretary of War," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of one Superintendent Nurse Corps, $1,800: Provided, That the superintendent shall receive such allowances of quarters, subsistence, and medical care during illness as may be prescribed in regulations by the Secretary of War.

Mr. O'GORMAN. In line 13, I suggest that the comma be omitted after the word "subsistence."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 5, to strike out:

For pay of 10 contract surgeons, at $1,800 each per annum, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 7, to insert:

For pay of contract surgeons, $13,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 23, after the word "Army," to insert "Provided further, That hereafter the age limit for the retirement of Army paymasters' clerks shall be the same as the age limit for the retirement of commissioned officers of the Army," so as to make the clause read:

For traveling expenses of Army paymasters' clerks and expert accountant of the Inspector General's Department, $19,500: Provided, That hereafter Army paymasters' clerks and the expert accountant, Inspector General's Department, shall receive mileage at the same rates and under the same conditions as is provided by law for officers of the Army: Provided further, That hereafter the age limit for the retirement of Army paymasters' clerks shall be the same as the age limit for the retirement of commissioned officers of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four hundred and seventy thousand" and insert "five hundred thousand," so as to make the clause read:

For commutation of quarters to commissioned officers, dental surgeons, and veterinarians on duty without troops at stations where there are no public quarters, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eight hundred thousand" and insert "nine hundred thousand"; and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "Provided, That hereafter when an enlisted man who is enlisted on or after July 1, 1912, is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he shall be entitled to transportation in kind and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, or to such other place within the continental limits of the United States as he may select, to which the distance is no greater than from the place of discharge to place of enlistment; but if the distance be greater he may be furnished with transportation in kind and subsistence for a distance equal to that from place of discharge to place of enlistment, or, in lieu of such transportation and subsistence, he shall, if he so elects, receive 2 cents a mile, except for sea travel, from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment," so as to make the clause read:

For travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge, $900,000: Provided, That hereafter when an enlisted man who is enlisted on or after July 1, 1912, is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he shall be entitled to transportation in kind and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, or to such other place within the continental limits of the United States as he may select, to which the distance is no greater than from the place of discharge to place of enlistment; but if the distance be greater he may be furnished with transportation in kind and subsistence for a distance equal to that from place of discharge to place of enlistment, or, in lieu of such transportation and subsistence, he shall, if he so elects, receive 2 cents a mile, except for sea travel, from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, the quotation marks and dashes in line 13, on page 22, are the result of a clerical error, and they should be stricken out. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, line 13, before the word "when," it is proposed to strike out the dash and the quotation marks, and after the word "law," in the same line, it is proposed to strike out the dash and the quotation marks, so as to read:

For mileage to officers, dental surgeons, veterinarians, and contract surgeons, when authorized by law, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 22, after line 14, to insert:

For additional 10 per cent increase on pay of officers on foreign service, $266,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 17, to insert:

For additional 20 per cent increase on pay of enlisted men on foreign service, $700,000: Provided, That hereafter the laws showing increase of pay to officers and enlisted men for foreign service shall not apply to service in the Canal Zone, Panama.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Philippine Scouts," on page 25, line 16, after the word "fund," to insert:

Provided, That section 3620, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of Congress approved February 27, 1877, shall not be construed as precluding Army paymasters from drawing checks in favor of the person or institution designated by indorsement made on his monthly pay account by an officer of the Army who is stationed beyond the continental limits of the United States, or in Alaska, or the Canal Zone, Panama, or en route thereto, if the pay account has been deposited for payment on maturity in conformity with such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided further, That payment by the United States of a check on the indorsement of the indorsee specified on the pay account shall be a full acquittance for the amount due on the pay account.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 6, to strike out:

Encampment and maneuvers, Organized Militia: For paying the expenses of the Organized Militia of any State, Territory, or of the District of Columbia, which may be authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampments as may be established for the field instruction of the troops of the Regular Army, as provided by sections 15 and 21 of the Act of January 21, 1903, entitled "An Act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," to be immediately available and to remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1914, $1,350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 18, to insert:

Equipment of Coast Artillery, armories, Organized Militia: Dummy gun and mortars; mounts for dummy guns and mortars; dummy ammunition; loading appliances; range and position finding equipment; aiming and laying devices; subcaliber tubes and mountings therefor; labor and material necessary to install dummy guns and mortars, and to provide appliances and devices for instructional purposes in armory buildings provided by States for Coast Artillery companies of the Organized Militia, $275,000: Provided, That the foregoing appropriation, and any other appropriations heretofore made for that purpose, shall remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1914.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Subsistence Department," in the item of appropriation for the purchase of subsistence supplies, on page 30, line 6, after the words "in all," to strike out "$8,605,273," and insert "$8,988,867.42," and in line 12, after the word "fund," to insert "Provided, That hereafter the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 763), shall not be construed to apply to the Subsistence Department," so as to read:

In all, $8,988,867.42, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and accounted for as "Subsistence of the Army," and for that purpose to constitute one fund: Provided, That hereafter the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 763), shall not be construed to apply to the Subsistence Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Quartermaster's Department," in the item of appropriation for "Regular supplies, Quartermaster's Department," on page 33, line 16, before the word "dollars," to strike out "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the installation of an electric lighting plant at Fort Niagara, seven million four hundred and fifty-six thousand seven hundred and seventy-three" and insert "seven million eight hundred and sixty-five thousand six hundred and eighty-eight," so as to read:

Provided, That the funds received from such sales and in payment for such laundry work shall be used to defray the cost of operation of said ice, laundry, and electric plants; and the sales and expenditures herein provided for shall be accounted for in accordance with the methods prescribed by law, and any sums remaining, after such cost of maintenance and operation have been defrayed, shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation from which the cost of operation of such plant is paid, $7,865,688.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four thousand" and insert "six thousand," so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of the necessary instruments, office furniture, stationary, and other authorized articles required for the equipment and use of the officers' schools at the several military posts, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for incidental expenses, Quartermaster's Department, on page 35, line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one million seven hundred and thirty-six thousand three hundred and thirty-seven" and insert "two million," so as to read:

Hire of veterinary surgeons, purchase of medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, blacksmith's tools and materials, horseshoes and blacksmith's tools for the Cavalry service, and for the shoeing of horses and mules, and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movements and operations of the Army, and at military posts, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $2,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I was not in when the order was taken as to the method to be pursued in relation to the consideration of the bill. I do not know whether amendments other than committee amendments are now in order.

Mr. DU PONT. Committee amendments are to be first considered, I will say to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I know they are now being considered, but I wish to know whether there has been any order for that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is being read for amendment, committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. BACON. Of course I shall not ask to have that changed now, though I think it is an objectionable practice. I think the bill ought to be perfected as we go along. I have an amendment which I wish to offer at the proper place, but of course I shall not ask for the regular order to be varied.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Other amendments have been received.

Mr. BACON. I am informed that other amendments have been received. This, I think, concludes the part of the bill which relates to the pay of the Army, does it not?

Mr. DU PONT. We have passed that point.

Mr. BACON. For the pay and supplies of the Army?

Mr. DU PONT. We are in the provisions for the subsistence department now—the Quartermaster's Department—the provision for the pay of the Army having been passed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I will send the amendment to the desk, which I shall offer, and I ask to have it read. I shall not offer it, however, until the chairman of the committee signifies his readiness for it to be acted upon, though I wish that it may be read at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be read. Will the Senator from Georgia indicate at what point he desires the amendment inserted?

Mr. BACON. I ask that the amendment now be read, but under the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware I shall not ask that it be now considered. I have not done so simply because the Senator from Delaware was uncertain as to whether the amendment should come in here or at another place. I am perfectly willing that the amendment should be acted upon at such time as may be preferred, but I desire it to be now read in order that it may be in view, so that when the proper place is reached the amendment may be considered.

Mr. DU PONT. As soon as committee amendments have been completed, I shall then invite the Senator from Georgia to offer his amendment, which he has sent to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

Except as herein provided or specifically otherwise provided by statute, the money herein appropriated for the pay and supplies of the Army shall be used only for the pay and supplies of the Army on duty in the United States and in the territory subject to the laws and jurisdiction of the United States; and no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used for the pay or supplies of any part of the Army of the United States employed, stationed, or on duty in any country or territory beyond the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States or in going to or returning from points within the same: Provided, That this prohibition shall not apply to cases of emergency within the discretion of the President arising at a time when the Congress of the United States is not in session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will lie on the table for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was in the item of appropriation for purchase of horses for Cavalry, Artillery, Engineers, etc., on page 36, line 13, after the words "United States Military Academy," to insert:

Provided further, That not to exceed $500 of the money herein appropriated is authorized to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for the purchase of not less than five cups, to be awarded to horse breeders, to encourage breeding of horses suitable for military purposes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire to object to this amendment unless it is explained in some way by the chairman of the committee. It provides, as I understand, for the giving of cups for the encouragement of horse breeding.

Mr. DU PONT. I will say that that amendment has been proposed upon the recommendation of the War Department in view of the increasing need of finding suitable horses for Cavalry mounts. It appears that nearly all the horses bred in the United States are heavy draft horses, Percherons, which are entirely unfit for military purposes; and it was supposed this would be an incentive to the farmers to breed another type of horses, and that in the end it would be advantageous to the Government. I will say to the Senator from Iowa, however, that a similar provision went out in conference before, and I have no doubt this will go out.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], I desire to say that a very benevolent and public-spirited gentleman in Vermont, Hon. Joseph Battell, has given to the Government a fine stock farm at Middlebury or Weybridge, in Vermont, upon condition that the Morgan horse shall be there bred. At a meeting before the Committee on Agriculture a few weeks ago, I think it was, Chief Rommel, of the Bureau of Animal Industry, who said that it was quite essential that something be done to stimulate and encourage the production of a better class of horses for the military service, and that the farm at Middlebury was doing good work along these lines. I think the idea is to offer the farmers of Addison County, Vt., where the farm is situated, and who have a fine class of Morgan stock, a cup or premium of some kind in order to promote the breeding of a better class of horses for the Army.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator think that the presentation of a decorated cup would stimulate the breeding of better horses?

Mr. PAGE. Most assuredly; just as premiums offered in county fairs promote a better class of stock everywhere.

Mr. KENYON. That may be true in Vermont. We need no such governmental encouragement in Iowa.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am unalterably opposed to the United States Government going into the horse-breeding business or the horse-show business or acting as Lady Bountiful to give prizes for the best horses at horse shows.

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I will accept the amendment if he will move to strike that out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. I move to strike the amendment out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not necessary to move to strike it out. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 37, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred and seventy-five thousand" and insert "three hundred thousand," so as to read:

Provided further, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to remove any suspensions or disallowances in the accounts of quartermasters for the fiscal years 1910, 1911, and 1912, for the purchase, care, and foraging of horses, because of age, sex, or size, and for the purchase of seeds, machinery, and for labor and other expenditures in connection with the raising of forage at remount depots, from appropriations of the Quartermaster's Department, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the maintenance of barracks and quarters, on page 39, line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated the sum of $25,000 shall be immediately available for the construction of barracks and quarters: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended at any Army post which the Secretary of War has decided or may decide to abandon in the interest of the service: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended at any of the following-named Army posts: Fort Apache, Boise Barracks, Fort Brady, Fort Clark, Fort George Wright, Fort Jay, Fort Lincoln, Fort Logan H. Root, Fort McIntosh, Fort McKenzie, Madison Barracks, Fort Meade, Fort Niagara, Fort Ontario, Fort Wayne, Whipple Barracks, Fort William Henry Harrison, Fort Yellowstone, Fort Ethan Allen, Plattsburg Barracks, Fort Robinson, Fort Missoula, Fort Logan, Fort Douglas, and Fort D. A. Russell: Provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer and convey to the State of Texas, for the purpose of a State tuberculosis sanitarium, such portion of Fort Clark Military Reservation, not to exceed 640 acres, in the State of Texas, as the governor of the State or his representative and the President of the United States or his representative may agree upon: Provided, That should the State of Texas in any event refuse or fail to use or shall abandon the property herein authorized to be conveyed, or any portion thereof, for the purposes designated, then such land and property shall revert to the United States and become a part of the public domain thereof, $1,621,389.

And to insert:

One million seven hundred and seventy thousand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not want to raise any question about that amendment now. The matter will go to conference; but I do express the hope that in conference the Senate conferees will consent to abolish some of the Army posts, at any rate. The War Department advises that for the most part they are doing no good; but, owing to the fact that we have no quorum here to-night, I do not want to make any points on the bill that can be avoided. I merely want to express that hope.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I must object to that suggestion to the Senate conferees and hope that the Senate conferees, whoever they may be, will not take it seriously or act upon it. I believe that when the Senate solemnly adopts an amendment to a bill the Senate conferees are supposed to and are thereby instructed to stand for the Senate amendment. If the Senate conferees are going to exercise their discretion or choice, whim, or preference to abolish some of these forts, I should like to see the Senate conferees before they act on the matter and learn what their views are. I think that those of us who are interested should be entitled to be heard before they propose to say this fort shall have money and that fort shall not have, and all in the dark of some secret conference room where nobody knows what is going on. It would be a whimsical exercise of legislative power; and I believe that the Senate conferees, whoever they may be, ought to stand for all the Senate amendments, particularly when they come to some one particular Senate amendment they ought to stand for all of that amendment or for none of it, and not go to slicing up and accepting some parts and rejecting others. I merely want to utter this word of protest to show that I am not in accord with the ideas of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] in this regard, and hope that the conferees, whoever they may be, will stand by their orders from the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator from Montana takes his seat I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from Montana think that none of these Army posts ought to be abolished—not even one of them?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; I differ from the War Department in that particular.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the Senator thinks that not a single one of them ought to be abolished?

Mr. MYERS. That is what I think.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not even one?

Mr. MYERS. Not even one.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, if that is the case, of course, what the Senator has said is very logical, because if none of them ought to be abolished then, of course, the Senate conferees ought not to agree to abolish any of them; but I think, if the Senator will look at the Army posts that are proposed to be abolished—I have not counted them—he will agree with me there are some of them at any rate that are absolutely useless for any purpose under the sun.

Mr. MYERS. I know of none that is useless. At any rate, if any of them are to be abolished I think the Senate ought to do the abolishing; that it ought to be done in the open Senate, where the matter can be discussed, and not by a set of conferees, in the dark closet of a secret conference room, sorting out some that they will keep and others that they will abolish.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 17, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated not exceeding $20,000 may be expended for construction of an assembly building for the post at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 20, after the word "Kansas," to strike out "Provided further, That no part of the sum appropriated by this act shall be used to convert a mobile Army post of less grade or size than a regimental post into a regimental post or a regimental post into a brigade post."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for the transportation of the Army and its supplies, on page 43, line 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "ten million seven hundred and twenty-three thousand five hundred and twenty-eight" and insert "eleven million two hundred and fifty thousand," so as to read:

For the purchase and repair of ships, boats, and other vessels required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for official, military, and garrison purposes; for expenses of sailing public transports and other vessels on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, $11,250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred and ninety-eight thousand five hundred and fifty-seven" and insert "nine hundred and nineteen thousand six hundred," so as to read:

Roads, walks, wharves, and drainage: For the construction and repairs by the Quartermaster's Department of roads, walks, and wharves; for payment of extra-duty pay to enlisted men employed in opening roads and in building wharves; for the pay of employees; for the disposal of drainage; for dredging channels and for care and improvement of grounds at military posts and stations, $919,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 11, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended at any of the following-named Army posts: Fort Apache, Boise Barracks, Fort Brady, Fort Clark, Fort George Wright, Fort Jay, Fort Lincoln, Fort Logan H. Root, Fort McIntosh, Fort McKenzie, Madison Barracks, Fort Meade, Fort Niagara, Fort Ontario, Fort Wayne, Whipple Barracks, Fort William Henry Harrison, Fort Yellowstone, Fort Ethan Allan, Plattsburg Barracks, Fort Robinson, Fort Missoula, Fort Logan, Fort Douglas, and Fort D. A. Russell.

And insert:

Provided, That $70,000 of the sum herein appropriated may be used for the purchase of the tract of land now being leased from Mr. George W. Brackenridge for target and drill purposes, consisting of 310 acres, more or less, lying just north of the newly purchased ground of the military reservation of Fort Sam Houston, Tex., and extending to the county road recently completed around the reservation: Provided further, That $22,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended to macadamize the roadway upon the Government property between the United States Government experimental farm and the Arlington National Cemetery, in the county of Alexandria, Va.: Provided further, That $44,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be used for constructing a public road from a point near the southern end of the new Highway Bridge across the Potomac River to a convenient point on or near the southern boundary line of the Arlington Reservation, and, following said boundary line, as near as practicable, to the old county road, which passes centrally through the Arlington Reservation; thence along said road, improving and repairing it, to the northern boundary of the reservation; and that the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to purchase or acquire by condemnation such piece or parcel of land as may be necessary for the construction of said road from the new Highway Bridge to the Arlington Reservation, said piece or parcel of land not to exceed 4 acres: And provided further, That $3,600 of the sum herein appropriated may be used for completing the macadamizing of the road between the city of Vancouver and the barracks at Vancouver Military Post: Provided further, That $30,000 of the amount herein appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for draining and filling swamps within the Government reservation on Constitution Island, United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y.

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer an amendment, to be inserted in line 3, page 44.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, line 3, after the word "reservation" it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That $25,750 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for the purchase of lands necessary and suitable for a target range at Vancouver Barracks, Wash.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Following the words "New York," on page 45, line 4, insert:

And provided further, That $50,000 of the amount herein appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for filling in the ponds and low lands of Fort Taylor Military Reservation, at Key West, Fla.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, speaking for myself, I should like some information as to why the sum of $50,000 is to be appropriated for that purpose and $25,000 for a rifle range in Washington, when there are no facts before the Senate on the subject.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that my amendment has been recommended by the War Department. This is an estimate furnished by the Quartermaster General of the expenditure necessary to fill in low lands, ponds, and low places in the reservation at Key West.

The reservation there consists of some 62.8 acres, and the War Department has recommended that those low places be filled in in order that the sanitary conditions of the reservation may be improved and that these breeding places for mosquitoes may be done away with. The matter is considered by the department to be urgent, and it is so considered by the health authorities of Key West and of the State.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If all these amendments are to be inserted, I should like to know how the total amount will be affected.

Mr. DU PONT. It will be affected very slightly. Fifty thousand dollars will have to be added, and the $25,000 for the target range at Vancouver Barracks will come out of the amount proposed to be appropriated.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What I desire to know is what will be the amount of the appropriation in toto.

Mr. DU PONT. Nine hundred and nineteen thousand six hundred dollars.

Mr. JONES. Permit me to suggest that the amendment I offered provides that the amount shall come out of the fund of $919,600 already appropriated.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. The appropriation is provided on the previous page.

Mr. JONES. The committee amendment provides that of the appropriation embraced in this paragraph, $70,000, may be used at Fort Sam Houston, and my amendment merely provides that of the sum proposed to be appropriated the amount mentioned in my amendment may be used for the purpose specified.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply wanted to know whether, if amendments are put on here as they may be offered for other sums and other purposes than were taken into consideration in the making up of the bill, when the amounts in the bill are calculated with reference to what the bill as reported recommends to be done, it would necessitate a further appropriation or a revision of all the other items of appropriation.

Mr. DU PONT. All the totals will be revised in conference to conform.

Mr. WARREN. I think this is what the Senator from Connecticut asks about: If a certain amount is stated in a paragraph, and a Senator offers an amendment to pay for a specific purpose a certain amount of that sum, whether the total should be increased accordingly, increasing the bill that much. Of course it must be that way.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What I wish to know is whether it involves appropriating that much more, because the amendments in the form in which they have been offered, it seemed to me, provided that out of the sum appropriated there should be so much expended, and if that was so, it would necessitate adjusting the proportionate amount of the specific items to the entire sum.

Mr. WARREN. The total will have to be raised. The additional amount added in amendments will have to be added to the total of the appropriation under that particular head.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If it is to be added to the total, then it is not out of the amount "appropriated herein," but is out of the total as it is going to be revised?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is, it amounts to an increase.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly. Now, if the Senator from Washington had offered his amendment to pay it out of that sum, it would necessitate raising the total amount.

Mr. JONES. I worded my amendment just exactly as the committee worded its amendment.

Mr. WARREN. But in each case the amount in the committee amendment is added to the total.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that carries with it the addition of that amount to the total.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks will correct the totals.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 15, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for permanent improvements at any of the following-named Army posts: Fort Apache, Boise Barracks, Fort Brady, Fort Clark, Fort George Wright, Fort Jay, Fort Lincoln, Fort Logan H. Root, Fort McIntosh, Fort McKenzie, Madison Barracks, Fort Meade, Fort Niagara, Fort Ontario, Fort Wayne, Whipple Barracks, Fort William Henry Harrison, Fort Yellowstone, Fort Ethan Allen, Plattsburg Barracks, Fort Robinson, Fort Missoula, Fort Logan, Fort Douglas, and Fort D. A. Russell.

And insert:

Provided, That not exceeding $1,000 of the sum herein appropriated, together with the unexpended balance, which is hereby reappropriated, of the appropriation in the Army appropriation act approved March 3, 1911, for the improvement of the Crow Creek or Fort D. A. Russell Target and Maneuver Reservation, Wyo., may be expended by the Secretary of War, in his discretion, in the acquirement by purchase or condemnation proceedings of certain tracts of land required for the maneuvering of troops and other military purposes lying within the limits of the aforesaid reservation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question for information. I notice that in the proposed amendment $1,000 is appropriated, together with the unexpended balance, but there is nothing to state what that amount is.

Mr. DU PONT. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming, who is perfectly familiar with the details, to answer that.

Mr. WARREN. It may be $90 or it may be a thousand dollars. In the purchases that were made under the original appropriation they fell short somewhere from $800 to $1,000. The exact amount is not yet certain, because one or two cases have been in court, and the award has been made, but some of the little expenses have not been covered; $1,000 is the limit of additional appropriation.

Mr. POMERENE. I did not rise to make any objection to the amendment, except as to the indefiniteness of it.

Mr. WARREN. The original appropriation was $100,000, and that has been exhausted within a few dollars, and the total expenditure will run, when the matter is closed up, anywhere from $105,000 to $108,000 altogether.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 9, to insert:

Construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails, Alaska: For the construction, repair, and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails in the District of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the board of road commissioners described in section 2 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved January 27, 1905, as amended by the act approved May 14, 1906, and to be expended conformably to the provisions of said act as amended, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 7, before the word "dollars," strike out "four hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "six hundred thousand," so as to read:

Barracks and quarters, Philippine Islands: Continuing the work of providing for the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, including repairs and payment of rents, the acquisition of title to building sites, and such additions to existing military reservations as may be necessary, and including also shelter for the animals and supplies, and all other buildings necessary for post administration purposes, $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four million eight hundred and thirteen thousand two hundred and seventy-one" and insert "five million four hundred and thirty-one thousand seven hundred," so as to make the clause read:

Clothing and camp and garrison equipage: For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the manufacture of clothing for the Army, for issue and for sale at cost price according to the Army Regulations; for altering and fitting clothing and washing and cleaning when necessary; for equipage, and for expenses of packing and handling and similar necessaries; for a suit of citizen's outer clothing, to cost not exceeding $10, to be issued upon release from confinement to each prisoner who has been confined under a court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge; for indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, etc., destroyed since April 22, 1898, by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons, $5,431,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 22, to insert:

For settlement of claims for damages to and loss of private property belonging to citizens of the United States, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands, $32,616: Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of War is authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine the amounts due on all claims for damages to and loss of private property when the amount of the claim does not exceed the sum of $1,000, occasioned by heavy gun fire and target practice of troops, and for damages to vessels, wharves, and other private property found to be due to maneuvers or other military operations for which the Government is responsible, and report the amounts so ascertained and determined to be due the claimants to Congress at each session thereof through the Treasury Department for payment as legal claims out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 12, to insert:

For the payment of claims of Indians and other claimants for the value of improvements made by them upon lands subsequently included in the Fort William H. Seward Military Reservation, $2,384.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 17, to insert:

For reimbursement to one officer and certain enlisted men of the Army the money value of clothing worn out by them in the summer of 1910 while fighting forest fires in the Northwest, $15,862.08.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee how many enlisted men were engaged in fighting fires.

Mr. DU PONT. I can not state directly, but my impression is that only one company—probably 40 or 50 men.

Mr. OVERMAN. And is it proposed to give $15,000 to only one company for fighting fires?

Mr. DU PONT. I may be wrong in the number of men, but they were ordered out for the purpose, and the loss was sustained.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is too indefinite to appropriate for certain soldiers fighting fire $15,000.

Mr. DU PONT. The item was sent to us by the War Department in a rather indefinite way.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I will state to the Senator from North Carolina that the estimate was sent down; that an appraisement was made by a board of officers of the loss sustained, and it included a great many fires and a great many men, certainly more than one company.

Mr. DU PONT. I was mistaken in supposing that it was only one company.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I thought the Senator was mistaken.

Mr. OVERMAN. Where were these soldiers located?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. In the West.

Mr. DU PONT. In the Middle West.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Where the fires occurred.

Mr. DU PONT. They were located in Montana, Idaho, South Dakota, Oregon, and Washington.

Mr. OVERMAN. Where the fires took place?

Mr. DU PONT. Yes, sir.

Mr. OVERMAN. Can the Senator give any idea about how many men there were?

Mr. DU PONT. I can now tell the Senator. I was totally wrong. There were 1 officer and 1,203 enlisted men. I see it stated here in the hearings.

Mr. OVERMAN. Over $100 apiece that we propose to pay them.

Mr. BRIGGS. Do I understand that if $15,000 is paid to 1,203 men it will total $100 apiece?

Mr. OVERMAN. Something over $10 apiece.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 52, line 3.

Mr. DU PONT. In page 53, line 3, after the word "hospitals," I move to insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Engineer Department," on page 54, line 14, before the word "expenses," to strike out "unforseen" and insert "unforeseen," so as to make the clause read:

Engineer depots: For incidental expenses for the depots, including fuel, lights, chemicals, stationery, hardware, machinery, pay of civilian clerks, mechanics, and laborers, extra-duty pay to soldiers necessarily employed for periods not less than 10 days as artificers on work in addition to and not strictly in the line of their military duties, such as carpenters, blacksmiths, draftsmen, printers, lithographers, photographers, engine drivers, telegraph operators, teamsters, wheelwrights, masons, machinists, painters, overseers, laborers; for lumber and materials and for labor for packing and crating engineer supplies; repairs of and for materials to repair public buildings, machinery, and for unforeseen expenses, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 7, after the word "laborers," to insert "compensation of civilian lecturers and payment of tuition fees of student officers at civil technical institutions,," and in line 17, before the word "expenses," to strike out "unforseen" and insert "unforeseen," so as to read:

Engineer School, Washington, D. C.: Equipment and maintenance of the Engineer School at Washington Barracks, District of Columbia, including purchase of instruments, machinery, implements, models, and materials for the use of the school and for instruction of engineer troops in their special duties as sappers and miners; for land mining, pontoniering, and signaling; for purchase and binding of professional works and periodicals of recent date treating of military and civil engineering and kindred scientific subjects for the library of the United States Engineer School; for incidental expenses of the school, including fuel, lights, chemicals, stationery, hardware, machinery, and boats; for pay of civilian clerks, draftsmen, electricians, mechanics, and laborers; compensation of civilian lecturers and payment of tuition fees of student officers at civil technical institutions; for extra-duty pay to soldiers necessarily employed for periods of not less than 10 days as artificers on work in addition to and not strictly in the line of their military duties, such as carpenters, blacksmiths, draftsmen, printers, lithographers, photographers, engine drivers, telegraph operators, telephone operators, teamsters, wheelwrights, masons, machinists, painters, overseers, laborers; for repairs of and materials to repair public buildings and machinery; for unforeseen expenses; for travel expenses of officers on journeys approved by the Secretary of War and made for the purpose of instruction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Ordnance Department," on page 57, line 3, after the words "Chief of Ordnance," to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$337,118.30, of which amount the sum of $118.30 shall be used for the reimbursement of the Ordnance Department on account of the loss of arms, arm chests, and screw drivers, issued to the Post Office Department," so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance service: For the current expenses of the Ordnance Department, in connection with purchasing, receiving, storing, and issuing ordnance and ordnance stores, comprising police and office duties, rents, tolls, fuel, light, water, and advertising, stationery, typewriters and adding machines, including their exchange, and office furniture, tools, and instruments of service; for incidental expenses of the ordnance service and those attending practical trials and tests of ordnance, small arms, and other ordnance stores; and for publications for libraries of the Ordnance Department, including the Ordnance Office, and payment for mechanical labor in the office of the Chief of Ordnance, $337,118.30, of which amount the sum of $118.30 shall be used for the reimbursement of the Ordnance Department on account of the loss of arms, arm chests, and screw drivers, issued to the Post Office Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "three hundred and fifty thousand," so as to read:

Ordnance stores—Ammunition: Manufacture and purchase of ammunition and materials therefor for small arms for reserve supply; ammunition for burials at the National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C.; ammunition for firing the morning and evening gun at military posts prescribed by General Orders, No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, and at National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several branches, including National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., and soldiers' and sailors' State homes, $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike "seven hundred and forty thousand" and insert "eight hundred and seventy-five thousand," so as to read:

Small-arms target practice: Ammunition, targets, and other accessories for small-arms and machine-gun target practice and instruction; marksmen's medals, prize arms, and insignia for all arms of the service; and ammunition, targets, target material, and other accessories may be issued for small-arms target practice and instruction at the educational institutions and State soldiers' and sailors' orphans' homes, to which issues of small arms are lawfully made, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, provided the total value of the stores so issued to the educational institutions does not exceed $30,000, $875,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 16, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six hundred thousand" and insert "seven hundred thousand," so as to make the clause read:

Manufacture of arms: For manufacturing repairing, procuring, and issuing arms at the national armories, $700,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred thousand" and insert "seven hundred and fifty thousand," so as to make the clause read:

Ordnance stores and supplies: For overhauling, cleaning, repairing, and preserving ordnance and ordnance stores in the hands of troops and at the arsenals, posts, and depots; for purchase and manufacture of ordnance stores to fill requisitions of troops; for Infatnry, Cavalry, and Artillery equipments, including horse equipments for Cavalry and Artillery, $750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred thousand" and insert "two hundred thousand," so as to make the clause read:

Automatic machine rifles: For the purchase, manufacture, and test of automatic machine rifles, including their sights and equipments, to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and seventy thousand" and insert "one million two hundred and fifty thousand," and in line 6, before the word "available," to strike out "immediately available and to remain," so as to read:

Field Artillery for Organized Militia: For the purpose of procuring field artillery material for the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, without cost to the said States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, but to remain the property of the United States and to be accounted for in the manner now prescribed by law, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under such regulations as he may prescribe, on the requisitions of the governors of the several States and Territories or the commanding general of the Militia of the District of Columbia, to issue said artillery material to the Organized Militia; and the sum of $1,250,000 is hereby appropriated and made available until the end of the fiscal year 1914 for the procurement and issue of the articles constituting the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 20, to insert:

Ammunition for Field Artillery for Organized Militia: For procuring reserve ammunition for Field Artillery for the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 61, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $33,000 to reimburse the government of the District of Columbia for the site acquired for a reformatory for the District of Columbia, which site is hereby transferred to the Secretary of War for such purposes as may be authorized by law, and the jurisdiction now vested in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia over said site, being that certain parcel of land in the county of Fairfax, State of Virginia, known as "Belvoir" or the "White House" tract, containing 1,500 acres, is hereby transferred to the Secretary of War: Provided, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to use such of the clay deposits on said site as may be required in the brick manufacturing plant in the Workhouse Institution at Occoquan, Va.: And provided further, That the sum herein appropriated is hereby made available for the purposes contained in the District appropriation act approved March 31, 1909, under the title of "sites for reformatory and workhouse," as amended by the provision contained in the urgent deficiency act approved August 5, 1909; and the provision contained in the act approved March 31, 1909, that the two tracts of land to be acquired as sites for a reformatory and workhouse shall be widely separated; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 2, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That hereafter all enlistments in the Army shall be made for the term of five years, and for all enlistments hereafter accomplished five years shall be counted as an enlistment period in computing continuous-service pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 6, to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws authorizing increase of the pay of commissioned officers and enlisted men of the Army serving beyond the limits of the States comprising the Union, and the Territories of the United States contiguous thereto, are hereby repealed to the extent to which such increase of pay is authorized by such laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 12, to strike out section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the office establishments of the Quartermaster General, the Commissary General, and the Paymaster General of the Army are hereby consolidated and shall hereafter constitute a single bureau of the War Department, which shall be known as the Quartermaster Corps, and of which the Chief of the Quartermaster Corps created by this act shall be the head. The Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Pay Departments of the Army are hereby consolidated into and shall hereafter be known as the Quartermaster Corps of the Army. The officers of said departments shall hereafter be known as officers of said corps and by the titles of the rank held by them therein, and, except as hereinafter specifically provided to the contrary, the provisions of sections 26 and 27 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," are hereby extended so as to apply to the Quartermaster Corps in the manner and to the extent to which they now apply to the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, and Pay Departments, and the provision of said sections of said act relative to chiefs of staff corps and departments shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to all offices and officers of the Quartermaster Corps with rank above that of colonel. The officers now holding commissions as officers of the said departments shall hereafter have the same tenure of commission in the Quartermaster Corps, and as officers of said corps shall have rank of the same grades and dates as that now held by them, and, for the purpose of filling vacancies among them, shall constitute one list, on which they shall be arranged according to rank. So long as any officers shall remain on said list any vacancy occurring therein shall be filled, if possible, from among such officers, by selection if the vacancy occurs in a grade above that of colonel, and, if the vacancy occurs in a grade not above that of colonel, by the promotion of an officer who would have been entitled to promotion to that particular vacancy if the consolidation of departments hereby prescribed had never occurred. The noncommissioned officers now known as post quartermaster sergeants and post commissary sergeants shall hereafter be known as quartermaster sergeants; the Army paymaster's clerks shall be known as pay clerks, and each of said noncommissioned officers and pay clerks shall continue to have the pay, allowances, rights, and privileges now allowed him by law: Provided, That no details to fill vacancies in the grade of major in the Quartermaster Corps shall be made until the number of officers of that grade shall have been reduced by 11, and thereafter the number of officers in said grades shall not exceed 46; and no details to fill vacancies in the grade of captain in the Quartermaster Corps shall be made until after the number of officers of that grade shall be reduced by 31, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade shall not exceed 100; and whenever the separation of a line officer of any grade and arm from the Quartermaster Corps shall create therein a vacancy that, under the terms of this proviso, can not be filled by detail such separation shall operate to make a permanent reduction of one in the total number of officers of said grade and arm in the line of the Army as soon as such reduction can be made without depriving any officer of his commission: Provided further, That whenever the Secretary of War shall decide that it is necessary and practicable, regimental, battalion, and squadron quartermasters and commissaries shall be required to perform any duties that junior officers of the Quartermaster Corps may properly be required to perform, and regimental and battalion quartermaster and commissary sergeants shall be required to perform any duties that noncommissioned officers or pay clerks of the Quartermaster Corps may properly be required to perform: Provided further, That such duty or duties as are now required by law to be performed by any officer or officers of the Quartermaster's, Subsistence, or Pay Departments shall hereafter be performed by such officer or officers of the Quartermaster Corps as the Secretary of War may designate for the purpose: Provided further, That there shall be a Chief of the Quartermaster Corps, who shall have the rank of major general while so serving, and who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the officers of said corps and in accordance with the requirements of section 26 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, hereinbefore cited: Provided further, That when the first vacancy in the grade of brigadier general in the Quartermaster Corps, except a vacancy caused by the expiration of a limited term of appointment, shall hereafter occur, that vacancy shall not be filled, but the office in which the vacancy occurs shall immediately cease and determine: Provided further, That the Quartermaster Corps shall be subject to the supervision of the Chief of Staff to the extent the departments hereby consolidated into said corps have heretofore been subject to such supervision under the terms of the existing law.

Mr. LODGE. In order to perfect the part proposed to be stricken out, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 23, on page 63, after the word "occurred," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That every permanent officer of the consolidated corps on the active list and below the grade of colonel who has lost in relative rank, through the inequalities of promotion and the operation of separate promotion within the three departments prior to the passage of this act, may, in the discretion of the President and subject to examination for promotion as prescribed by law, be advanced to higher grades in the consolidated corps, up to and including the grade of colonel, in accordance with the rank he would have been entitled to hold had promotions been lineal and on one list throughout the three departments consolidated by this act since the date of his entry into the department to which he permanently belongs: Provided further, That officers advanced to higher grades under the terms of the preceding proviso shall be additional officers in those grades.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer that amendment to this portion of the bill which it is proposed to strike out and which I suppose will be agreed to in conference, as it was before, in some form. I offer it in the hope of curing a very serious injustice to three or four officers now in the Commissary Department. It affects only three or four officers, but it is none the less very unjust and should not be allowed to pass without proper consideration.

In the Commissary Department there are the three or four officers I have spoken of, one of whom is personally known to me and others are personally known to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. The officer I have particularly in mind entered the Army during the Spanish War, was wounded in Cuba, and served in the Philippines. He has been in the Army ever since and has a most excellent record.

Two years ago we enlarged the Quartermaster's Corps by some 29 additions, I think. Under the bill as it stands, when they are consolidated, owing to an enlargement of the Quartermaster's Corps, these officers in the Commissary Department will find themselves put back to such an extent as almost to be deprived of promotion before they are very elderly men. They find themselves put back behind men who have entered the Army since they have and who have seen no such service as they have.

The consolidation ought to be so arranged, as it can be under this amendment—which I did not trust myself to prepare, but had it prepared at the department, so that it might be exact—that they shall have the lineal rank in the consolidated corps. I have been unable to see any good argument against it or to hear any. I think it is an injustice that ought not to be permitted. I want simply to have it submitted to the conferees.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Do I understand the Senator to say that four officers are affected by his amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I think there are only three or four. There may be five. I know the number is very small. They are officers in the Commissary Department. As I said, the junior Senator from New York knows about a similar case to the one I have mentioned, and there are two or three others.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I have but a word to say in connection with this proposed amendment. It is a fact that three or four officers of the Army, who have served for many years, believe that a serious injustice will be done to them if the bill is passed as it is proposed. I think they have good reason for believing that an injustice is being done them, and the only way we can relieve them from suffering the injustice is to adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WARREN. I suppose the Senator knows that this, with the other provisions, will have to be subject to action by the conferees.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that it will be subject to the conference, and I thought if it was put in by the Senate it is possible that the House conferees might give it some attention.

Mr. WARREN. I think it should have attention.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Wyoming I know in the last conference took up this matter and did all he could in their behalf, although it was not in the bill then. He tried to get a modification, and I am hoping that in bringing the matter in in this way the House conferees may be persuaded to do justice to these three or four officers. It does no injustice to anybody. It does not put them over the heads of anyone who has had longer service.

Mr. WARREN. I only want to suggest that probably it will be necessary to change the form of it, because under one construction which has been given it adds about $191,000 a year. Of course we do not want to do that. Under another construction it adds still more. We want to protect the men the Senator has in mind.

Mr. OVERMAN. It adds how much to the bill?

Mr. WARREN. Under one statement other officers would be affected, and to reach all it would add about $190,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand that the amendment increases the appropriation?

Mr. LODGE. It does not increase it at all.

Mr. WARREN. If it can be confined to the three or four officers, in fact, the increase would be very sight.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood the Senator to say that it might add $190,000 to the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I said, under one statement made here, if these men are thus protected, and others are protected accordingly, it would then amount to $190,000 and something.

Mr. LODGE. I have been assured by the War Department that there are no other cases.

Mr. OVERMAN. We ought to be certain about it. We ought to know the facts.

Mr. LODGE. It affects only three or four officers.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to it if it does not add to the appropriation.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, it does not add $190,000. It makes no material difference. They simply get the lineal rank.

Mr. OVERMAN. If it were proposed to put something in the bill for these four men, adding $190,000, I should be opposed to it.

Mr. LODGE. Of course I would not suggest any such thing. If this is done they get the promotion of other men who entered the Army after them. It does not add to the expense, but only gives these men the place in rank they are entitled to have.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope the conferees will see that it is taken care of and carry out the idea suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts. With that understanding I will vote for it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply want to add to what the Senator from Massachusetts said by stating that the case of one of the officers affected has been called to my attention. He was in the service at Seattle. I have a letter here, but I can not find it in my desk now. If I find it later I shall put it in the RECORD. In that letter it was stated that if the bill was passed the way the organization is provided for here, officers over whom he had served for more than 20 years would have promotion ahead of him, and of course that ought not to be permitted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 66, to strike out section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That as soon as practicable after the creation of a quartermaster corps in the Army not to exceed 4,000 civilian employees of that corps, receiving a monthly compensation of not less than $30 nor more than $175 each, not including civil engineers, superintendents of construction, inspectors of clothing, clothing examiners, inspectors of supplies, inspectors of animals, chemists, veterinarians, freight and passenger rate clerks, employees of the classified service, employees of the Army transport service and harbor-boat service, and such other employees as may be required for technical work, shall be replaced permanently by not to exceed an equal number of enlisted men of said corps, and all enlisted men of the line of the Army detailed on extra duty in the quartermaster corps or as bakers or assistant bakers shall be replaced permanently by not to exceed 2,000 enlisted men of said corps; and for the purposes of this act the enlistment in the military service of not to exceed 6,000 men, who shall be attached permanently to the quartermaster corps and who shall not be counted as a part of the enlisted force provided by law, is hereby authorized: Provided, That the enlisted force of the quartermaster corps shall consist of not to exceed 15 master electricians, 600 sergeants (first class), 1,005 sergeants, 650 corporals, 2,500 privates (first class), 1,190 privates, and 45 cooks, all of whom shall receive the same pay and allowances as enlisted men of corresponding grades in the Signal Corps of the Army, and shall be assigned to such duties pertaining to the quartermaster corps as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may fix the limits of age within which civilian employees who are actually employed by the Government when this act takes effect and who are to be replaced by enlisted men under the terms of this act may enlist in the quartermaster corps: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be held or construed so as to prevent the employment of the class of civilian employees excepted from the provisions of this act or the continued employment of civilians included in the act until such latter employees have been replaced by enlisted men of the quartermaster corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 16, to strike out section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. That the office establishments of The Adjutant General, the Inspector General, and the Chief of Staff of the Army are hereby consolidated, and shall hereafter constitute a single bureau of the War Department, which shall be known as the Bureau of the General Staff, and of which the Chief of Staff shall be the head. The Adjutant General's and Inspector General's Departments of the Army are hereby consolidated and merged into the General Staff Corps. The officers of said departments shall hereafter be known as officers of said corps and by the titles of the rank held by them therein, and, except as hereinafter specifically provided to the contrary, so far as the officers hereby transferred to the General Staff Corps, and the offices held by them, may be affected, the provisions of sections 26 and 27 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," are hereby extended so as to apply to the General Staff Corps in the manner and to the extent to which they now apply to The Adjutant General's and the Inspector General's Departments; but nothing in said sections shall be held to apply to any officers of the General Staff Corps except the officers transferred to that corps from The Adjutant General's and Inspector General's Departments by the terms of this act, and nothing in said sections or in this act shall be held or construed so as to nullify or change any of the provisions of existing law as to the detail of officers for duty as Chief of Staff, or as to the period for which officers so detailed may serve, and no officer who shall have served four years as Chief of Staff shall, except in case of emergency or in time of war, be eligible for further service as Chief of Staff until after he shall have served for at least two years with the line of the Army or on such other duty not pertaining to the General Staff Corps as the President may direct. The officers now holding commissions as officers of the said departments shall hereafter have the same tenure of commission in the General Staff Corps, and as officers of said corps shall have rank of the same grades and dates as that now held by them, and, for the purpose of filling vacancies among them, shall constitute one list, on which they shall be arranged according to rank. So long as any officers shall remain on said list any vacancy occurring therein shall be filled, if possible, from among such officers, by selection if the vacancy occurs in a grade above that of colonel, and, if the vacancy occurs in a grade not above that of colonel, by the promotion of an officer who would have been entitled to promotion to that particular vacancy if the consolidation of departments hereby prescribed had never occurred: Provided, That, except as otherwise specifically provided in this act, after the consolidation of bureaus, departments, and corps hereinbefore provided for shall have been effected, no details to fill vacancies in the grade of colonel in the General Staff Corps shall be made until the number of officers of that grade in said corps shall have been reduced by 3 and thereafter the number of officers of said grade in said corps shall not exceed 10; and no details to fill vacancies in the grade of lieutenant colonel in the General Staff Corps shall be made until after the number of officers of that grade in said corps shall have been reduced by 4, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade in said corps shall not exceed 14; and no details to fill vacancies in the grade of major in the General Staff Corps shall be made until after the number of officers of that grade in said corps shall have been reduced by 7, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade in said corps shall not exceed 25; and no details to fill vacancies in the grade of captain in the General Staff Corps shall be made until after the number of officers of that grade in said corps shall have been reduced by 11, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade in said corps shall not exceed 10; and whenever the separation of a line officer of any grade and arm from the General Staff Corps shall create therein a vacancy that, under the terms of this proviso, can not be filled by detail such separation shall operate to make a permanent reduction of 1 in the total number of officers of said grade and arm in the line of the Army as soon as such reduction can be made without depriving any officer of his commission: Provided further, That such duty or duties as are now required by law to be performed by any officer or officers of The Adjutant General's or Inspector General's Department shall hereafter be performed by such officer or officers of the General Staff Corps as the Secretary of War may designate for the purpose: Provided further, That when a vacancy in the grade of major general shall occur among the officers hereby transferred to the General Staff Corps that vacancy shall not be filled, but the office in which the vacancy occurs shall immediately cease and determine: Provided further, That officers now holding commissions as officers of either of the departments hereby consolidated with the General Staff Corps may at any time, in the discretion of the President, and shall, whenever they shall have served four years as members of said corps, be detached therefrom and assigned to duty with the line of the Army, or to such other duty not pertaining to the General Staff Corps as the President may direct, and they shall not be returned to duty in said corps until they shall have served for two years under detachment therefrom except in cases of emergency or in time of war, and during their detachment from said corps their places therein may be filled by the selection and detail, under such regulations as the President may prescribe, of line officers having the same rank, respectively, as the officers whose places said line officers are to fill: Provided further, That officers of the line of the Army who are now, or who shall hereafter be, detailed for service in any staff corps or department under the provisions of section 26 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," may at any time, in the discretion of the President, be relieved from such service and returned to duty with the line: Provided further, That, in order to expedite the reduction of the number of officers of the consolidated General Staff Corps to the limit contemplated by this act, officers who now hold commissions as officers of either of the departments hereby consolidated with the General Staff Corps, and who are eligible for retirement from active service under any laws existing at the date of the approval of this act, shall, upon their own applications, and may, in the discretion of the President, be retired from active service: Provided further, That all officers of the line of the Army now detailed for service in either of the departments hereby consolidated with the General Staff Corps shall be relieved from duty in said corps at the expiration of their present periods of detail, or sooner if the President shall so direct, and all officers hereafter detailed for service in said corps shall be relieved therefrom at the expiration of four years of such service, or sooner if the President shall so direct, and no officer who shall have served for four years under detail in said corps shall be eligible for further service therein until after he shall have served at least two years with the branch of the Army in which commissioned, except in case of emergency or in time of war: Provided further, That hereafter, when any officer shall, under the provisions of section 26 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," be appointed or reappointed to an office with rank above that of colonel his appointment to said office and his acceptance of the appointment shall not create a vacancy in the arm, corps, or department from which he shall be appointed, but he shall retain therein the same relative position that he would have held if he had not been appointed to said office, and he shall return to said relative position upon the expiration of his appointment to said office unless he shall be reappointed thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 12, to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That hereafter no vacancies occurring in the grade of major general in the line of the Army shall be filled until the number of officers of that grade shall have been reduced by three, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade shall not exceed four; that hereafter no vacancies occurring in the grade of brigadier general in the line of the Army shall be filled until after the number of officers of that grade shall have been reduced by five, and thereafter the number of officers of said grade shall not exceed eleven; and for the purposes of this act general officers not commissioned as officers of any of the staff corps or departments of the Army shall be regarded as general officers of the line: Provided, That hereafter the number of officers above the grade of colonel who shall be members of the General Staff Corps under the provisions of section 3 of the act of Congress approved February 14, 1903, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the Army," shall be two: Provided further, That hereafter service as a cadet of the United States Military Academy or as a naval cadet or midshipman shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Army: Provided further, That hereafter service as a cadet, naval cadet, or midshipman at either the United States Military or Naval Academies, exclusive of the sea service as prescribed by law upon completion of the academic course and preliminary to final graduation at the latter institution, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 14, to strike out section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. That the appropriations herein provided for the several departments consolidated under this act shall be available for the consolidated corps herein created.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 17, to strike out section 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act shall be held or construed so as to separate any officer from the Army or to diminish the rank now held by him, and that all laws and parts of laws, so far as they are inconsistent with the terms of this act, be, and they are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to ask the Senator from Delaware, in charge of the bill, what is the amount of the total appropriation carried by the bill?

Mr. DU PONT. I would state to the Senator from North Carolina that, as reported to the Senate, the bill carries $94,042,630.98.

Mr. OVERMAN. How does that compare with last year's bill?

Mr. DU PONT. In last year's bill the amount appropriated was $92,587,785.97.

Mr. OVERMAN. The amount carried by the bill, as passed by the House of Representatives, is something over $87,000,000, and you have added $6,000,000, making $94,000,000. So, really, the bill carries $2,000,000 more than the bill of last year?

Mr. WARREN. About a million and a half more.

Mr. DU PONT. About a million and a half more.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. The House left out the provision for the Cavalry.

Mr. BACON. I send an amendment to the desk in a modified form, and ask that it may be read. I presume that as good a place as anywhere for it to come in will be at the end of the bill.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia submits an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. BACON. I presume that usually the repealing clause is separate, but in this case it is made a part of the sentence. I do not know how to insert my amendment without making a change in that particular.

Mr. DU PONT. Does the Senator from Georgia inquire where the amendment should be inserted?

Mr. BACON. I would put it at the close of the bill.

Mr. DU PONT. I should say it would be best to put it on page 60, after line 25.

Mr. BACON. Very well; make it a new paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, after line 25, it is proposed to insert:

Except as herein provided or specifically otherwise provided by statute the money herein appropriated for the pay and supplies of the Army shall be used only for the pay and supplies of the Army on duty in the United States and in the territory subject to the laws and jurisdiction of the United States; and no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used for the pay or supplies of any part of the Army of the United States employed, stationed, or on duty in any country or territory beyond the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States or in going to or returning from points within the same: Provided, That this prohibition shall not apply to cases of emergency within the discretion of the President arising at a time when the Congress of the United States is not in session. In every case when, while Congress is not in session as aforesaid, any part of the Army shall be ordered for duty into any country or territory beyond the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to report to the Congress at the beginning of the next ensuing session the authority for such order, the number and designation of the troops so ordered on duty in said foreign country, and the operation of said troops under said order; and no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used for the pay and supplies of said part of the Army remaining in said foreign country beyond the term of 10 days after the beginning of the next ensuing session of Congress unless expressly authorized thereto by act of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point of order on the amendment that it is clearly general legislation changing existing law, and not reported by any standing or select committee.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think anyone can hold the floor on a point of order; at least I never saw it done here.

Mr. BACON. Possibly not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I have very little to say about the amendment, although possibly on another occasion I might have a good deal to say about it. I simply wish to explain the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. President, we have come to a stage where the executive department orders the Army of the United States into foreign countries, not only without the authority of Congress, not only when Congress is not in session, but when Congress is in session, and without even communicating the fact to Congress. We have now in China I do not know how many troops, but I suppose from what I have seen in the newspapers at the time that they were sent from Manila—which, by the way, was done, if I recollect aright, while Congress was in session, without a word to Congress about it.

Mr. DU PONT. I can say to the Senator from Georgia that there are eight companies there—two battalions.

Mr. BACON. Eight companies, amounting, I presume, to about 800 or a thousand men.

Mr. President, there is not on the statute books a line or a letter which authorizes the sending of those troops into China. They have been there ever since some time last winter or probably in the early part of the winter; I do not recollect accurately about that; it is given out that they are guarding a railroad—guarding a railroad under no treaty, under no statute law or treaty law, simply a pure act of the executive department, under the authority of the War Department alone or under the direction of the President of the United States.

Mr. President, the authority to send a thousand men implies the authority to send 10,000 men or 50,000 men; and unless we are to abdicate the functions of Congress, it is time, in my opinion, when that matter should be brought to an issue. It should be determined whether or not in this country, under a government of law, as it should be, and not of men, it is competent for the Executive or the officers under the Executive to order soldiers, a part of the Army of the United States, into a foreign country, not only without the authority of Congress, but without even deigning to inform Congress of the fact. I understand that those troops are in China under some agreement that was entered into by military officers after the Boxer War about what particular part each Government represented by troops there should afterwards play in the arrangement which they made for the purpose of thereafter preserving peace in that country. If we had made a treaty to that effect, there would have been the authority of treaty law; but there was no treaty and never any suggestion of a treaty.

I may be mistaken, but I do not remember even that there was ever a communication of the Executive sent to Congress at the time we had the Army operations in the Boxer War, a time, I think, when the present Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] was Secretary of War, if I am not mistaken in my recollection.

I do not, of course, question the propriety in that emergency of the Government acting in a way which was necessary for the protection of the lives, to say nothing of the property of our legation there and of our citizens who were there under its protection, but I did say at the time that I thought it had been carried beyond the warrant of law. While I recognize that in that case there was an emergency and it was an impossibility to assemble Congress, there was no time to wait, and there should have been a rescue. I recollect very distinctly that there were after that time the most elaborate preparations made in the way of providing quartermaster's supplies, ordnance stores, commissary stores, and all the supplies and paraphernalia of a regular invading army as if for a lengthy or permanent occupation of China, and I recollect very distinctly having something to say about that in the Senate. I think it was at the time when we had one of the Philippine bills up when there was a proposition to clothe the President of the United States with absolute autocratic power in the Philippines, and I took occasion to animadvert upon that.

But that is past history; it is done and over, and there is the palliating feature about it that, while it might have been carried too far, and the power then exercised was greater than the law warranted, yet it had its origin in what was a proper proceeding. I can not be misunderstood as to that. But now, speaking for the present, the sending of troops at a time when they are not there for the purpose, unless it may be considered an indirect purpose, of protecting our legation—I presume it might be said that in guarding the railroad they are keeping up means of communication—but whatever might be the necessity for that, Mr. President, I do insist that the power, when exercised, to send troops, a part of the Army of the United States, into a foreign country, to stay there for months, if not a year or more, is one which should not be exercised without the facts being submitted to Congress for the approval of Congress and in order that the Congress might inquire into it, so that the matter might then proceed in pursuance of law.

If this were the only instance, it would not be so important that we should have legislation of this kind; but we are having almost every day in the newspapers mention of the fact of the use of the Navy of the United States and the quasi naval force, to wit, the marines, in foreign countries. That can not be dealt with in this bill, and I do not offer anything in this bill to affect that; but, if I do not change my mind very much, the next time we have any naval legislation, I do propose to attempt to engraft on the bill some such provision as I have in mind.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, that is a very much more difficult question than this is, because of the frequent necessity to land marines for the temporary purpose of protecting consulates and American citizens, and so forth, in times of violence and disorder; and that is going to be a very much more difficult proposition than this to differentiate between cases that are justifiable and those that are not justifiable. I am not going into that subject at all; but I say it emphasizes the departure of the executive department of the Government from what I conceive to be a course authorized by law.

It has not only been done in the case of the Army which I have instanced, but, as I have said, almost every day we have in the newspapers an account of the use of the marines, not for the temporary purpose of protecting consulates, but for the purpose of taking part between contending forces in foreign countries. I recollect, Mr. President, two or three years ago that we had an account in the newspapers of two transports full of soldiers, or marines, I presume they were—I have forgotten about that, but I think they were marines—two transports full of marines going down the Chesapeake Bay, bound for Central America, for the purpose either of taking part in some of the controversies in that country or overawing some of the combatants. We have had instances of marines being sent in that menacing way, and we have instance after instance where they have actually taken part in some controversy in a foreign country.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Not in Mexico.

Mr. BACON. I will come to that when it arises, but that is not the present matter I have in mind. I can conceive of a violation of law in going into Mexico as well as anywhere else.

The amendment which I propose does not go so far really as I should like to see it go, but I have stood on what I consider to be the conservative side in yielding to the Executive discretion in cases of emergency requiring immediate action when Congress is not in session.

We see in this morning's paper that we now have a lot of marines, not on the seacoast, not protecting consulates, but in the interior of a foreign country laying down the law to the combatants. "You shall fight here only, and you shall not fight there." That is absolutely war, or would be if it were a country capable of resisting an act of war. Everybody knows that. It is an act of war to invade another country, and it is no less an act of war when a weak and feeble and impotent country is invaded than when the powerful Empire of Germany or of Great Britain should be invaded. It stands on exactly the same footing; and what we would not dare to do with either one of those two great powers we are constantly doing with our weaker neighbors.

The time was when it was thought that the use of the Army to invade a foreign country was something never to be dreamed of, except it was done under the authority of Congress; but now, forsooth, when we take up the newspapers in the morning we are told about these things, about which we are not in any manner consulted, about which we are not even given the poor courtesy of information. It is a question whether these acts of war shall be performed in obedience to the order of the Secretary of State, and every day we have columns of such news, as if it were a recognized power in the State Department to say whether or not one county should be invaded or another, or whether sides should be taken by the armed forces of the United States in the upholding of one faction or the putting down of another.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BACON. Certainly. I am sorry I forgot to yield to the Senator sooner.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I merely want to ask the Senator if he knows how many men in the Army of the United States are now on foreign soil and how long they have been maintained there? The Senator may have stated it, but I do not recollect that he has.

Mr. BACON. I have no definite information except that which was given a few moments ago by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. He said there were eight companies—two battallons—in China. That is a portion of the Army. Of course, the other matter of the marines would not be affected by this amendment, and could not be affected in this bill; but hardly a week passes that we do not have some item in the newspapers of the Secretary of State exercising the powers of Congress in what is tantamount to a declaration of war, and which would result in war except that the power is exercised in the case of feeble and impotent countries that can not make war with us.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says this is general legislation. I very respectfully differ from the learned and honorable Senator in that regard. Here is a bill appropriating money for the Army, and there is nothing in the amendment which I have offered which does not relate to the payment of money except perhaps the direction to the Secretary of War that he shall make a certain report. It is a limitation on the appropriation, and nothing more. It does not appropriate any additional money; it does not divert any money; it does not conflict with any law; it is the law now, possibly not found in any express statute, but the law that the Army of the United States belongs to the territory of the United States and can not go to a foreign country without the authority of Congress, because to send it to a foreign country is an act of war, and the power to declare war is expressly by the Constitution limited to the action of Congress.

The amendment is simply a limitation upon the use of the money; it does not decrease it in any way; it simply provides that the money is appropriated for the Army of the United States operating in the United States—which I say is the law now—and that it shall be used only in the United States. I repeat that the sending of the Army outside of the United States is unlawful.

It simply says that this money shall not be used except in a case where the Army is employed as the Constitution of the United States says it shall be employed; because when the Constitution of the United States says that the power to declare war rests exclusively in Congress, it necessarily negatives such use of the Army as is by every writer on international law stated to be, not simply a declaration of war, but an act of war; for it is an act of war to send an army into a foreign country.

I understand the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says that it is not estimated for. If I understood him correctly, that was his statement.

Mr. LODGE. I did not. I said it is not reported from any standing or select committee.

Mr. BACON. It is not necessary, Mr President, that it should be. As I say, with the possible exception of that part of it which requires the Secretary of War to make a certain report, there is not a legislative feature in it, so far as the change of law is concerned. It simply places a limitation upon the appropriation for the Army, and everybody knows I do not wish to take any money away from the Army. I know that the officers and men of the Army will not think I wish anything of that kind, because I have been somewhat active on the other side of that question in my efforts to do what I conceive to be justice to the officers and men of the Army. I simply do not desire that an illegal use shall be made of the Army.

Mr. President, this amendment is guarded in this particular. If Congress is in session it is an easy matter for the Executive to bring to the attention of Congress any matter which makes it important that troops be sent into a foreign country; and under our methods a joint resolution can be passed by both Houses in one day, which will give the necessary authority. There need be no delay about it; so that while Congress is in session there is to my mind no possible excuse for the Executive sending the Army into a foreign country without first seeking the authority of Congress. The President of the United States recognizes that, and I applaud him for it.

During the Mexican troubles the President has said repeatedly—I think he has said it publicly, although I am not sure of that, but he has certainly said it officially to Members of the Senate with whom he has consulted, not simply individually, but to some of us collectively when he has had us present at these conversations and conferences—that he would not assume the authority to send troops into Mexico without the authorization of Congress. I say I applaud him for it, and I am not specially criticizing the President for this act, because it is along the line of things which have been submitted to by Congress so long that it has come to be regarded as one of the executive functions; and if an executive function can by use be so enlarged as to give an irresponsible and uncontrolled power over the Army, then every principle and theory of our Government falls to the ground, because if there is anything in the framework of our Government which was sought to be most carefully guarded it was any use of the Army by executive authority other than the uses prescribed and authorized by law.

Mr. President, as I say, while Congress is in session there can be no possible trouble or difficulty. No case can possibly arise while Congress is in session in which the persons or the property of citizens of the United States can be endangered without the opportunity of the use of the Army for their protection, because in one day the fact can be communicated to Congress, and in that one day the necessary authority can be given. On the other hand, when it comes to the question of what shall be done in a case of emergency when Congress is not in session, I have gone further than I think would really be required. I think except in a very extreme emergency, such as the Boxer case, for instance, Congress ought to be called together. In these days of telegraphs and railroads Congress can easily be assembled in five or six days.

But waiving that, this amendment proposes that in case of emergency, within the discretion of the President of the United States, while Congress is not in session, he is authorized to proceed, and there is no prohibition upon his doing so.

The only subsequent provisions are those requiring that there shall be a report to Congress. I would have laid that duty upon the President, but I do not think we can dictate to the President what he shall say to Congress. That is a constitutional function; but it is within our power to require the Secretary of War to do it. I grant that possibly to that extent there may be a question of order about it, and if necessary, that part of the proposed amendment can be eliminated; but the balance of it is nothing on earth but a limitation upon an appropriation which we are making, and the limitation which fixes the 10-day term after the meeting of Congress is simply for the purpose of enforcing the contemplated function to be performed by Congress, that the authority shall be given by Congress before it shall be exercised. When it is exercised at a time when Congress is not in session, then when Congress does assemble, unless that authority is given by Congress, the order must end within 10 days, which gives ample time for its consideration and determination by Congress; and if Congress does not sanction it, then the troops shall come back to this country, where they belong.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have not the slightest intention of discussing the question of troops in China or marines in Nicaragua, if that is what was meant, or anything of that sort.

There are certain great general statutes, not appropriation bills, which fix the pay of the Army. This is a proposal to put a limitation upon those statutes, to add to those general statutes. It seems to me it is very clearly legislation, and I make the point of order.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, before this matter is disposed of I wish, not to argue the question which has been suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], but to express my dissent from the position he takes.

In my judgment, there is no law which forbids the President to send troops of the United States out of this country into any country where he considers it to be his duty as Commander in Chief of the Army to send them, unless it be for the purpose of making war, which, of course, he can not do.

Doubtless Congress could by law forbid the troops being sent out of the country; doubtless Congress has not done it; and I apprehend that any Congress that undertook to do it would find that there would be a general protest from the people of the United States against depriving the Commander in Chief of the Army of the power to protect our citizens under those circumstances which exist widely throughout the world in countries whose governments have not the power to maintain order within their jurisdiction. From time immemorial it has been the practice of civilized nations to send troops into those countries whose governments were too feeble or to ill organized, too deficient in power to enforce their laws and to protect foreigners. From time immemorial it has been the practice for civilized nations to render protection to their own citizens, to their own consuls, to their own ministers, ambassadors, and legations. That was the situation in China in the summer of 1900, when the minister of the United States, the members of his legation, and the American citizens who gathered there for safety were surrounded by an armed force which the Government of China professed itself unable to control. Our troops went just far enough and not one step further than was necessary to preserve them from murder.

And now, if I am not mistaken, Congress has appropriated money for the specific purpose of building quarters in Peking, to be used for the housing of troops who shall be stationed there to prevent a recurrence of that most deplorable condition.

It is the unanimous judgment of the men who saved the legations in Peking in 1900, of the officers who had command of the troops who rendered that great service to civilization, that the way to prevent a recurrence of that condition is to keep open the communication between the embassies and legations in Peking and the seacoast. And I say, sir, there is no law, and I do not believe there ever will be a law, to prevent the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States from rendering that service which, through all civilization, has been rendered by every nation that is entitled to the loyalty of its citizens, in giving them the protection required by self-respect.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator begs the question. I am not saying and have not said anything in derogation of the duty to use the Army for the protection of our citizens and our officials whenever it is necessary to do so; but the question is where the authority rests.

Mr. ROOT. The authority rests with the Commander in Chief of the Army.

Mr. BACON. I differ with the Senator from New York in regard to that, as I have already said.

Mr. ROOT. It is limited solely by his constitutional incapacity to make war. To send troops into those countries which have not the capacity to maintain order and which are incapable of protecting foreign citizens is not making war. We made no war upon China in 1900, and we are making no war in China to-day, for what we do is with the consent of China.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator has repeated what he has already said, and I shall endeavor to answer him, if he will permit me.

I say, without the fear of contradiction, that the invasion of any country by the armed forces of another country is an act of war, and the only reason why it results in war in some cases and does not so result in other cases, is because in some cases the invaded power has the ability to resist it and to make war; and in other cases, as in those which we have immediately in contemplation, the invaded power is feeble and impotent and can not make war. But the Senator will not dispute the fact that, by every rule which is found in any book on international law, the invasion of any country by the armed forces of another country is an act of war.

When the Senator says that the power rests with the President of the United States, limited only by his inability to make war, he begs the question, because that is the very point, that he is making war, although there may be no battles fought. He is doing that which will cause a battle if the other party resists, and he is doing that which, according to the Senator's own definition of his power, is denied to him. He is denied the right to make war, and the sending of troops into another country is an act of war.

But, Mr. President, I have endeavored carefully to exclude anything which would interfere with the proper exercise of the power of this Government in cases of emergency, in order that no harm may come to citizens who need protection. Under this amendment it would be perfectly competent, when Congress was in session, to get immediate authority from Congress; and if an emergency arises when Congress was not in session, it is expressly provided that the President can send troops. But who can justify the executive department in sending a regiment of troops to China and keeping them there, perhaps for a year or more, without even informing Congress of the fact?

If he can send a regiment to China, he is doing it in the exercise of an unlimited discretion; and if the discretion is unlimited, it can be exercised at any time, and on any occasion when he sees fit to exercise it. And if he can send troops to one country, he can send them to another country. I assert that it is absolutely at war with every principle of this Government to say that the President of the United States can maintain a regiment in China without authority from Congress, and without even communicating the fact to Congress.

The Senator says there have been occasions, which he illustrates by the present status in Peking, when it has been necessary to keep troops in a foreign country. If so, is there any difficulty in having that fact recognized by Congress? And if it can be done without the authority of Congress, in one case, what is to prevent its being done in every other case? And if it can be done with one regiment, why can it not be done with 10? I say, Mr. President, it is absolutely inconsistent with our institutions, and what is proposed in this amendment is no hardship.

The Senator from New York says there would be a resentment on the part of the people in this country against the idea that opportunity for the protection of our officials or our citizens should be withdrawn. That is an unwarranted conclusion. There is not a line or a letter in this amendment which would interfere in any way, either when Congress was in session or when it was not in session, with endeavoring to protect, to the fullest extent of the power of the Army of the United States, every official and every citizen who might be endangered in a foreign country. There is no such thought or purpose or tendency in the amendment. The sole purpose is to keep the power where it belongs.

Mr. President, I deny the assertion of the Senator that the great office of the Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States clothes him with any power except in cases of emergency. I speak of sending armed forces into a foreign country without the authority of Congress. It is not necessary that there should be a law prohibiting it. It is necessary that there should be a law authorizing it, for the Constitution of the United States prohibits it when it denies to the President of the United States the power to make war.

Mr. President, this may not be accomplished on this occasion. The attendance in the Senate is thin. I will not say there is no quorum here, because that might necessitate a roll call, although it is possible there is none; but I want to put Senators on notice now that this is a matter which will not down, whether or not it now goes on the statute books. It is a matter which will be agitated—the power of the executive department to order the Army into foreign countries, to do what I think may be stated without extravagance to be an abuse of the rightful power which exists. Within its proper limitations it must frequently be exercised to land marines; but I refer to the abuse of it in the landing of troops which are not designed for that purpose, and whose landing is designed to take part in the internecine strifes in those countries, the landing and transportation in the interior of which is designed to set up one faction and put down another. The history of it within the past few years does not leave any doubt about that. We know that in one of the South American countries one Government was practically overthrown and another set up by reason of the interference of the Government of the United States. We know the fact that one of those factions held the customhouse, and that faction had given some bond secured by the customs, and some of those bonds happened to be held by some of our people in the United States; and when the adverse party got into power the Navy and the Marine forces of the United States were used, and moved the customhouse so that they could collect the entries at some other place; and the Army and Marine forces of the United States were used for the purpose of maintaining that as a customhouse in order that tolls might be collected and paid over to these bondholders. Everybody recollects all about that.

Mr. President, that is simply one of many instances. If any man had kept the clippings in the newspapers about the interference in foreign countries in the landing of marines for the purpose of taking part in strifes in those countries, he would have a pretty large volume now, and it would make very interesting reading.

But I do not design to detain the Senate with it now. I think the amendment is strictly in order, and for that reason I have offered it in good faith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is prepared to rule on the question of order. Waiving for the time being the question whether a mere limitation upon an appropriation is obnoxious to the rule, the Chair finds this language in the amendment:

> In every case when, while Congress is not in session as aforesaid, any part of the Army shall be ordered for duty into any country or territory beyond the jurisdiction of the laws of the United States, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to report to the Congress at the beginning of the next ensuing session the authority for such order, the number and designation of the troops so ordered on duty in said foreign country, and the operation of said troops under said order.

Mr. BACON. I will modify the amendment by striking out those words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels constrained to hold that that language is manifestly general legislation, and that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BACON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. BACON. I may have misunderstood the Chair. Did I understand the Chair to rule on the entire amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair ruled on the amendment as it is now before the Chair.

Mr. BACON. Then I understand the Chair did not rule on the amendment with those words stricken out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not had that amendment.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Chair's pardon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair ruled upon the amendment. If the Senator presents another amendment, the Chair will rule upon it.

Mr. BACON. I have a right to modify my amendment, and I modify it by striking out the words just read by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment as modified, which is simply a limitation upon the appropriations of the bill now under consideration, is in order, and the question is upon the amendment.

Mr. BACON. I wish to say that I think the Chair ruled correctly in both cases. I think the amendment was out of order with that language in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. BACON. There are manifest reasons why I do not call for a division. I wish to repeat the notice I gave to Senators, that this is not the last of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The noes have it, and the amendment is disagreed to. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole, open to amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 6, on page 26, insert:

> Range for Field Artillery target practice: The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, appropriated by public resolution approved July 8, 1912, for the expenses of the Organized Militia in participating in encampments with regular troops for field instruction, may be used for the acquisition, by purchase or condemnation, of the necessary land for a suitable range for Field Artillery target practice—the land to be of such general character as to permit its use for the instruction of troops of other arms, to be located within the eastern military division, and to be so situated as to present a high degree of available for concentration of Field Artillery.

Mr. WARREN. I make a point of order on that amendment. It is not estimated for and has not the recommendation of any committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OLIVER. I think I will not ask to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STONE. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I see, on page 26 of the bill, the House provision appropriating to pay "the expenses of the Organized Militia of any State," and so forth, "which may be authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampment as may be established for field instruction of the troops of the Regular Army" is stricken out. Why was it stricken out?

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from Missouri it was stricken out because it is embodied in a joint resolution which was approved the 8th day of July, 1912. It has already passed and is now a law.

Mr. STONE. It is already provided for?

Mr. DU PONT. It is already provided for.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DU PONT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, August 15, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 14, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and everliving God, our heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the sublime faith which in all the past has brought men to Thy feet in prayer, where they have found strength, consolation, hope, and guidance; for every thought evolved, for every truth discovered, which holds us close to Thee and makes for righteousness in the soul. Grant that each of us may be able to say, now and always, "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 21279. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bill of the following title:

H. R. 22199. An act to extend the limits of the port of entry of Galveston, Tex., to include Port Bolivar, in that State.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2904) to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to regulate the operation and equipment of the vehicles of the Metropolitan Coach Co.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 26.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 copies of Senate Document No. 654, Sixty-first Congress, second session, entitled "Biographical Congressional Directory," of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Senate concurrent resolution 26.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 copies of Senate Document No. 654, Sixty-first Congress, second session, entitled "Biographical Congressional Directory," of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

On August 10, 1912:

H. R. 18960. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

On August 13, 1912:

H. J. Res. 333. Joint resolution to authorize the loan of obsolete Springfield rifles, etc., to the historical pageant committee, Philadelphia, Pa.

SPEECHES OF HON. THERON AKIN, OF NEW YORK.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if it is in order now for the special committee appointed by the Chair yesterday to report on the speeches of Hon. THERON AKIN of New York, to make a report?

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and, strictly speaking, the Chair supposes it would not be in order; but if it is a short matter, pertaining to the conduct of the House, the Chair is inclined to entertain it, unless there is objection. If it is going to precipitate any considerable debate, the Chair would not feel as though he ought to entertain it to-day.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know something of the contents of the report—what there is of it.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read at the desk. The gentleman will then perceive its contents.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report. The House will then determine whether we shall proceed with it or not.

The Clerk read as follows:

The special committee appointed to consider certain "Extensions of remarks" printed in the RECORD of August 8 and August 10, 1912, under leave to print, by THERON AKIN, a Representative from the State of New York, submit the following report:

The committee having considered the said "Extensions of remarks," and having heard Mr. AKIN concerning the same, are of opinion and find that the printing of the said "Extensions of remarks" in the RECORD constitutes an abuse of the privilege to print granted by the House. The said "Extensions of remarks" contain personal imputations upon Members of the House and reflections upon officers of the executive department of the Government which amount to charges of inefficiency and misconduct, and in some respects are libelous in character. The committee can not believe that in granting leave to print remarks the House of Representatives intended to permit its RECORD to be made a vehicle for personal attacks upon Members of the House, upon officers of the Government, or upon private citizens. The committee report the following resolution and recommend its passage by the House:

Resolved, That the "Extensions of remarks" by THERON AKIN, printed on pages 11344, 11345, 11346, and 11347 of the RECORD of August 8, 1912, and on pages 11548, 11549, 11550, 11551, 11552, and 11553 of the RECORD of August 10, 1912, be, and the same hereby are, ordered expunged from the RECORD.

W. W. RUCKER.
ROBERT N. PAGE.
SAMUEL W. MCCALL.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. AKIN of New York. Yes; I object.

Mr. BUTLER. Object to what—the expunging?

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

VETO MESSAGE—THE IRON AND STEEL SCHEDULE (H. DOC. NO. 908).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return, with my objections, H. R. 18642, a bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,'" approved August 5, 1909.

This bill provides for a complete revision of Schedule C of the tariff law, relating to metals and manufactures of metals. In committee and in the consideration of the majority who passed the bill the important part of it seems to have been the basic manufactures of iron and steel, and most of the information which was obtained and discussed was in reference to that manufacture. The truth is that iron and steel as primary products are less than one-third in value of the subject matter covered by it; and that there may be no misunderstanding in regard to this, I present, as an appendix, a table prepared by the Census Bureau showing that included in Schedule C are 59 allied industries of sufficient importance to justify separate classification, study, and report by the Census Bureau, all of which are directly affected by the bill under consideration.

If only the primary products of iron and steel were affected by this bill, or if they constituted the larger part of the values involved in Schedule C, the consideration of the bill for purposes of approval or disapproval would be easier, but it is not within my power to separate these various industries. The bill is presented to me as a whole and must be approved or disapproved as a whole.

The table furnished showed that "foundry and machine-shop products," which are secondary products of the iron and steel industry, are made by more than 13,000 competing establishments, with an invested capital of more than a billion and a half dollars, with more than half a million wage earners employed, and producing nearly a billion and a quarter dollars in value of products annually. Every dollar of this capital and every workman employed in the industry is directly affected by the bill, and I can not find, either in the report of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House or, to any extent, in the discussion of the schedule, that serious consideration has been given to the effect of this revision on this particular branch of the industry, and the same thing is true of more than two-thirds of the industries covered by the schedule.

It appears in the discussion of this revision now presented to me for consideration that no public hearings have been given by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, on the ground that it would thereby cause delay. The Ways and Means Committee avowed that the principle of protection had not been considered, but that in framing the present revision of the metal schedule the committee had "adopted the general principle of reducing all duties to a revenue basis, so far as practicable, except in those cases where more cogent considerations than those relating to the fiscal policy of the Government dictated the transfer of given items to the free list." This makes a clear-cut issue between the protective policy and that of a tariff for revenue only, and without fuller information, therefore, I am obliged to treat this bill as a revenue bill, and one in which the consideration of preserving the industry by maintaining a tariff necessary to do so had little weight. There is nothing to show me that the duties provided in the bill will equal the difference in the cost of production here and abroad in the great lines of industries, and that the wages of workmen will not be reduced by a measure which avowedly discards entirely the principle of fair protection. It should be noted that the labor employed in the secondary industries, which has had so little consideration in this bill, is in a large measure high-grade, skilled labor, commanding a high level of wages.

This schedule was included in the general tariff revision of 1909, at which time public hearings were given, attended by importers, domestic producers, employees, and consumers, and the rates then on many of its items were heavily cut, ranging from 10 to 75 per cent, and it would seem now that a thorough study of each one of these separate industries should at least be made, that the Executive and Congress as well might act wisely and intelligently upon them, in order to avoid a further revision at an early date when the facts concerning them could be ascertained.

The products of many of these industries affected by this bill do not enter directly into the daily consumption of the people. The consumers of these products are, to a large extent, manufacturers using these articles in further processes of production. There is no evidence of any widespread demand from such consumers for a revision of the rates on these articles, and for this reason a sufficient time may well be taken to give the study to the respective industries which their importance would seem to demand.

I am not prepared to say that there are no items in this schedule which might not well be reduced, but the general average ad valorem rate of duty under it, taken as a whole for the year 1911, is 32.03 per cent, as against 37.97 per cent in 1896 under the Wilson law, or an apparent reduction of 15.6 per cent of the Wilson duties. The Dingley rates for this schedule in 1909 were 38.09 per cent, showing a reduction in 1911 for the present law of 15.9 per cent of the Dingley rates. Indeed, there is no year since 1883 when the Government statistics show as low an ad valorem rate of duty for this schedule as is shown in 1911, and it does not appear that schedule statistics were kept prior to 1883, so that no comparison can be made prior to that time.

There is little logical relation between the reductions made by this bill in the schedule. For example, steam engines and machine tools in the present law are dutiable at 30 per cent. In this revision steam engines are reduced to 15 per cent, and the whole machine-tool industry is put on the free list, without any reason whatever being given in the report of the Ways and Means Committee in either case for such action.

The term "machine tools" has already been the subject of much litigation, and its scope should be clearly defined before the great variety of articles which it now seems to cover are placed on the free list.

The expansion of our foreign trade would seem to demand that a transfer to the free list, like the one made in this bill, of such an enormous range of undetermined products and the opening of the best market in the world to free and unrestricted competition should not be made without at the same time at least securing, as is the case now of specified agricultural implements, the privilege of a like free entry into the markets of our competitors.

It is further difficult to understand by what process of reasoning it is possible to justify a transfer to the free list of a great line of finished articles, while nearly every one of the crude products from which they are made are retained on the dutiable list.

A bill for a complete revision of this schedule was presented to me a year ago in the extra session of this Congress. Many increases and decreases of rates are now made from those named in the former measure. The changes are not explained and indicate the hasty method pursued in the preparation of both. Is it not fair to ask, either on the basis of protection or revenue, which was right?

On the whole, therefore, I am not willing to approve of legislation of this kind, which vitally affects not only millions of workingmen and the families dependent on them, but hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of stocks of goods in the hands of storekeepers and distributors generally, without first providing for a careful and distinterested inquiry into the conditions of the whole industry.

From the outset of my administration I have urged a revision of the tariff based on a nonpartisan study of the facts. I have provided the means for securing such information in the appointment of a Tariff Board. Their thorough work, already completed on several schedules, has justified my confidence in this method. The principle is indorsed by chambers of commerce and boards of trade in almost every city of importance in the country. The proposed bill has not been framed on the basis of any such study of the industry.

Avowedly its rates are fixed with no consideration of anything but revenue. The principle of protection is disregarded entirely, and, therefore, it is not too much to say that the effect of these sweeping changes on the welfare of those engaged in these varied industries has been disregarded.

WM. H. TAFT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the message of the President is a matter of highest privilege, and I presume under the circumstances of to-day its consideration presents a new question. The Constitution requires the House to vote on a veto message of the President when it comes before the House. I know it is a new question, and the Chair may want to decide it. It is new as to whether the consideration of the veto message would take precedence over Calendar Wednesday on a motion to pass the bill over the President's veto.

I move that the bill amending the iron and steel schedule be passed notwithstanding the objections of the President. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] any suggestion?

Mr. MANN. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Under the decision of the House on a former occasion, that a constitutional question could not be raised on Calendar Wednesday to supersede the regular order of business, is it in order now to dispose of the President's veto?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think the precedent that the gentleman refers to is not applicable to this case. That was a question as to whether a constitutional question could be raised on Calendar Wednesday. This is a mandate of the Constitution, that the House shall vote on a veto message of the President. True, I admit that the House can, if it desires to do so, pass it over to another day. But it being a mandate of the Constitution that we shall accept or reject a veto, the contention I make is that the rules of the House that are adopted from time to time can not change a direct mandate of the Constitution, and therefore it is in order.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, the provision in the Constitution to the effect that the House, upon receiving a veto message, shall reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that it shall be put upon its passage again was long ago held not to require an immediate vote, and it was long ago held that it was in the power of the House to refer the veto message and the accompanying papers to a committee, or to postpone the consideration and final vote upon the proposition. It is not material to me. I would just as lief, so far as I am concerned, have a vote now as at any other time on the matter. But I think the Speaker ought to be careful in making a ruling in reference to a matter concerning Calendar Wednesday. The Constitution does not require an immediate vote, and that matter has been settled. It seems to me that under the rules of the House the question is to be brought before the House in accordance with the rules of the House.

It is certain that the House could now, by vote, postpone the consideration of the veto message. Then the question is whether the House has not by rule postponed the consideration of it. The Speaker will remember that his predecessor ruled that it was in order to take up privileged business on Calendar Wednesday, and the House overruled the Speaker; and, if my recollection serves me correctly, the distinguished gentleman now occupying the Speaker's chair and the distinguished gentleman now the floor leader on the Democratic side voted to overrule the Speaker and to declare that Calendar Wednesday was holy and could not be invaded by any privileged matter, constitutional or otherwise.

Do the exigencies of the present case require these gentlemen to reverse their former holdings?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I agree with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said, that it has been held repeatedly heretofore that it is in the power of the House to postpone action on a veto message coming from the President; but it is a mandate of the Constitution that the House shall act on this message. If we admit as a precedent that a veto message can not be acted on upon Wednesday, it might at some time bring this House to a condition where it could not act on a veto message at all. It might be that Calendar Wednesday was the last day of a session; that the message came in on Calendar Wednesday, and, although a majority wanted to act on the measure one way or the other, they might not be able to command the two-thirds vote to set aside Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will recall that the rule in reference to Calendar Wednesday provides that it shall not be in effect during the last two weeks of the session, so that if there was a decision to adjourn on a particular day the rule with reference to Calendar Wednesday would not be in force.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As the gentleman is aware, we might have reached the point of an agreement for a dissolution on Calendar Wednesday, so that there would be no "last two weeks of the session."

Mr. MANN. That would be wholly within the power of Congress. We are not compelled to vote on a veto message. There are some veto messages now before the House that have not been voted upon and may never be, and there have been many cases where veto messages have never been voted upon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The proposition that I maintain, Mr. Speaker, is that this being a mandate of the Constitution and of the highest privilege, is higher than the rules of the House, and that those rules can not govern. If we had no rules, it would be in order for me to move to pass this bill notwithstanding the veto of the President, and there is no rule that this House can make that can deprive me of my privilege and my right under the Constitution of the United States to make this motion, because it is granted to me, not by the rules of this House but by the Constitution of the American people. Therefore, I contend that, the rules of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, the motion to pass this bill over the President's veto is in order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, there are privileged questions and questions of privilege. This is a privileged motion founded in the Constitution. I recollect very well the ruling that I made while I was Speaker of the House touching the consideration of a question based on the Constitution, which arose upon a motion, or a question of consideration raised by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]. After discussion, the ruling of the Speaker was by a majority vote of the House reversed. I am here now as a Member of the House, without any question personal to myself in the premises—what is behind us is behind us—and without any regard to that overruling, but purely as a Member of this House, concerned in the orderly transaction of its business and in the preservation of the Constitution. I am satisfied that the House was in error when it overruled the Speaker on a former occasion. Two wrongs do not make a right, two precedents or a dozen do not sanctify an error or a mistake. If this be a privileged question, having its foundation in the Constitution, then it is higher than any rule of this House that contravenes that privileged question; and although the former decision might have been made by some other individual than myself then occupying the Speaker's chair, I should feel about it just as I feel now. Therefore, I believe the motion of the gentleman to be higher than any rule of this House, the tendency of which is to halt its consideration, and that the motion is in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I believe that we could safely assume that if the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] presented a question of constitutional privilege it would certainly be in order, regardless of any rule of the House. The discussion thus far has assumed that it was established that the ruling referred to, which happened in March, 1910, contained a constitutional question. I was here at the time the former Speaker was overruled, when he held that a motion from the Committee on the Census had a constitutional privilege. In my judgment that question did not present a matter of constitutional privilege. I did not believe then, and do not believe now, that the question at that time presented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] was a question of constitutional privilege. And therefore, believing that, I was opposed to the ruling of the Speaker and voted to overrule him at that time, but I did it on my belief that the question presented was one not of constitutional privilege. I think it is conceded that this question is a constitutional question and is presented by the Constitution. So that, as I look at it, the case that has been cited as a precedent is not in reality a precedent at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will ask the gentleman if he does not remember that the day after Calendar Wednesday the question again arose as to whether legislation providing for a decennial census was privileged under the Constitution notwithstanding the rules, and the Speaker of the House, in view of the decision of the House the day before, submitted that question to a decision of the House, and the House, by almost a unanimous vote, decided that the pending proposition bearing upon the taking of the decennial census had a privilege under the Constitution, notwithstanding the rules, on every day of the week except Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman states the matter correctly. On the day following, when this ruling was made by the Speaker—on Thursday—the question was again presented by the gentleman from Indiana, and the House did decide that the question presented by the gentleman was one of constitutional privilege. There is not any doubt about that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then the understanding was that it was not a constitutional question on Wednesday, but it was a constitutional question on Thursday?

Mr. NORRIS. That was the legal effect of what the House did. The House decided on Thursday that it was a question of constitutional privilege.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I agreed at the time with the ruling of Mr. Speaker CANNON, and I still do, but it is idle to say, as the gentleman from Nebraska has just said, that the House did not determine the matter that Calendar Wednesday overrode the question of the Constitution. On Wednesday the House declared that the matter was not in order because it was Calendar Wednesday, and on the next day it declared it was in order because it was a constitutional question. It could not come before the House as a matter of privilege unless it was a constitutional question, and the House declared that it was a constitutional question on Thursday, and if it was a constitutional question on Thursday, it was on the day before. The House declared on the day before that it would not permit that matter to be injected into Calendar Wednesday.

Nor was that all. The gentleman from Nebraska presented as a constitutional question a proposition to amend the rules of the House, and voted as a majority of the House voted, that the proposition to amend the rules of the House was a constitutional question.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the action which I took at that time was based on the action of the House in deciding that it was a constitutional question, and I assumed that it decided correctly and acted accordingly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman voted that his proposition presented a constitutional question. The Democratic side of the aisle voted that a proposition to change the rules was a constitutional question. Subsequently, after the election had been held and gentlemen on the Democratic side had paraded the country from one end to the other declaring that under Cannonism you could not present a proposition to the House, the gentlemen reversed their action, and declared that a proposition to change the rules was not a constitutional question. And now, having made use of the same talk throughout the country, I take it that the House is again prepared to reverse itself, and the Democratic side of the House is ready to declare that the vote which they passed two years ago holding that Calendar Wednesday could not be superseded by a constitutional question, is again to be overridden, and now that they are in control they can bring up any old thing on Calendar Wednesday and call it a constitutional question and sustain its consideration.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment this question occupies identically the same status as the question which was decided by the House two years ago in relation to census legislation. The Constitution imperatively requires Congress to take a census of the population of the country once in every 10 years, and under that constitutional provision the Speakers of the House of Representatives on several occasions have decided unequivocally that proposed legislation for the purpose of carrying out the constitutional mandate was privileged under the Constitution, notwithstanding the rules of the House.

Census legislation has no privilege under the rules of the House, and if it has any privilege at all it is under the Constitution. My judgment is that census legislation is privileged under the Constitution, notwithstanding the rules. My judgment also is that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is privileged to-day under the Constitution, notwithstanding the rules. But the House, in March, 1911, decided otherwise—that, in effect, the pending motion can not be entertained by the House to-day without reversing the decision of the House upon the census legislation two years ago.

It was argued with some degree of plausibility then that the House had a right to fix reasonable rules for the consideration of even constitutional questions, and the provision of the rule establishing Calendar Wednesday made it absolutely out of order to consider any other matters except those enumerated in paragraph 4 of the rule, and that that was a declaration on the part of the House that questions that carried a constitutional privilege could not be considered as a matter of right on Calendar Wednesday.

Of course every Member of the House knows that it would have been in order for the gentleman from Alabama to move to refer this question to the Committee on Ways and Means under the rules of the House. The House is not obliged to take up a veto message the moment it comes from the President and is read from the Clerk's desk. The House has a right to establish reasonable and practicable rules for the consideration of even constitutional questions.

But what I want to impress on the Speaker is that the pending motion occupies identically the same status that the census question occupied two years ago. If there had been any question about that, in the absence of a decision of the House, it was then decided that the census bill was privileged under the Constitution, notwithstanding the rules, but that the House had a right to make rules even for the consideration of questions carrying constitutional privilege, and that the effect of the calendar rule was and is to exclude the consideration of all measures not included within the rule except by a two-thirds vote of the House.

That is the situation. That question was decided deliberately by an almost unanimous vote of the House the day following the overruling or reversing the decision of the Speaker. If that decision is to stand, it is decisive of the present question.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is one of the most important questions that this House can be called upon to settle, and when a plain mandate of the Constitution declares that the House "shall proceed to dispose of" the veto, it is utterly preposterous to assume that the House by a mere rule of procedure can interpose an objection sufficiently strong to defeat the purpose of the Constitution. If we can do that in this House——

Mr. BUTLER. But the House has done it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. No matter what the House has done. If it has done so, I am sure that it has done wrong.

Mr. BUTLER. Are not the precedents of the House of any consequence, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Is the gentleman aware that a veto came in here on last Friday, and that at the will of a single man, simply because there were a large number of absentees upon that side of the House, it was laid over until the following Tuesday?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. In that case the gentleman from Alabama made a motion affecting the disposition of that particular veto message of the President.

Mr. HILL. Oh, not at all. It was simply left upon the Speaker's table until he saw fit to bring it up.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. In this case by a mere rule of the House it is assumed to prevent that which it is declared by the Constitution we must do. If we can do this in this case, then by a mere rule of the House we can prevent the Congress of the United States from meeting on the first Monday of December, because the English language speaks no more plainly in one instance than it does in the other.

Furthermore, it might by a mere rule circumvent the people in a matter of supreme importance at a most critical time—in the selection of a President of this Republic. The only statute ever enacted by Congress, to my knowledge, affecting a particular legislative day pertains to a Wednesday.

The act of February 3, 1792, relating to the election of a President provides that—

> The Congress shall be in session on the second Wednesday in February succeeding every meeting of the (presidential) electors.

On that day they shall count the electoral vote, and if a majority is not apparent for any presidential candidate, the House shall proceed under the Constitution to elect the President.

Under the Calendar Wednesday rule, as interpreted by its sponsors, it would be impossible for the House to perform this duty as prescribed by the Constitution and by the act of Congress already mentioned.

The House may, it is true, enact rules for its own procedure, but they must not violate the Constitution or a law enacted by both Houses and signed by the President.

I hope the Chair will overrule the point of order and that we may proceed at once to a consideration of this veto message.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, before the Chair rules, allow me one word. I wish to say that when the motion was up to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] refers there was some question raised in the House as to whether it really was a constitutional question. Upon the question of overruling the Chair, which has been referred to here, when the rules of the House were changed I did not hesitate to say, when the question was under debate, before the vote was taken, that it was a parliamentary revolution, and I have said so repeatedly since.

Mr. MANN. Not the vote on this proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No.

Mr. MANN. Is this another case of parliamentary revolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all; but when the vote was taken when the Speaker was overruled, and he was taken from the Committee on Rules, gentlemen on the floor of this House know that I stated that in my judgment it was a parliamentary revolution, but that it was a parliamentary revolution of right, because it was the only way that this House could govern itself.

Mr. MANN. But if the gentleman will pardon me, that statement was made with reference to the ruling that a change in the rules was a constitutional question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I say it was.

Mr. MANN. That was not the Calendar Wednesday proposition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not saying it was the Calendar Wednesday proposition. Some gentleman has referred to it here.

Mr. MANN. I referred to it myself. I wanted to know if there were two revolutions. We have had an admission that there has been one.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I think the gentleman from Illinois recollects that I stated it was a revolution at that time.

Mr. SIMS. But the gentleman did not call it so at the time the Norris resolution was up.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I stated on the floor, in debate, in the only speech I made upon the subject, that it was a parliamentary revolution.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman is mistaken as to when the Norris resolution was up. The gentleman from Alabama took the opposite position at that time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee probably knows more about what I said than I do myself.

Mr. SIMS. I think the RECORD will bear me out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. All I have to say in answer now is that there is no question about this; that it is not only a constitutional mandate, but it is a constitutional privilege, and it seems to me beyond any question that no man can contend that a rule of this House can deprive any Member of the House of a privilege he has in the House under the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will bear with me, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to what happened on the 16th of March, 1910. On that day, which was a Wednesday, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] called up House joint resolution 172, a resolution of constitutional privilege. It was a joint resolution affecting the census, and the gentleman from Indiana contended that it was privileged under the Constitution, regardless of the rules of the House. The gentleman from Illinois and myself made the point of order that under the rules of the House it was not in order on Wednesday, unless the House had previously dispensed with business in order under the rule establishing Calendar Wednesday, by a two-thirds vote. Mr. Speaker CANNON held that under the Constitution the matter was privileged, and that the gentleman's motion was in order. I appealed from the decision of the Speaker, and the matter was debated at some length. Finally, the House by a vote of 112 to 163 overturned the ruling of the Speaker and held that the motion was not in order as a matter of constitutional privilege.

The SPEAKER. When was that vote taken?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Upon the 16th day of March, 1910. The following day the gentleman from Indiana called up the same resolution as a matter of privilege under the Constitution, and the House decided it was a privileged matter under the Constitution, and in order upon any day of the week except Calendar Wednesday. The House, under the Constitution, has the right to frame rules for its procedure. Under the rules of the House the question of consideration shall not be put on any question unless it be demanded. If it were not for that rule, under the parliamentary practice under which the House proceeds whenever any motion is submitted to the House, the question as to whether the question shall be considered would first be put by the Speaker, and unless it were determined by a majority vote that the question should be considered it would not be considered by the House at all. This is in effect what is known as a second. So far as Calendar Wednesday is concerned, the House by rule has practically determined, unless by a vote of two-thirds of the Members affirmatively recorded, that no business except business of a designated character shall be in order on that day.

Calendar Wednesday was set aside, after great agitation, to protect the Members of the House in their decision to put aside at least one day in which business on the calendars should be considered without the interference of privileged business in the House. It had been a matter of complaint for years that by manipulation of matters of privilege bills upon the calendars, in which a great majority of the House were interested, could not be considered because matters which were privileged were continually being called up. On Calendar Wednesday, except in the manner provided by the rule upon a motion to dispense with business in order under the rule, no other business can be taken up as being privileged or because the Constitution provides certain matters shall be done; otherwise it is possible to prevent the utilization of Wednesday in the manner provided by the rule and intended by the House. Immediately after the establishment of Calendar Wednesday the House on two occasions decisively determined it would not tolerate any business intervening with the business the House had determined should be considered upon that day. The rule of the House does not say that matters which arise under the Constitution shall not be considered on this day, but the rule in effect says that business of any character except that designated in the rule shall not be considered on that day, unless two-thirds of the House shall so determine. Suppose this motion of the gentleman from Alabama is made, that notwithstanding the objection of the President this bill be passed. Any Member of the House has the right to raise the question of consideration. A majority voting not to consider the bill, whether privileged under the Constitution or not, it could not be submitted to the House. The House has provided that a two-thirds vote shall be a requisite to proceeding to the present consideration of business on Wednesday other than that provided in the rule. Therefore, under this rule if a vetoed bill can be considered or a motion to pass a bill vetoed by the President can be considered, or any other matter of alleged privilege, as an election case involving the right of a Member to his seat, a number of matters might be injected here on Calendar Wednesday on the theory that they were privileged under the Constitution, and in that way Calendar Wednesday would be destroyed. Whether this rule has worked out as many Members hoped, whether it has been as beneficial as desired, there is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that it has relieved the situation in the House, and I believe it unwise to take any position that would permit the injection on any grounds whatever, even under the plea of privilege under the Constitution, of any business except in accordance with the rule.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me a question? Suppose an election of the President of the United States were thrown into this House? Does the gentleman mean to say that in the face of the provision of the Constitution that we shall proceed to an election of a President that the rule of Calendar Wednesday would prevent our taking that action?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I mean to say the House could determine by a majority vote that it would not proceed to do so, regardless of what the Constitution ordained. The House has decided by its rules that on this day certain business shall be in order, and it is in order to consider any other business if, on a motion supported by a two-thirds vote, it is so decided.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman concluded?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply wish to say further, in reply to the contention that it is a matter of privilege under the Constitution that a motion to adjourn is in order. If it were carried, that would prevent consideration. A motion to lay on the table is in order. A motion to refer to a committee is in order, and the House, by its rules, has decided that it may dispose in different ways of these matters. I believe it unwise to make a ruling that would make it possible to encroach upon Calendar Wednesday, except in the manner provided by the rule, and I shall not assent to such action.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Suppose that in this case immediately after the reading of a presidential veto message a motion is made to immediately consider that message, would a motion to postpone consideration be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would, although he has not inquired into the rule on that question.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I have examined the decisions, and there are any number of them to the effect that, the motion having been made to reconsider the vote on a measure vetoed by the President, it was in order to move to postpone to a certain day, or to lay on the table, to commit to a committee, and to adjourn. The mandate of the Constitution that the House should reconsider its vote on a vetoed bill, it has been held, did not deprive the House of the right of determining when and the manner by which it could reconsider. In one instance the matter was postponed until the next day for the veto message to be printed.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Ohio suspend for half a minute? The statement that had been made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is absolutely correct, and there is one further statement that he might have made that goes the whole length, and that is, as a matter of fact, any motion pertains to it, and it can go to the next session.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then, a motion to immediately consider would not forestall any motion to postpone?

The SPEAKER. It does not postpone by any motion——

Mr. CANNON. Or, in other words, the majority of the House can do whatever it chooses and consider whatever it pleases.

Mr. SHERLEY. That does not follow at all. The real question here is not whether the motion to reconsider being up certain other motions may be made touching it, but whether the motion to reconsider is of such a privilege that it would require the Chair to consider it, in spite of the rules of the House to the contrary. That is the question at issue.

The SPEAKER. The truth about what the House did in the spring of 1910 as to the question of constitutional privilege raised on the census bill by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] was stated correctly by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. It is not necessary for us to forget everything we know in order to arrive at a conclusion about this matter. The very same men who are arguing this matter here to-day participated very largely in those debates. The transaction which is referred to, on motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], was just simply part and parcel of a general parliamentary revolution, on which the majority of this House had made up its mind it was going to enter. The present occupant of the chair stated that on the floor of the House in words as plain as the English language could make it—that it was a revolution in which we were engaged and that there was no use to mince words about it. So did the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and others. We never made any pretense that our proceedings were other than revolutionary in a parliamentary sense.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] got at the meat in this matter when he said that acting on a President's veto is one of the most important matters that come before the House.

The Chair is still in doubt whether the Crumpacker resolution is of constitutional privilege or not, but the Chair has no doubt whatever that this proposition now pending to act on this veto message is bottomed on a constitutional mandate. The language of the Constitution is:

> If he approve, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it with his objections to the House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on the Journal and proceed to reconsider it.

What the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] said is absolutely true, that the very same motions which apply to any other matter before the House apply to this; that is, to postpone, and so forth. And the Chair thinks the Chair has demonstrated by his whole course here that he is as jealous of preserving the sanctity of Calendar Wednesday as any other Member of the House. It has been pretty well observed, and, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] said, while it has not accomplished all the good expected and hoped for, it has done a good deal of good.

But to say that a question of great constitutional importance like this shall not be passed on on Calendar Wednesday might mean, in certain contingencies, a very serious injury, or at least a grievous inconvenience to the Government of the United States or to the American people. For example, the law of the land is that on the second Wednesday in February the two Houses of the Congress shall meet in joint session to count the electoral vote for President and Vice President, and the framers of that statute were so careful and so wise as to direct that on that day the Congress must be in session—a most extraordinary and drastic provision; and certainly nobody will seriously contend that notwithstanding the rule establishing Calendar Wednesday the Congress could not proceed to discharge one of its most important duties.

The Chair does not know whether or not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] remembered the case that put the idea in his mind, but he touched on another question of great importance. In the winter of 1876–77 Mr. Speaker Randall, one of the greatest Speakers that ever occupied the chair, overruled point after point that was justified to be made by the rules of the House, and forced to a conclusion the election of a President of the United States as being a matter of the supremest importance; and the passions of that day having subsided, history has vindicated him for what at the time was denounced as being a high-handed proceeding and a bold usurpation of power.

The Chair is of opinion that action on this veto is by a constitutional mandate, and that it has precedence of the business of Calendar Wednesday. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, those who were revolutionists three years ago seem to be reactionaries now, and in order to show that I shall appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to lay the appeal on the table. The question is on agreeing to that motion. Those in favor of tabling the appeal will vote "aye"; those opposed will vote "no."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of tabling the appeal will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 240, nays 10, answered "present" 7, not voting 132, as follows:

Ending August 28:

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, not hearing clearly, I think I answered "yea" when the name of Mr. BARCHFELD was called. Later, when my name was called, I failed to hear it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MONDELL, and he voted "yea."

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BARCHFELD, here?

Mr. MONDELL. I think so. I heard the last syllable of the name, and, not knowing what stage of the roll call had been reached, I mistook it for my name.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will strike off Mr. BARCHFELD'S vote.

On this question the yeas are 240, the nays are 10, present 7. The decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the House, and the question is——

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a matter of privilege. On the 30th of July an election was held in the first district of Vermont, to elect a Member of the House to succeed Mr. David J. Foster, deceased.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order, that there is a question pending before the House, which the Speaker was about to state, and that it is of the highest privilege.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can object to this. I am about to make a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not understand that. I thought the gentleman was going to submit a privileged motion.

Mr. MANN. No. At the election held in the first district of Vermont Mr. FRANK L. GREENE was elected. While the certificate has not been received here, there is no contest over the election, and in accordance with numerous precedents in the House I ask unanimous consent that the Member elect, Mr. GREENE, may now take the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] states that the late Mr. Foster's successor was elected on a certain day, and that while the certificate has not arrived there is no dispute about the fact, and he asks that the Member elect be sworn in. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont presented himself at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

VETO MESSAGE—THE IRON AND STEEL SCHEDULE.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, upon reconsideration, agree to pass the iron and steel bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to address the House for a short time, and will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] how much time he desires to occupy in debate on this question?

Mr. PAYNE. I think I am ready for a vote now. How much time does the gentleman propose to use?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am prepared to suggest that we divide an hour between us.

Mr. PAYNE. All right.

The SPEAKER. What is the agreement as to time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this motion be confined to one hour, at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered, one half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from New York, the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the debate on this veto be confined to one hour, half of it to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], and that at the end of the hour the previous question be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, pending this question, I ask to bring up a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The matter that is up now is a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. LEVY. Pending this, may I ask a question?

The SPEAKER. The question that is up now is a question of the highest privilege, and you can not have two questions of privilege up at once.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States has determined to prevent if possible the Congress from legislating in reference to tariff bills. Again he has returned, with his veto, a bill passed by both Houses of Congress revising downward the duties on metals. There is a remarkable thing about this bill that the country should know. This bill has passed a Democratic House, receiving not only Republican votes in this House, but in the Senate, where a majority of the Members, when elected, held allegiance to the Republican Party. This bill passed with only two slight amendments—one reducing the duty on pig iron and allied products from 8 to 6 per cent, while the other reduces the duty on the ferroalloys from 15 to 10 per cent. I therefore judge that the controlling majorities in the two branches of the Congress, many of them belonging to different political parties, were in unison as to the wisdom of this legislation.

It is unusual that a bill amending an entire tariff schedule can pass the two Houses without material amendments; this bill has been practically approved by both Houses with only two small and unimportant amendments, and those amendments are not cited among the objections the President of the United States brings against this bill.

In both of the veto messages the President has recently sent to the Congress he has said that the reports fail to show that an investigation had been made with reference to particular items.

Mr. Speaker, the President did not direct his Tariff Board to investigate the iron and steel schedule. That was a question for him to determine. No fault rests upon us. But the fact is—although he says nothing about it in this message—he instructed the Bureau of Corporations to make a full and complete investigation of the iron and steel schedule, and in his veto message of the cotton schedule of 1911, to which bill was attached by the Senate a metal-revision amendment, he stated that the Bureau of Corporations was engaged in an investigation of the iron and steel industry, and that the Congress should wait until it had received that report.

Before this bill was passed by this House the report of the Bureau of Corporations on this particular schedule was before the Ways and Means Committee. That report is the rsult of an investigation ordered by the Executive, and an investigation available to the President, if he desired to use it.

He had more. He had the investigation of the Bureau of Corporations, a voluminous report, printed in two volumes, going into details in respect to all these questions. He also had reports from the Immigration Commission in reference to the questions of labor involved, as well as reports from the Bureau of Labor. In addition to all this, when this bill reached his hands he had the thorough and complete report of the committee appointed by this House to investigate the so-called Steel Trust, going largely into the details of this question; an investigation he was willing to accept when he ordered his Attorney General to file proceedings against the United States Steel Corporation. Yet he wishes to repudiate the legislation of this Congress with respect to the metal schedule, because, as he says, there had been no investigation. What of the investigation when he signed the Payne-Aldrich bill? He had all the information before him when this bill was presented to him that he possessed when he signed that bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But he is not willing to accept all or any of these investigations when the Congress of the United States asked him to revise the iron and steel schedule downward in the interest of the people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He says there were no public hearings; none were asked for on this schedule. There were ample public hearings in connection with the Payne bill in 1909; they were all printed and are of record. The facts brought out at that time apply as well to-day as they did three years ago when he signed the Payne bill.

You can come to but one conclusion in reference to these vetoes, which is that the President has determined that no one shall revise the tariff except the "standpat" element of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And unless he can get a bill that is O. K'd by the gentleman from New York and the colleagues of his particular faith, the President will not let us legislate on the subject if he can help it.

He says in his message:

> A bill for the complete revision of this schedule was presented to me a year ago in the extra session of this Congress. Many increases and decreases of rates are now made from those in the former measure. Changes are not explained, indicating hasty preparation of both.

Mr. Speaker, a statement of that kind in an important public document is not only lamentable but pitiable. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He vetoes a public measure because in the lapse of a year's time the Congress had made some changes in the rates in a bill, which he said himself ought not to be signed, and because we changed the rates and have not communicated to him our reasons for the change of rates in the two bills it, forsooth, must receive his veto. Certainly, upon due reflection, the President would not send to the Congress of the United States that statement as a reason for defeating the will of the American people as expressed by their representatives in the Congress of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It seems, though, that he is unable to wander far afield from his home State. On yesterday we had a message before this Congress vetoing a revision of the woolen schedule, and, forsooth, the principal question that was involved and stressed in that message was the amount of duty that should be levied to protect sheep raising in Ohio. In the message which the President sends to-day he names among his objections the fact that certain items are, as he thinks, improperly placed on the free list; among these items are machine tools, which are largely made in the State of Ohio.

The President of the United States should realize that in writing these great legislative measures, these revenue measures, we can not legislate for any one State; the domain of our legislation must reach to the farthest walls of the Republic.

The following table presents an analysis of important items of the free list of the metal bill (H. R. 18642), and fully explains the action of the Ways and Means Committee and of the House in recommending the removal of these articles from the dutiable to the free list. The items shown are barbed fence wire, nails, tacks, cash registers, machine tools, printing presses, typewriters, sewing machines, and so forth. This country is as to these goods preeminently an exporting country, and we can not under any circumstances expect to materially increase imports and secure from these articles any considerable amount of duties. Our domestic production of these goods amounts to more than $182,000,000 annually; our exports to nearly $33,000,000; our domestic consumption to about $152,000,000, while our imports are less than $300,000, and the duties in 1911 were less than $85,000.

Production, imports, exports, and consumption for 1910 and duties for 1911 of the leading articles of the free list of the metal bill (H. R. 18642).

Articles.	Production.	Imports.	Exports.	Consumption.	Duties (1911).
Barbed fence wire, etc...	$13,882,000	$605	[3]$4,322,311	$9,560,294	$1.00

[1] Census classification for production is: Cash registers and calculating machines.
[2] Variously estimated at from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000.
[3] Classification under which machine tools are exported is: Metal-working machinery (including metal-working machine tools). Under this classification the exports in 1911 were $9,627,000. Hence estimate of $5,000,000 seems conservative.

The items that are on the free list in this bill which the President complains of consist of articles like barbed fence wire, which we are exporting, not importing. Under the present act in 1911 the amount of barbed wire imported into the United States amounted to 160 pounds, valued at $4, producing the munificent revenue to the Government of $1. And yet the President is fearful that this industry may be overslaughed and that the protection to prevent 160 pounds of barbed wire being imported into the United States may be jeopardized by this bill, notwithstanding the fact that he has recently fined the same makers of barbed wire for entering into a trust combination for the violation of the Sherman antitrust law. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

In the case of cash registers, of which we have a monopoly under the patent laws, there are no importations. Printing presses we ship to the farthermost parts of the world. Typewriters we furnish to the people of all the countries of the world. Sewing machines we sell in the Orient for a third of the amount they are sold to the American consumer. Machine tools, made in Cincinnati, Ohio, we are selling in competition with the greatest maker of machine tools in the world.

As shown in the above table, there were about $50,000,000 of machine tools made in the United States in 1910, and the imports of machine tools for 1910 amounted to $177,000. Fifty million dollars worth manufactured and $177,000 worth imported, not one-half of 1 per cent. In the fiscal year of 1912 we exported $12,000,000 worth of machine tools, or $1,000,000 worth a month, and imported less than $200,000 worth.

Of the $12,000,000 worth of machine tools exported last year to the markets of the world, a large proportion of them went into the markets of Germany in competition with the principal manufacturers of machine tools outside of the United States. More than that, I understand that these same manufacturers of machine tools give to the purchasers of such tools in Germany a discount of 5 per cent more than they give the American consumer.

The freight rate and the insurance rate to get into that market must amount to at least 5 per cent, so as a matter of fact we ship machine tools from the United States to Germany, discount and pay tariff taxes to the amount of not less than 10 per cent of the value of the product, and compete with them in their home market. Is there any reason why we should maintain a prohibitive duty for that industry, which brings to the Government of the United States practically no revenue?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. I desire to suggest to the gentleman at this point that the Clariton Steel Co., one of the greatest makers of tool steel in the world, is in a combination with the United States Steel Corporation by which they agree not to compete with each other, and that the whole transaction is set up in the petition filed by the Department of Justice.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire gentlemen to mark this before they vote to give the relief the people demand. The Government of the United States some years ago sent experts abroad to investigate the iron and steel business and the machine industry. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is familiar with the report of Mr. Pepper and other experts on this subject. The President says that he is not informed. He ignores the information that his own experts brought to the Ways and Means Committee. He does not say one word about that in his veto message, but the gentleman from New York will not deny that the report of these experts showed that machine tools made by American manufacturers were being exported in large quantities and sold in every country of Europe. They were found to be sold not only in every European country, but in equal competition with foreign manufacturers, where in countries like Germany the American machine tool had to pay an adverse tariff rate before it was introduced in the competitive market. The same thing is true of many other items in this bill.

The American manufacturer of iron and steel commodities to-day is exporting in large quantities his products into the Canadian market and paying an adverse tariff of a third more than his British competitors, and yet the President says that we will jeopardize this industry and that we will injure American labor if this bill be passed. Does it lie in his mouth to say that we will jeopardize the interests of American labor when this Congress has passed more legislation in the interest of that labor than any other Congress in the history of this Government? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Does it lie in his mouth to say that the American laborer engaged in the iron and steel industry has ever received a dollar's advance in his wage by reason of this protective tariff? You know and I know that the iron and steel industry in many of its branches pays a remunerative wage, but we all know that this is largely due to the compact labor organizations which maintain these rates of wages. In those branches of the iron and steel industry where there is no labor organization, but little better wages are paid to the laborers here than in the markets of Europe.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. JACKSON. In this connection I would like to have the gentleman's judgment, because I know it is good, both as to details of iron manufacture and the question of tariff. Will the gentleman now give us his judgment as to whether this bill carries sufficient duties to equal the difference in the cost of labor at home and abroad? I have not heard all that the gentleman has said and perhaps he has already answered that question.
